"I have known the above named Maria Ricker from her childhood, and her statement is strictly true.

ANDREW J. MESERVE,
Overseer of the Portsmouth Manufacturing Co."

CAPT. JOEL PRATT, of the ship Marion, writes from Boston, 20th April, 1854:

"Your Pills have cured me from a bilious attack which arose from derangement of the Liver, which had become very serious. I had failed of any relief by my Physician, and from every remedy I could try; but a few doses of your Pills have completely restored me to health. I have given them to my children for worms, with the best effects. They were promptly cured. I recommended them to a friend for costiveness, which had troubled him for months; he told me in a few days they had cured him. You make the best medicine in the world; and I am free to say so."

Read this from the distinguished Solicitor of the Supreme Court, whose brilliant abilities have made him well known, not only in this but the neighboring States.

"New Orleans, 5th April, 1854.

"Sir: I have great satisfaction in assuring you that myself and family have been very much benefited by your medicines. My wife was cured, two years since, of a severe and dangerous cough, by your CHERRY PECTORAL, and since then has enjoyed perfect health. My children have several times been cured from attacks of the Influenza and Croup by it. It is an invaluable remedy for these complaints. Your CATHARTIC PILLS have entirely cured me from a dyspepsia and costiveness, which has grown upon me for some years,—indeed, this cure is much more important, from the fact that I had failed to get relief from the best Physicians which this section of the country affords, and from any of the numerous remedies I had taken.

"You seem to us, Doctor, like a providential blessing to our family, and you may well suppose we are not unmindful of it. Yours respectfully,

LEAVITT THAXTER."

"Senate Chamber, Ohio, April 5th, 1854.

"DR. J. C. AYER—Honored Sir: I have made a thorough trial of the CATHARTIC PILLS, left me by your agent, and have been cured by them of the dreadful Rheumatism under which he found me suffering. The first dose relieved me, and a few subsequent doses have entirely removed the disease. I feel in better health now than for some years before, which I attribute entirely to the effects of your CATHARTIC PILLS. Yours with great respect,

LUCIUS B. METCALF."

The above are all from persons who are publicly known where they reside, and who would not make these statements without a thorough conviction that they were true.

Poetry.

CHEER, BOYS, CHEER.

Cheer, boys, cheer, no more of idle sorrow,
Courage, true hearts shall bears us on our way,
Hope points before, and shows the bright to-morrow;
Let us forget the darkness of to-day.
So fare well, England, much as we may love thee,
We'll dry the tears, that we have shed before,
Why should we weep to sail in search of fortune,
Farewell England, farewell for evermore.
Chorus.
Cheer, boys, cheer, for country, mother country,
Cheer, boys, cheer, the willing strong right hand;
Cheer, boys, cheer, there's wealth for honest labor,
Cheer, boys, cheer, for the new and happy land.

Cheer, boys, cheer, the steady breeze is blowing,
To float us freely o'er the ocean's breast,
The world shall follow in the track we're going;
The star of Empire glitters in the West,
Where we had toil, and little to reward it,
But there shall plenty smile upon our pain,
And our's shall be the prairie and the forest,
And boundless meadows ripe with golden grain.
Cheer, boys, cheer, &c.

The Arab and his Bride.

FROM THE FRENCH OF JULES GERARD.

The Arabs proceeded to bring me mats and cushions, and arranged for me by starlight a camp bed. After this came a copious supper. A general conversation then took place, in which every one vied with his neighbor in relating all sorts of adventures, more or less tragical, about the lions of the country. One of these I shall never forget. It was the story of an Arab, and his young bride.

Among the Arabs, when a man marries, he invites a number of people, who go and fetch the bride at her parent's house to bring her to her new dwelling, a ceremony which is performed in a palanquin, numberless shots being at the same time fired on the road.

Every marriage, however, is not alike.—If some are accompanied by a numerous retinue—if sometimes the happy couple number amongst their guests many a rich and handsome horseman—at other times, as with us, more than one bridegroom has not enough to pay the fiddlers who escort him. Such being the case with Smail who had paid down the day before his very last shilling for his bride's marriage-portion, he assembled only his nearest relatives, and proceeded with them on foot to the abode of his future father-in-law.

Having regaled themselves plentifully and the marriage being concluded, they fired off some cartridges by way of salute, taking care to keep a few for the journey back.—In the evening they all parted, wishing each other good fortune and happiness. The bridegroom's douar was but a league distant; the moon shone beautifully bright; the bride's escort numbered nine guns; what was to be feared on the way? But it is not unfrequently at the very moment one expects him the least, that an intruder will present himself.

Smail was walking in front, beside his bride, to whom he was speaking, in a soft, low voice, about the happiness which awaited them under his tent. The friends of the husband were following discreetly some paces behind, firing at times a shot in the air, and the young wife seemed quite gratified with this little offering of powder burnt in her honor. Everything in short, went on in the most satisfactory manner.

But, all of a sudden, an enormous lion was seen stretched across the very path these young folks were pursuing!

They were half way between the two douars, and it was fully as dangerous to proceed forward as to draw back. What was to be done?

The opportunity which presented itself to the bridegroom of winning forever his wife's affections by a noble act of devotedness was too good to be lost. Balls were accordingly rammed down the barrel of every gun, the bride was placed in the centre of a sort of square formed by the assistants, and the escort marched bravely forward, headed by Smail. Already they had advanced to within thirty yards from the lion, who never moved.

Smail now ordered his friends to stop, and saying to his young wife, "see if you have married a man," walked straight up to the lion, and commanded him to clear the way.

At twenty paces, the lion, until then crouching and motionless, raised his monstrous head, and was evidently preparing for a spring. Smail, regardless of his wife's screams, and the entreaties of his relatives, who called to him to retreat, put one knee to the ground, levelled the barrel of his gun toward the animal, took a steady aim and fired. In an instant the wounded and furious animal bounded forward on the unfortunate Smail, knocked him to the ground, and tore him to shreds in a twinkling of an eye, then rushed madly toward the square, in the centre of which stood the wretched bride.

"Let no one fire," cried Smail's father, "until he touches the barrels of our guns."

But where is the man sufficiently self-possessed to await without flinching that hurricane called a lion, as he rushes on towards his prey with immense bounds, with mane floating in the wind, expanded jaws, and eyes inflamed with fury?

The whole party now fired at once, without heeding in what direction their balls went, and the lion dashed on the square, which he quickly overthrew, smashing the bones and tearing the flesh of all whom he found before him. Some of the men had managed to escape, dragging after them with much difficulty the poor bride, almost dead by this time with fright, but they were quickly followed by their insatiable enemy, and torn to pieces; one only, more fortunate than the rest having contrived to reach the foot of a steep rock, upon which, thanks to his efforts, the woman found a refuge.

He had already climbed the rock some little way, when the lion again advanced, if possible still more furious, and at one spring caught the right leg of the man, and dragged him down with him to the ground; while the unhappy bride, crawling with hands and feet to the summit of the rock, was doomed to witness from her inaccessible retreat the hideous spectacle of the death agony of the last of her defenders.

After two or three useless attempts, the lion, finding he could not get at the woman, returned to the body of the last victim, and began tearing it in bits, as if to revenge himself for the loss of the full living prey which was thus eluding his grasp.

The remainder of the night passed away without any new incident. As soon as the day began to dawn, the lion left the foot of the rock, and retired slowly toward the mountain; but every step very slowly, and did not finally abandon his post without stopping more than once on his road, and throwing back a wistful glance on the prey he was leaving behind.

A short time after the animal's departure, a troop of horsemen came across the plain, and on Smail's widow making signals of distress with her veil, for she was now without strength or voice, they galloped toward her, and took her back to her father. The poor thing expired, however, on the following day.

Suggested Visit of Her Majesty.

The following excellent article from the Toronto Colonist, will be read with interest by all our readers. The rebuke which the writer, in the New York Herald receives, will no doubt be remembered by him till his death:

The New York Herald alludes to the Hon. J. H. Cameron's proposal in the House of Assembly, to invite her Majesty, Queen Victoria, to visit her Canadian dominions. The Herald unjustly libels our beautiful climate and country, by representing the former as harsh and ungenial, and the latter as destitute of scenic beauty. But fortunately the censures of the Herald are of so sweeping a nature that their lack of veracity is quite apparent. The writer either wilfully states what he knows to be contrary to facts, or else he is wholly ignorant of his object; and if the latter is the case, a visit to Canada would add considerable to his own stock of information. It is difficult to conceive what motive actuates the Herald in his continued desire to disparage this country. If he has had any experience of it at all, he must be aware that its climate is in every sense, far superior to that of his boasted Empire State of New York. All candid United States travellers readily admit that Upper Canada is in every respect superior to that state and they return home from this country most favorably impressed with its appearance and climate. It is palpable that Canada is making far more rapid advances in wealth and prosperity than any portion of the United States. Some of our readers will be rather amused at the statement of the Herald, that in June our winter has not passed away. We are sorry to see our contemporary pay so little respect to truth.—According to the Herald, if the Queen visited Canada "she would have to time her visit to a week; in June winter has not passed away; in August a torrid heat scorches the face of nature; and by the close of September a cold Autumn has set in." But in his haste to magnify the evils of our climate the sapient Herald appears to forget that we have such a month as July; and from May until October, with sometimes until November, no country in the world, generally speaking, can boast of a more favourable climate than this country. But besides the climate, the Herald thinks there are other evils to be overcome, such as shipwrecks in the St. Lawrence, and perhaps he might add the chance of falling into the power of the Sea Serpent. But supposing all these awful difficulties to be surmounted, the Herald asks—"What after all is there to be seen in Canada except Quebec and the Thousand Islands."—The Yankees would wish to ignore the fact, that Canada can boast of the stupendous Falls of Niagara—the greatest natural wonder in the world. And that in addition to the mighty cataract, we can show the most splendid Lakes and majestic Rivers—and besides, we have some tolerable cities; and large tracts of country laid out in farms superior to any in the States, which only a few years ago were the hunting grounds of the Indians, since reclaimed from the forest, as it were by the power of some eastern magician. Are not such things worth seeing, and what is there in the United States superior to them? To be sure they have things to show that we have not.—They can show thousands of miserable trembling human beings working in the hot sun under a tyranical lash. They can show the slave mart where poor humanity is bought and sold like sheep in the market place. They can show children torn by force from their parents. They can show old and young covered with scars and stripes from the slave driver's whip. They can show the bloodhound in pursuit of the poor panting fugitive, endeavoring to escape to liberty. They can show legislators that shoot down an inoffensive servant for hesitating to obey an unreasonable order. In such things they have the advantage of us, but in nothing else—in nothing else that is useful and good.

But the Herald is anxious that the Queen should visit the United States. We are pleased at such an expression of good will, and pleased also at the enthusiastic reception promised to our beloved Sovereign. We believe she would be well received in the United States. We believe many of our Republican friends heartily respect her Majesty. The greatest annoyance that Her Majesty would be likely to suffer, in the United States, would be from extraordinary attentions that would be paid to her, which would scarcely be of a character that a noble lady of retired habits, would be likely to appreciate, much less enjoy.

The United States and France.

The press and government of the United States are knocking up quite a "bobbery" over what they regarded as an insult to the Commissioners sent to the Crimea. It seems that the Commissioners fared badly at the hands of the French, and likewise the Russians, but more particularly the former. The treatment accorded them is regarded as a national insult, and we suppose if the French refuses payment, it will (?) will be a national sult. So we go. The Washington correspondent of the New York Times thus describes the treatment the Commissioners received:

The statement that the United States Military Commission, which recently returned from Europe, was treated with mark ed incivility and rudeness by the French Government officials is fully confirmed.—The Commission, it will be remembered was composed of Majors Delafield and Mordecai, and Colonel McClellan, all officers of the United States army, worthy and accomplished gentlemen, who were sent abroad by the President to acquire information of value to the military service of the United States, Whenever they met British officers, the Commission were received with great cordiality and kindness. While in the Crimea they were handsomely received by the British commanders, but Pelissier refused them an audience.

On their return by the way of Paris, they called upon Marshal Vaillant, who met them with a "Well, what do you want?" The answer was, "We have called according to the arrangement made when we were last in Paris, to get some books then promised us." Vaillant rejoined, in substance, and with a manner as offensive as his words, "We have nothing to give!" There are misunderstandings between our Government, and our relations are such as not to justify any such civilities!" Major Mordecai, who was spokesman of the party, wisely forebore to retort the insolence; and, as they bid the Marshal farewell, he expressed the hope that they might meet again soon where their salute would be the hostile cannon.

Take your Nose out of my Light.

A young woman, the carnation tinge of whose countenance indicated that she was no disciple of Father Matthew, and who rejoiced in the euphonious cognomen of Matilda Evelina Ramsay, was charged with having assaulted the person, and "flattered" the bonnet of a pretty, mild-looking, young woman named Sarah Chapman, in Oxford-street, and that as she was at the door of the house in which she lodges, in Skeffington-place, on Friday evening, just going out, the prisoner came up to her, asked her a number of questions about somebody she called "Tom," and on her (witness) denying that she knew anything about such a person, she finally tore the bonnet off her head.—The magistrate asked the prisoner what she had to say in reply to the charge?—Miss Ramsay, who appeared to be "boiling over with passion, and who seemed to be labouring under the unskilled influence of liquor, declared that what the complainant had stated was all "bosh," that she knew her "Tom" well, and had taken him away from her, and that she was a most artful hussy, and was alway running after other girl's sweethearts, she was a regular decoy-duck. "Take your nose out of my light, young man," said she, 'and let me see his worship.' Here Miss Ramsay (amid roars of laughter) made a blow at Ansted's (the gaoler) nose, that functionary standing, as she thought, too much between her and the bench.—Ansted, who, bye the bye, has by no means a "Shawkenbergian proboscis," hastily retreated. Miss Ramsay continued a rambling rigmarole about love and pork sausages, jealousy and green gooseberries, pink ribands and young turnips, kid gloves and pea soup, and ultimately worked herself up to such a pitch that she became quite unintelligible. She was fined 40s., or fourteen days' imprisonment. Miss Matilda Evelina Ramsay, who was in the greatest state of excitement, was safely locked up by her friend Ansted, who took precious good care to keep her at arm's length.—English paper.

Lockjaw.

The following, contributed to the Baltimore Sun, we publish for the benefit of our readers: I have noticed lately, several deaths by lockjaw, and for the information of all, will give a certain remedy. When any one runs a nail or any sharp iron in any part of the body, take a common smoke-pipe, fill it with tobacco, light it well, then take a cloth or silk handkerchief, place it over the bowl of the pipe, and blow the smoke thro' the stem into the wound; two or three pipes full will be sufficient to set the wound discharging. I have tried it on myself, and five others, and found it gave immediate relief. If the wound has been some day standing, it will open again if the tobacco is good. Try it, any one who may chance to get such a wound.

Miscellany.

STILL MISSING.—We are sorry to state that no fully reliable account has been received of the fate of Messrs. Peoples and Dyke who were driven out on the Lake during the gale on Saturday. It appears that Mr. Peoples was in a small skiff alone, and having ventured out too far was unable to return, when Mr. Dyke pushed out to his assistance. Both boats were soon a distance from the shore, and a person who was on the island at the time, says he saw both boats capsize, and the unfortunate gentlemen sink. By some it is supposed, that from the distance they were then from the shore, and evening coming on, they were not so over what they regarded as an insult to the over that they could be plainly witnessed. However, whatever the facts are, unfortunately, no trace of them or the boats has been discovered. Mr. Dykes was a salesman in Mr. William Polley's establishment, King Street, and was much respected by his employer, and loves a wife and child. Mr. Peoples had a grocery store in Yonge street, and was unmarried.—Globe.

THE DEATH WALTZ.—A French paper relates a strange and startling incident. At a ball lately given at Port Louis, near Lorient, while a young lady was waltzing, she felt the hand by which she was supported become stone cold, and on looking into the face of her partner, found his features to be deadly pale and horribly contracted. She fainted at the sight, and fell to the ground, whilst the cavalier dropped at her side. The lady was taken up and recovered, but the life of the gentleman was extinct. She maintains that he was dead several seconds before she knew it, and that she made one turn round the room with him after he was a corpse.

BUTTER.—A New York Butter dealer, in a communication to the N. Y. Journal of Commerce, says:

Every speculation in the article for the last 20 years has resulted disastrously to its authors and the farmers have reaped the benefit. It is estimated by competent authority, that ever $300,000 have been lost the past winter by operators here and in the country. There is not a single instance to the writer, of a butter buyer in the country ever having made a fortune at the business, there are numerous instances of a fortune being lost. "Old" butter can be bought to-day for 14 cents, which cost 21 cents, at the farmer's door last November.

A gentleman who was executed in the reign of George III. for forgery, carried his politeness to such an extent, that he apologised to the hangman for being the cause of bringing him from his bed so early on such a damp morning.

PICKINGS UP.—At a party lately, a lady treated her company with stewed pears.—A gentleman at the table put one as he supposed into his mouth and attempted to pull out the stem; after pulling for sometime he was obliged to give it up, and putting it on his plate discovered that he had been tugging away at a mouse, which had probably fallen into the lady's preserve jar.—With the utmost coolness he enquired of the lady if she had a cat in the house.

'Yes, sir; why?'

'Well, I would like to have her take this mouse away—that's all.'

Mr. Buchanan, in a speech at Philadelphia, said of the people of England:

They are tolerant of argument; they meet you and encounter you, and right or wrong, they never become offended, as no enlightened people ever will, with free and honest expression of a bold opinion.

In portions of this country, 'the expression of a bold opinion' subjects its utterer to 'tar and feathers.'

MYSTERIOUS CASE.—The Simcoe Standard, of 11th ult., say: "We have just been informed that a young woman the daughter of a farmer, of Townsend, died a few days since under painful circumstances. She had been engaged at service with a party at Oakland, and the day before her death she confessed she had been seduced by the husband of her mistress, at whose instance she swallowed a large dose of laudanum, and after that a quantity of vitriol, from the effects of which she died.

IMPORTANT DECREE.—The Emperor has just published a decree, which orders that whenever the imperial baby, the young Napoleon the Fourth, passes a company on parade a barrack, a military post, or an esplanade, the soldiers must present arms, the drums must roll and the horns toot, the same as for his Majesty himself! But the question is how are the soldiers to know when they are in the august presence of his Juvenile Majesty?—Planet.

MORE ROBBERIES.—The Dundas Warder states that on Saturday evening last, the steamer "Wentworth" was robbed of nearly everything portable, and that the garden of Thos. H. MacKenzie, was invaded by a gang of ruffians; but who did not succeed in getting into the house. Perhaps they are the same gang who were last week prowling about here.

It becomes our painful duty to record the death of two young men by drowning, Abraham Boylen, Son of William Boylen Esq., Reeve of Dawn, and McColl, about the age of 18 years. They had been engaged in washing sheep, on saturday last, in the River Sydenham, near Dawn Mills.—After they had finished their work, they commenced playing in the river, when they become exhausted and sunk. The boys were both recovered, but not until life was extinct.—Planet.

"Mrs. Briggs," said a neighbour, who stepped into the house of the former, just as she was in the act of seating herself at the dinner table, "have you heard of the dreadful accident?" "Why, no—what is it?" "Mr. Briggs has fallen from his waggon and is killed." "Is it possible! Well, just wait until I finish my dinner, and then you will hear crying!"

THE PRINCESS ROYAL.—A correspondent of the Aberdeen Free Press thus describes the Princess Royal, as seen at the recent drawing-room at St. James's:—"With the remembrance, as if it had announced her birth, I was scarcely prepared to behold her a fine grown woman, taller by a couple of inches than her mother, and carrying her self with the ease and grace of womanhood. It is no stretch of loyalty or courtesy to call the Princess Royal pretty. She is perfectly lovely. The regularity of her features is perfect. Her eyes are large, and full of intelligence, imparting to her face that sort of merry aspect which indicates good humour. The nose and mouth are delicately and exquisitely formed, the latter giving the effect of great sweetness. The Princess is more like her father than her mother. She is like the Queen in nothing but the nose. In all other respects she is a female image of her father. I should add, as interesting to your lady readers that she wears her hair slightly off her forehead; not pushed back in the Eugenie fashion, but brushed slightly diagonally from the temples and raised at the sides above the ear in bandeaus (really the ladies must excuse me if I am talking nonsense, for I have not given that hostage to fortune which would enable me to speak ex cathedra.) Well, at any rate, the Princess is fair enough, and lovely enough to be the heroine of a fairy tale, and the Prince Frederick should consider himself a lucky fellow."

THE USE OF OIL.—In this country, children are "perpetually watered," as though they were amphibious animals. In the East Indies, children are rarely washed with water; but they are oiled every day. A child's head can be kept much cleaner if oiled, that without it, and many young persons with hectic cheeks would probably never know the last days of consumption, if their parents would insist on having the chests, back and limbs anointed with sweet oil two or three times a week. The Hebrew physicians seem to have considered oil as more efficacious than any other remedy.—The sick were always anointed with oil, as the most wonderful means that was known of checking disease.—Christian Freeman.

THE SARDINIANS AND THEIR WARLIKE TROPHIES.—Independently of the 200 pieces of artillery, bestowed by the English Government on the Sardinian army, it had courteously presented it with the English batteries which the Sardinian artillerymen manned at the battle of the Tchernaya. The present offered by a friendly nation must have been joyfully received by our army.—Thousguns, as well as the 200 others and different articles, assigned to the Sardinians as their portion of the conquered material, which are now being embarked for Piedmont, will prove a valuable token of the honourable participation of our soldiers in that campaign.—Piedmontese Gazette.

A WILL IN RHYME.—A Chancery Lane lawyer died lately in London, and the following was actually probated as his last will and testament:

"As to all my earthly good, now and to be in store,
I give them to my beloved wife and sons forevermore;
I give all freely—I no limit fix;
This is my will, and she's executrix."

"How do you like the character of St. Paul?" asked a parson of his landlady one day, during a conversation about the old saints and the apostles. "Ah, he was a good clever old soul, I know—for he once said, you know, that we must eat what is set before us, and ask no questions for conscience sake. I always thought I should like him for a boarder."—Post.

Johnny does you love me? 'well Susy, I does.' 'How do you know you love me?' 'I kase, Susy, whenever I looks at you, my heart jumps and knocks 'agin my stomach so hard that I don't have any appetite for a week afterwards."

An afflicted husband was returning from the funeral of his wife, when a friend asked him how he was. "Well," said he, pathetically, 'I think I feel better for that little while.'

BORROWING.—If you want to borrow money and have no security, go to your self; for men are like green peas—the younger they are, the easier they will shell out.

Militia General Orders.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Toronto, May 16, 1856.

A portion of the Arms and Accoutrements for the armament and equipment of the active Militia Force of the Province having arrived—

His Excellency the Governor General and Commander-in-chief is pleased to direct that the adjutant General shall cause such Troops and Companies to be armed in the first instance as are already uniformed, and whose organization is sufficiently advanced.

The Captains in command of the several Troops and Companies, &c, in the Province, are directed to take the utmost care of these Arms, &c., which are of the very best description, and when not in use by the men, to keep them in store, for which purpose, at places where there are no public Armories, an annual allowance is granted by the 29th Clause of the Militia Act.

Each Volunteer in a Rifle Company will receive a rifle musket with rammer, bayonet and bayonet scabbard complete; a set of rifle accoutrements consisting of belt, a four round pouch, pouch belt, waist belt and gun sling, one muzzle stopper, one nipple wrench.

Each Cavalry Volunteer will receive one cavalry sword, with scabbard complete, one six shooting Colt's pistol, one sword belt, one sword knot, one cartouche box and belt, one holster, one cleaning rod, one nipple wrench.

Each Volunteer in a Foot Company of Artillery will receive one rifled Artillery Carbine with rammer, sword bayonet and steel scabbard complete, one twenty round pouch with waist belt.

The Arms for the several Companies will be marked before the issue, under the superintendence of the Inspecting Field Officer, on the butts of the Rifles, Carabines and Pistols.

Those in Lower Canada, with the letters L. C.; those in Upper Canada, with the letters U. C. over the letter of the Company, and the Company first authorized in General Orders, in each section of the Province, to be marked with the letter A, the next with the letter B, and so on; the arms to be numbered from one consecutively, according to the number of Volunteers in each Company.

The following directions for loading and cleaning Colt's pistols, are published for the information of Officers and Men in the Volunteer Militia Force of Cavalry.

Directions for Loading.

First explode a Cap on each nipple to clear them from oil or dust, then draw back the hammer to the half notch, which allows the cylinder to be rotated; a charge of powder is then placed in each chamber, and the balls, without wadding or patch, are put one at a time upon the mouths of the chambers, turned under the rammer, and forced down with a lever below the mouth of the chamber. This is repeated until all the chambers are loaded. Percussion caps are then placed on the nipples, when, by drawing back the hammer to the full catch, the arm is in condition for discharge by pulling the trigger; a repetition of the same motion produces the like results.

To carry the arms safely, when loaded, the hammer should be let down on one of the pins between the nipple, on the end of the cylinder.

The arms should be thoroughly cleaned and oiled after firing, particularly the base pin on which the cylinder turns. Soft lead must be used for the balls, they should be forced below the surface of the cylinder so that they cannot hinder its rotation.

N. B.—It will be safe to use all the powder the chambers will hold, leaving room for the ball, whether the powder is strong or weak.

Directions for Cleaning.

You must set the lock at half cock; then drive out the Key that holds the barrel and cylinder to the lock frame—they can be removed; should the barrel stick at the pin, the lever may be used to aid in removing it, by forcing the rammer on the partition between the chambers.

Wash the cylinder and barrel in warm water, dry and oil them thoroughly; oil freely the base pin on which the cylinder revolves.

To take the lock to pieces, clean and oil.

1. Remove the stock, by turning out the bottom and two rear screws that fasten it to the guard and lock frame.

2. Loosen the screw that fastens the main spring to the trigger guard, and turn the spring from under the tumbler of the hammer.

3. Remove the trigger guard by turning out the three screws that fasten it to the lock-frame.

4. Turn out the screw, and remove the double spring that bears upon the trigger and bolt.

5. Turn out the screw pins that hold the trigger and bolt in their places.

6. Turn out the remaining screw side pin and remove the hammer with hand attached, by drawing it downwards out of the lock-frame. Clean all the parts and oil them thoroughly.

To put them together.

Replace the hammer with hand attached, then the bolt, the trigger, the trigger guard, the main spring, and finally the handle; returning each of the screws in their proper places, the arm is again fit for use.

By Command of His Excellency the Governor General and Commander-in-Chief.

DE ROTTENBURG, Colonel,
Adjt. Gen. Militia.

The Standard Bank.

A great deal of surprise has been excited by a very large quantity of Bank notes lately put in circulation in Upper Canada, and bearing the title of the Provincial Bank of Canada. The facts are stated to be these: Some American speculators having bought up a large amount of Lower Canada Loan Fund stocks at a discount of 12½ per cent, deposited them with the Inspector General as security for the issue of an equivalent amount of Bank notes under the Free Banking law. The notes were procured and issued chiefly in Upper Canada, although the Bank purports to be in Stanstead, the people of that Town know nothing either of it or of the parties establishing it. The notes are said to be illegal as the countersign of the Provincial Registrar is lithographed and not written, a proceeding which would allow of any amount of fraud. Moreover some of the notes want the signatures of the proper officers of the bank. Altogether the thing bears a most suspicious look and the public will do well to refuse all the paper of that bank.

The scheme shows conclusively the ease with which parties may take unfair advantage of the Free Banking law. A parcel of New York Brokers or other speculators buy Canadian debentures at a discount, and get them on demand exchanged for bank notes, countersigned by the Provincial officers—This netting a large percentage (in this case 12½ per cent,) and flooding the county with their spurious issue: The free banking law and better be repealed, or else parties should be obliged to deposit double the quantity of debentures that they issue notes, to make the public safe under all circumstances.

We think great carelessness must have existed in the Provincial Registrar's office to allow the lithographing of the signature or to allow of countersigning at all, without the name of the President and cashier being attached to the notes. We fear the parties have got all the notes off their hands so that somebody will have to grin under this sharp Yankee shave.—Mail.

WOMAN MARRIED TO WOMAN.—A most extraordinary case of this kind has lately been much talked of in Quebec. About three weeks ago a person dressed in man's attire was admitted into the Hotel Dieu Hospital, under the name of Benjamin Gros. While there, some symptoms of a disease common to females showed themselves, yet the person was treated as a man, and in spite of medical care, he died in three days. Soon after death the strange discovery was made that the body was that of a woman, and this being established, it was also ascertained that, during her illness, a woman, who declared she was the wife of the deceased had been most attentive to her. Further inquiry led to the information that the deceased was a native of Nova Scotia; had passed as a male since the age of eight years, worked as a ship carpenter in St. Roch's for some time, and during her lifetime wooed and won two girls, each two of her own sex to marriage. The new widow states that she never suspected the fraud, and seemed as much surprised at the singular denouement as the physician who attended her late husband.—Quebec Morning Chronicle.

THE MAPLE LEAF.

SANDWICH, JUNE 6, 1856.

☞ In consequence of the absence of the editor, who has gone to Toronto, to purchase type and other material, our paper appears this week with a smaller amount of editorial matter than usual.

ROBBERY.—About half past one o'clock on Tuesday morning last, a man entered the Hotel kept by Mr. William Mears of this town, went to the bedroom, where Mrs. Mears was in bed, put out a candle that was burning, and stole a Tin Box, containing about $40 in money, a gold pencil case, a note of hand, made by a Mr. Patten, for $30, and several other papers and articles, and made his escape through a window. A man has been arrested upon suspicion, but the examination is not yet complete. No trace of the money or any of the articles has been found.

ANOTHER ROBBERY.—The house of Mr. J. A. Ford, Petite Cote, was entered between twelve and two o'clock on Thursday morning, by cutting the window sash, and the burglars stole a new Black Frock Coat, a Canadian Grey Coat, two Decanters, Cigars, Tobacco, some change in the money drawer, and other articles. No clue to the burglars has yet been found, Mr. Ford offers a reward of $10 for such information as will lead to the conviction of the offender or offenders.

The informations were laid before Thos. Woodbridge, Esq., Reeve, to whom we are indebted for the above.

CORONER'S INQUEST.—An inquest was held, on Tuesday last, by Dr. Casgrain, on the body of a man found floating in the river, half way between Sandwich and Windsor. From the appearance of the body it must have been in the water a long time. The remains of a pocket book, containing apparently a register of births, would lead to the supposition that he was a German, of the name of Steers. But this is not known for certain. After a short consultation, the jury returned a verdict of found drowned.

THE AFRICA'S MAILS.

MEETING OF OLD FRIENDS.

The London Daily Telegraph gives the following account of a party of Canada Indians from Lake Huron, now being exhibited in London:—The party consists of the great head chief and orator, Pe-to e-kie-sic, with his five chosen warriors, four squaws, and one child ten weeks old. Pe-to e-kie-sic (a middle chief) is the great chief of the Walpole tribe, and sole monarch of Walpole Island, and is accompanied by other members of his tribe, comprising the following warriors:—Peway (a hare), head chief of the Potawatamies; Ka she-gos-e-go (moon light) Shawgunda-a-way (a man from the hills); Ta-pis-a-qunk (the loudest sound of thunder) Saw-gee (head of the tribe); and the following squaws:—Fung-gish-a-me-qua (a woman from the west); Nais-waw-be-nqua (the break of day;) Saw-gutch-a-way-qua (a woman from the hill); Pa-pe-shaw, mother of the pauposse (twilight). We were glad to see a crowded audience on the opening evening, comprising a number of Canadian gentlemen and ladies—the Honorable Mr Cameron, Colonel Sleight, &c., &c.—who had seen the Indians in their native woods, upon the shores of Lake Huron, and testified to the identification of the tribe. The Hon. Malcolm Cameron, a distinguished member of the Provincial Parliament, recognised Pe-to-e-kie-sic, the great chief of the Walpole Islanders, and, advancing towards the stage shook him by the hand heartily by the hand, who was delighted to see his old friend once more.

SPEEDY RETURN OF LORD STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE TO ENGLAND.

We believe (says the Morning Advertiser) we are correct in stating the Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, our "extraordinary" Ambassador at Constantinople, has applied for and obtained leave of absence. His Lordship may consequently be almost immediately expected in England. There can be no mistake in this case as to what is to be meant by "leave of absence," mean. It is a gentle way of expressing the fact that the irritable nobleman has been, in reality, re-called.

THE WEST INDIAN GOVERNORS.

Changes have just taken place in some of the West Indian governments. Admiral Elliot has resigned the governorship of Trinidad, to which office Mr. Keate, the lieutenant governor of Grenada, has been promoted. Mr. Power, now lieutenant governor of St. Lucia, is transferred to Grenada in succession to Mr. Keate. It is intended to abolish the governorship of St. Lucia, which will henceforth be administered by Mr. Hincks, the governor of Barbadoes, by which measure a saving of the salary will be effected to the revenues of St. Lucia.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The trial of Wm. Palmer for causing the death, by poisoning, of John Parsons Cook, commenced, on Thursday, at the Central Criminal Court, before three of the most eminent judges in the Kingdom,—Lord Campbell, Mr. Baron Alderson, and Mr. Justice Cresswell. No stronger proof can be added of the intense interest which the public take in this trial than the fact that the Earl of Derby and a considerable number of the nobility were in attendance on the first day. At present it seems doubtful whether the trial for the first alleged murder can terminate this week. The Attorney General led for the crown, and the prisoner is defended by Mr. Sergeant Shee and some three or four other gentlemen of great legal eminence. The Attorney General's opening of the case, which occupied four hours in the delivery, is a master-piece of forensic ability,—cool, connected, unimpressioned, and artistically clear. It is evident that the interval which has elapsed since the preliminary inquiry before the coroner, has been well employed, many of the missing links in the chain of evidence have been supplied and the medical evidence cannot fail to form an era in this kind of criminal jurisprudence.

IMTERVIEW BETWEEN COUNT ORLOFF AND THE EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH.

[From the London News, May 12.

Count Orloff recently had an audience of the Emperor to ask for explanations on the subject of the treaty of April 14th, between England, France and Austria. The Russian plenipotentiary represented to his Majesty that this treaty, unexplained, was constructed by his government as a symptom of want of confidence in the good faith of Russia. The Emperor Napoleon protested against any such interpretation, and assured Count Orloff that he had only signed the treaty in compliance with the wishes of England and Austria, who desired to have the pledge of his good feeling toward them. Count Orloff replied with as much vivacity as it was possible for a diplomatist to exhibit in the presence of a reigning monarch that the treaty of peace of March 3 effectually secured the independence and integrity of the Ottoman Empire, that the Emperor Napoleon had before signing that treaty, given strong assurances of his desire to cultivate intimate relations with Russia, and that the unexpected step which had been taken was calculated to sow doubt and distrust in the mind of his Imperial master.

During this remarkable interview, the Emperor Napoleon III. preserved that calm and impenetrable demeanor for which he is remarkable, whilst Count Orloff scarcely concealed the excitement and surprise which the new situation had produced in his mind.

Our Paris correspondent observes:—"Although the above narrative comes to me from a source in which I have great confidence, I cannot but feel great difficulty of reconciling it with all that is known of the present disposition of the French people, which, according to outward signs, is favorable to maintaining to most friendly relations with Russia. I am however, struck with an observation which has been made to me in answer to my objections, that the public has been more often than not deceived, when it has ventured to infer from premises, however apparently plain, what might be the next step that Louis Napoleon would take."

STATE OF ITALY.

THE PEACE OF EUROPE IN DANGER.

From the Paris Correspondence of London Times.

In my letter of Sunday last I alluded to the rumor, as yet confined to a very few persons, of a secret treaty, signed about the same time as that of the 15th of April.—The existence of such a document is I find not doubted by persons who are in a position to be informed on such matters, though, in the absence of any positive proof, I speak of it with all due reserve. Seeing that the integrity of the Ottoman empire is sufficiently guaranteed by the acts of the Congress, and again confirmed by the treaty of the 15th of April, I was under the impression that the one alluded to had reference to the Italian question, and that, consequently, Piedmont would necessarily be a contracting party. In this there was an error; the treaty is said to be between England, France and Austria, and has no direct reference to Italy. Now, supposing it to exist, what, it will be asked, does it relate to? The obligations contracted by the Allies have arrested for a long time to come to the aggressive spirit of Russia, and to the north and east her march is stayed. Sweden no longer feels her food shadow in her very capital. The Aland Isles are stripped of their terrors, and around Sebastopol no longer hangs the slowly gathering storm which was to burst over the Bosphorus. But the termination of the war with Russia does not guarantee Europe from new troubles, and as long as there is oppression in Italy, discontent and resentment among her population, and stupid obstinacy on the part of her Sovereigns, we cannot count upon a long continuance of repose. A rising against their tyrants may not be appreciated so easily as in other days; and those Christian Powers which flung their protecting shield over the Mussulman could not well co-operate in riveting the chains of those who profess the same faith, and whose claims, as men are not inferior to those of the Turks. As long as Italy is in its present condition the tranquility of Southern Europe is liable to be disturbed at any moment, and the danger is nearer to us than the one we have just conjured.

Something must be done for Italy, and that without loss of time; and, if I can trust to what has been more that once repeated for the last month and more, Austria herself in her secret heart, is not only insensible to the danger, but not unwilling to do something towards dissipating it. Can it be that a consciousness is creeping over her that her hold on her Italian possessions would be very much loosened in case of a convulsion in Central or Southern Italy, and that she is already making up her mind to the worst, and is providing against the evil hour? An expression has been attributed to Count Buol, which, if correctly reported—and I have no particular reason to disbelieve the report—would indicate the existence of apprehension on that score. Count Buol, in a moment of unusual warmth, is said to have declared his regret that he had not instructions propose in the Congress the surrender of Lombardy in exchange for the Danubian Principalities, but as any one is free to speculate on such matters; and, if it be a fact that the secret treaty I have noticed exists, it may not be too wild a speculation to refer it to Turkey. There was, perhaps, much truth in what the Emperor Nicholas said about the "sick man;" that is, so far as the Danubian Principalities was concerned, that what we did not intend that he should fall into the hands of such a practitioner. Does the sickness continue, and will it refuse to yield to the remedies we are now applying? Will the patient survive the operation? If he succumb, what will become of his heritage? These are difficult questions to answer but I should like to know, and so would others, whether, in point of fact, a secret treaty exists between England, France and Austria, and if so, what is the object of it.

You remember the profound reasons given to convince the public that there had been no mention of Italy in the Conference, that neither Count Cavour nor anybody else had presented officially or non-officially note or memorandum on the subject. Argument and wit were alike directed against those who ventured to maintain the affirmative; but the laugh, as events have proved was not at the last moment, on the side of the incredulous. When at length the fact of the "notes" was placed beyond doubt, it was denied a "memorandum" existed. I maintained against all comers the question of the notes, and I now say that the Memorandum was presented, if not officially to the Congress, at least to the plenipotentiaries of England and France. The memorandum exists independently of the notes and what's more, it is a document of considerable importance.

Private accounts from Italy state that much excitement prevails throughout the entire population, in consequence of the discussions in the Congress, and the debate in the English and Piedmontese Parliaments. Count Cavour and Count Cavour has been a real triumph, and his conduct at the Conferences was all but received unanimously, there being only six or seven discontents—a thing not known for a long time past.

The Sardinian Senate have had under discussion the Marquis d'Azeglio's motion, approving the foreign policy of ministers. The following are the terms of the motion:

The Senate, convinced of the happy consequence which may be produced by the treaty of peace, both for civilization in general and for the consolidation of order and tranquility in the Italian peninsula, and recognizing the honor which the policy of the government and the conduct of the Sardinian plenipotentiaries have had in these happy results, expresses its entire satisfaction.

The motion was passed unanimously, as was a vote of thanks to the army and navy.

The Daily News thinks the Cabinet will wait for some indication that the nation is thoroughly interested in the Italian question before it will intervene seriously in Italy. The opinion of Parliament ought to be ascertained without delay. The question is practical and urgent. Italy must be regarded as a whole. Words will not suffice, but the intervention must be made in earnest.

The Post asserts that the Italian question must be settled. The actual state of Italy is dangerous to its neighbors and dangerous in its bearings upon European alliances. What Italy wants is that moderate freedom which comes within itself the principle of development.

FOREIGN.

The Duke of Cambridge will, it is said, be the representative of the British Government at the forthcoming coronation of the Czar, an event which is fixed to take place on August next, by the old Muscovite capital—Moscow. The Duke of Cambridge, who loves show as much as he dislikes hard work, as his speedy retreat from the Crimea proved, will be delighted with this embassy, and will probably discharge the duties as well as any one can be found connected with the British court. In the manifesto, announcing the coronation, Alexander II. states that he resolved to defer the ceremony until the conflict with hostile foes had ceased within his empire, and now that peace has restored to Russia her former tranquility he intends to be crowned with the Empress Alexandrowna. To honor the ceremony all the marshals and nobility of the empire are to be summond to Moscow

NEW YORK, June 2.

The steamship Orizaba arrived at noon from San Juan with dates from Nicaragua to 20th inst. Transit route again opened and quiet again restored, the Costa Ricans having evacuated the county, fearing another defeat. President Morale left April 21st.

The cholera has made sad havoc in the ranks of the Costa Rican army.

General Walker landed at Virgin Bay on the 30th, only a few hours after the last detachment of the enemy left. He is in good health, and the army is generally in good condition, excepting at Grenada where the fever has been very severe.

General James Walker, brother to the General, died at Masaaya on the 13th.

Edmund Randolph is dangerously ill.

General Pornby has been appointed to the command of the department composing Guanacosta and Rivas.

Advices from Grenada at Costa Rica intimate that that country is full of internal commotion, and that there is a prospect of the overthrow of General Mora. It is said that of the 3,000 men he took with him in the invasion of Nicaragua, only 1,200 returned, the rest having died from cholera or in battle.

WASHINGTON, June 2.

In the Senate to-day a letter was received from Mr. Brooks, declaring that in chastising Mr. Sumner for the insult to his State and his relative, he intended no disrespect to the Senate. He did not think he was committing a breach of privilege. The letter was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Crampton's Dismissal.

Mr. Crampton was finally dismissed from Washington last Wednesday, and we publish to-day the despatch of Mr. Marcy on which that dismissal is justified. We need not again enter into the enlistment question; suffice to say, the whole affair is reduced to a matter of the veracity of certain parties; Mr. Crampton and three British Consuls on the one hand, and Hertz and Strobel on the other. The British Government and Europe, of course believe the four gentlemen first named; Mr. Pierce and his friends, almost as naturally, prefer believing the two sharpers last mentioned, and believing them, carry out the quarrel in which they have been inaugurated. They now profess to be satisfied with the explanations of Lord Clarendon; but they cannot believe the asseveration of Mr. Crampton. They have no quarrel with his Government, but he personally, is so obnoxious that they cannot permit him to remain among them. Members of Congress may murder waiters, or assault Senators and editors with impunity; there is no law for such offences; but four British gentlemen cannot be credited when opposed to a couple of blacklegs, and so the intercourse of two friendly nations must be suspended.

We have always maintained that there will be no war; and we are now more than ever of this opinion. People may cease to speak to each other, but it is not requisite that they should come to blows; and this is the present attitude of the two nations. We do not suppose, however, that war will be prevented from any good feeling on the part of Mr. Marcy. He and his confreres have done all they could to justify this calumny, and if it do not come, it will be kept off only by the forbearance of Britain and the Falstaffian discretion of the White House; than from any virtue predicable of its occupants. They have proved themselves by far too reckless, to allow us to doubt their readiness to commit any further folly, if they could do so with prudence. But, so far as they are concerned, a war with England would, at this moment, be peculiarly inexpedient; and since the rulers and people of Britain alike, cordially abhor bloodshed, they will not, unless compelled, enter on a strife, which, of all others, would be most abhorrent to their every sense of propriety.—England is so notoriously ready and able to do battle, that she can afford to decline the challenge sent her; while America is so ill prepared, that in spite of the violence of her rulers, she must rest contentented with mere wordy impertinence. Britain can well afford to let the storm of folly pass through the fair without any other action than regretting that she should so needlessly soil it. But the forbearance and power of Britain are not our only guarantees for a continuance of peace. There is, in spite of Mr. Pierce, a large body of American citizens, and of no small wealth and influence, who loathe and abhorrence, and a still larger body, who will not have war, because it is too costly a luxury. American commerce cannot brook a quarrel with its best customer. Nor, in spite of the new international statute, providing for the covering of an enemy's goods by a neutral flag, and the securing an enemy's ships by the conveyance of neutral goods, can America risk war; for shut out, as she would be, from the British market, and prevented from using her own vessels in her trade, and compelled to employ those of other nations, her entire system of commerce would be turned upside down down. There would forthwith be, confusion worse confounded. Moreover, privateering is forbidden by the new national law of Europe, and with the new America must finally give her assent; and such being the case, we really cannot see how, with the small naval force at her disposal, she could either materially injure the trade of Britain, or effectually protect her own.

But we have digressed from the point, the grounds on which we anticipate a meek solution of present difficulties. America is at this moment on the very worst terms with France, Austria, Denmark, and Spain. It is notorious that Louis Napoleon dislikes her; through Mesdnals Vaillant and Pelissier, he has even gone out of his road to insult her, markedly, and in the face of all the world. Nor are her relations in any degree more friendly with Austria. The Kosta affair was an insult to that power, and it is but yesterday that Commodore Ingraham received a gold medal, as the reward of his arrogance and cheap valor. All this is remembered, and will be, for many a day to come. Denmark, too, may be reckoned as affronted. At the very moment a United States ship of war has gone to the Baltic, to menace the authorities of Copenhagen, and the gallant Danes have on their part, sent out a naval and artillery force, to protect the Island of St. Thomas, in the event of a serious rupture. As for Spain—all men remember how she has been treated; how filibustering expeditions to Cuba has been connived at, as Walker's was to Nicaragua; how the authorities of that colony has been kept continually on the alert; how Soule was sent to Madrid for the very purpose of picking a quarrel; how, in short, America has notoriously abused that comparatively weak kingdom. Looking, then, at these facts, we conclude that President Pierce, or any other President, will be slow to go into the battle at this moment; for just so surely as America drew the sword on England, so surely would she draw the sword on Europe. No one of the States named, but would aid Britain in any way they could. In fact, war with the Mother Country in her things now stand, would be neither more nor less, than war with one half, and that by all odds, the greater half of Europe.—The end of such a contest need not be pointed out. It would be a European combination, not against the freedom, but the insolence of America.

The present position of the quarrel is very unfavourable to those who have so laboriously picked it. Step by step they went on, till the final demand was made for the recall of Mr. Crampton. This was met by a courteous and dignified disclaimer of all intention of offending, on the part of the British Government, but at the same time, by a firm refusal. The despatch of Lord Clarendon rendered offence impossible, and cleared his Government wholly completely from all share in the original cause of complaint; and then, when Britain stands completely exonerated by the confession of both sides of the Atlantic, the President, too far commited already, is compelled to give Mr. Crampton his passport, and thus to place himself in the attitude of one who refuses conciliation, and is bent on strife.

The American papers feel acutely the false position which they now occupy. We, in the meantime, must wait. The next news we shall have, will be, that Mr. Dallas is coming back to Philadelphia, and then, shall the people of the States must have an instant adjustment of the difference, in so far as their credit will be effected by it, and all their business operations thoroughly disordered.—Globe.

Wreck of the Ship Racer for New York.
Passengers Safe in Dublin.

[From the London Chronicle.

Six hundred of the passengers of the ill-fated Racer, Captain Ainsworth, which was wrecked at Arklow Bank on the night of the 7th, arrived in Dublin on Saturday evening, by the Dublin and Wicklow line of railway. The passengers, a large portion of whom are Irish,—immediately proceeded to the office of Mr. Kenny, the agent of the owners, who exerted himself, and succeeded, after a delay of about two hours, in finding lodgings for the entire number; and he has, of course, made himself responsible for their expenses. Many of them have lost everything they possessed; and although, happily, life to any large extent is not sacrificed, from all we can learn, we believe that a close inquiry is necessary in reference to every circumstance connected with the vessel from the moment of her departure from London. The Racer was clipper-rigged, 1,700 tons register, and built, we believe, in an American port. She was chartered by Messrs. Brown, Grinnel & Co., to take passengers to New York, and had, when she weighed anchor, on Tuesday last, 700 souls on board. At Holyhead the pilot left the ship, and shortly afterwards the mate and carpenter left in the boat below, after giving the wheelman his point to steer by. The weather was somewhat heavy, with a fresh wind, and the passengers, of whom the greater number were little accustomed to sea, turned into their berths at an early hour, expecting a prosperous voyage, and fearing nothing of greater consequence than sea sickness. The full complement of hands for a vessel of the Racer's build and tonnage would be about twenty eight able bodied men. In fact she was manned by twenty-seven men, of whom the larger number, we believe, were twenty-four —were men of color, and three Chinese. The passengers had not long been at rest, when they were rudely disturbed by the running of the ship right on shore. The crew turned out, the passengers ran to and fro in wild confusion, and the belief on every mind was that immediate destruction awaited them. An effort was made to bring off the ship, but without success, and the circumstances in which all on board were placed were of the most alarming character. It is said by one of the parties now in Dublin, that the captain on being appealed to as to the chances of safety, in his agony replied, infamely expressed his belief that they would be all involved in a common and terrific fate. Such opinions, at least, got abroad among the passengers, and the scene on board from that moment, grew in its circumstances of horror, until the arrival of the Arklow fishing boats, caused hope to revive, and, let us presume, awakened a feeling of humble thankfulness to God in many a mind relieved of its late anxieties. The fishermen of Arklow were prompt in their arrival when the news of the disaster reached them, and active in their exertion to land the numerous persons who called upon them for assistance; and when they had been landed the passengers received every attention on shore; and as soon as possible a committee of gentlemen in the neighborhood was formed, subscriptions raised, and all that could be done to relieve and make comfortable parties who had lost their all, was affected by the hard exertions who undertook the duty. Shortly after the striking of the vessel, one of the black gangs fell overboard and was drowned, and a female passenger was also carried into the sea, but she was happily recovered. Numbers of the passengers state, and their assertion is borne out by a report from the constabulary at Arklow, that immediately on the coming of the Racer on shore alongside, and whilst the passengers were assembled together in their anxiety to be brought again to terra firma, numbers of the seamen commenced and carried out without a check a system of wholesale plunder from the boxes and trunks of the passengers. Here they had placed their little hoards of money, which were rifled without mercy, if the statements be reliable, and in one case as much as £200 was lost by a poor woman, and others lost various sums from £10 to £50 in this way. When news of the disaster reached town, two tug-boats were despatched by Mr. Kenny, with directions to bring off all that could be saved; and they also arrived on Saturday, laden with remnants of the wreck. As amongst these the boxes of many of the passengers have been brought up, the truth of the pillage can, at least to some extent, be easily tested. Several of the crew were brought up by the tug-boats, and are now in town. It is said by some of the passengers that certain requisites, with which the government emigrating agent very properly demand that each vessel shall be provided, and which are essential for the preservation of decency and health amongst the passengers, although they were prepared for the inspection when the officer came on board at Liverpool, were immediately knocked away when the ship put to sea.

Mr. Kenny has chartered two steam vessels to bring the passengers to Liverpool, preparatory, we presume, to shipping them on board a second vessel, to have, let us hope, a more prosperous though a longer voyage.

Civil war in Kansas.

Town of Lawrence destroyed.

Two gentlemen just from Kansas furnish the Chicago Tribune with an account of a savage assault on Lawrence by a horde of ruffians backed up by the present United States Government. The following is the most graphic portion.

Sheriff Jones in an insulting manner demanded the arms both private and public, and declared he would give them 2 minutes to accede to the demand. If they refused to comply he would storm the town. The public arms were given up, and in one half hour after he made the demand, he and his whole posse to the number of three hundred and upwards were in the streets and with two pieces of artillery, yelling like savages.

They commenced their work of destruction immediately, by throwing the two printing presses and type in the river. This being done they began to cannonade the hotel, and fire by platoons at the same time at the windows, in the meantime the streets and children fleeing in every direction, the Sheriff having refused any time to remove them or property to a place of safety, as he said they might have done so before had they wanted to do so.

When leaving town, there were several who wanted to know where they could find a place of safety, but I could afford them no consolation. I being mounted, succeeded in getting away after a long chase. I left the vicinity about 7 p. m. When I was fifteen miles distant, I could see the flames of what appeared to be a large fire in the direction of Lawrence, and have no doubt but that the town is in ashes, and many of its inhabitants butchered.

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN QUESTION.

The Earl of Clarendon, in the House of Lords, on Monday evening said in reply to a question by the Earl of Elgin, said the letter signed E. Hammond was a genuine document. It arose from the following circumstances:—The agent of the Costa Ricans in this country and some agents in the United States Government, after the attack of Walker on the Government of Nicaragua, appealed to the Government of this country, to assist them in defending themselves. A great variety of projects had been laid before Her Majesty's Government had invariably replied in the negative, declaring that with those States they would have nothing to do—meaning the States of Central America—but at the same time the Government expressed itself extremely sorry for the attack on Nicaragua and the deplorable events which followed; and they especially regretted it because the property of British subjects had not only been endangered, but had actually been sacrificed by Walker; therefore, Her Majesty's government would be very glad if Walker's interferences were not carried further, but they again and again said that with the affairs of Central America they had determined to have nothing whatever to do, and that all their actions would be limited to sending just that sufficient naval force to the coast of South America which would be adequate for the protection of British interest and British property. Mr. Wallenstein, who made the application in behalf of Costa Rica, was greatly disappointed at this answer, and spoke of the vast amount of British property there, which he said ought to be defended by a naval force; that the Costa Ricans were resolved to make a steadfast resistance and rely upon the justice of their country by Walker, but that they had no means of repelling the threatened aggression; that the Costa Ricans a peaceful people and; Mr. Wallenstein said he had no credit in this country and was unable to buy arms here, and he asked if our Government would not give a few arms in order to enable those misleading people to repel this aggression. The matter was referred to the War Department and the answer returned by Mr. Hammond, to which the noble Earl alluded.—Mr. Wallenstein did not consider himself entitled to accept that answer, as none had never been taken, and Mr. Wallenstein had since declined it. It was sometime since

Walker took possession of Nicaragua, and he disposed of a good deal of British property by force alone. Her Majesty's Government had communicated with the Government of the United States in the matter, and he would read an extract from a despatch of Mr. Crampton on the question.—There had been no disguise whatever with the United States Government as to the object of the British Government. Avowedly and openly it had been to protect British interests. On 5th March Mr. Marcy said he entirely disapproved of the existing state of things in Nicaragua and thought it likely to cast a shade upon the reputation of the Government of the United States. He observed that he knew no better plan of proceeding than for the United States and British Governments to combine together for the preservation of the United States, and British subjects.

Despatches from Vienna state that letters had been received from Constantinople announcing that a convention had been concluded between the Porte and the Western Powers, and adding that the evacuation of the Turkish territory by the troops of the allies will completed in six months. Advices reached Berlin announcing that Sir Wm. Williams had arrived at St. Peters burg, and would shortly leave the Russian Capital for England.

Southampton, Tuesday.—The steamer Indus, with Indian and Mediterranean mails has arrived. The weather had been boisterous, and several vessels had been driven ashore. The British bark Mark Wilson was on the rocks.

Trade continued dull at St. Petersburg, holders of tallow were unwilling to sell at present prices. Coronation takes place in September.

A Machine for Stumps.

On Friday last, Messrs. Blackmar & Brown, of Ypsilanti, held an exhibition of the Improved Stump Pulling Machine, which they have lately purchased the patent right for this State. This new improvement for clearing the surface of tne soil, is called Willis' Orange Improved Stump Machine; and has been submitted to a number of trials in some of the Eastern States, before Hon. Gov. Brown, of Massachusetts, Professor Nash of the New England Farmer, and a number of other agriculturists equally as well known. Messrs. Blackmar & Brown, of Ypsilanti, have been the first to bring them into this State; and from the ease and power with which the machine works, it is evidently to be a very great aid to settlers on timbered lands. There are several principles on which a stump machine must operate to be useful and popular; and among these are first, the exertion of great power, next simplicity of construction; and, thirdly, the power to work and be removed from place to place with a small num ber of hands. Now there is no limit to the force with which this machine can be made to operate, as the lever-power can be increased to any extent, and if the chains and iron hooks are only made strong in proportion, it can be constructed to move or lift any stump,stone or weight which it is possible to remove.—The machine is not at all complicated, so that should any part of it give way, an ordinary mech anic could readily repair it.—Two men and one horse, or a pair of oxen, can easily work and move the machine, and operate it reasonably fast. Three men, however, and a pair of oxen are all that could be employed in operating it advantageously or economically; and with that force, any ordinary field of stumps can be cleared at the rate of two to three acres per day.

The trial of the machine last Tuesday took place on the farm of Mr. Grove Sanders, about three quarters of a mile to the southeast of the depot in the village of Ypsilanti. The field did not exactly suit for a full trial of the powers of the machine; most of the stumps being old, and having had time for decay. The soil, also, was not stiff, being rather light on the surface, with the subsoil a clayey loam. There were, however, some white oak stumps, which afforded a pretty good test of its power.—One stump which was pulled up by it, bred the earth with it from a depth of five to six feet, and the circumference of the roots with the soil attached measured thirty-five to forty feet, being from eleven to twelve feet across. The stump itself girthed nearly 12 feet close to the surface. This stump was pulled with the aid of the shears which form a part of the machine.

The operating force consists of a lever on wheels, at the end of the long arm of which is attached the horses or oxen which move it. The fulcrum is formed by any firm stump to which the lever may be attached by a chain. From the fulcrum the power can be applied at any distance to which the connecting chain may reach. Some of the stumps pulled on Friday were from forty-five rods distant from the anchor stump, and as the machine could pull all the stumps at or within that distance, a circular area could be cleared without moving the lever from its anchor of ove. an acre in extent. Where two or three stumps of small size were near each other, they could be pulled at one operation of the machine, by using the small shears, and more than one set of chains and hooks.

There were about seventy of the farmers and citizens of Ypsilanti and the vicinity present during the forenoon, while the machine was in operation; and among them were Mr. C. Woodruff, of the Ypsilanti Sentinel, Charles Shier, David Dibb, H. H. Compton. Benjamin Emerick, R. W. Van Fossen, C. Yost, D. W. Loveridge, G. Sanders, W. H. Hanford, Isaac Collar. All expressed themselves satisfied with the operation of the machine, so far as the stumps in that field afforded a test. Most of them were desirous, however, that it should be tested in a stiffer soil, and in a field where the stumps were greener than those on the field of Mr. Sanders. Mr. Blackmar expressed his willingness to test the machine in any field, and on any quality of stumps which might be selected. He had endeavored to procure a field which would afford a fuller test of its powers, but could not at this busy season, when all the farming community were busily occupied putting in their Spring crops.

Messrs. Blackmar & Brown are perfectly willing to give all information that may be desired as to the working of the stump extractor; and as it is one of the most efficient and easily worked machines of the kind that has come under our observation, or which we have had an opportunity to see at work, we do not hesitate to pronounce it one which will be used with advantage by all who have land they wish cleared from stumps or large stones, and one that can be easily handled, entailing little it any extra expense in its operation.—Det. Adv.

SUCCESSFUL BANKING.—The National Provincial Bank of England at a half yearly meeting declared a dividend for the half year, which with a bonus declared in January, was equal to 16 per cent per annum on a capital of £450,000. The statement of the condition of the bank showed a large amount of Rest, or undivided profits, and it was resolved to increase the capital of the bank to £600,000 by the issue of new shares to be offered to the proprietors in the proportion of one new share for every three old shares. The net profits of 1855, after making allowance for bad and doubtful debts, amounted to £84,305.—Det. Ad.

A boy about 13 years of age, whose name we have not learned, was burned to death at his parents residence near the Don Bridge, on Tuesday. The deceased was standing near the fire, when his clothes caught the flames, and his mother alarmed by his cries hastened to his assistance, and immediately seeing the state of her child threw a large rug over him which was at hand, and tho' she succeeded in stopping the progress of the combustion, still the injuries that the poor boy sustained were so great that he expired the same evening. An inquest will be held upon the body.—Globe.

LIFE PEERAGES.—We are informed that the Government are about to introduce a series of resolutions in the House of Lords immediately, giving power to the Crown to appoint peerages for a life. It is proposed that there shall be four peerages for life conferred, and at no time to exceed that number, upon distinguished members of the bench Judges. They are to be termed "Lords of Appeal," and are to enjoy, during their natural life, all the privileges of hereditary members of the House of Lords.—They are to be appointed expressly to sit on appeal cases, as their title denotes. It is also proposed that each of the four Lords of Appeal shall have the annual salary, during life, of £5000, inclusive of any pension to which they might be entitled from their previous judicial services on the bench.—When the question of these life-peerages has been settled—and it is thought there will not be any opposition to the resolution of the Government—Lord Wensleydale will be at once enabled to take the required oath and his seat in the House of Lords.

LOSS OF LIFE BY THE WAR.—Since the commencement of the war, England has lost 19,584 gallant men by death in action, wounds, and diseases; and 2873 have been besides discharged from the service on account of the two latter causes. England has sealed her declaration of unflinching devotion to the cause of national independence by the sacrifice of 22,457 gallant soldiers. Of these, 1993 fell bravely in action; about 1621 sunk under their wounds, 4279 died of cholera, and 11,431 of other diseases. England has lost in all 22,457. The losses of the French, so far as they have at present been ascertained, amount to 60,000. Count Orloff has admitted in Paris that the Russian loss has not been less than 500,000. The loss sustained by the Sardinians has not been, and the loss sustained by the Turks never will be, ascertained.

LIBERALITY OF PHYSICIANS.—It has always been said that physicians would disparage any remedy, however valuable, which they did not originate themselves. This has been disproven by their liberal course towards Dr. J. C. AYER's preparations. They have adopted them into general use in their practice, which shows a willingness to countenance articles that have intrinsic merits which deserve their attention. This does the learned profession great credit, and effectually contradicts the prevalent erroneous notion that their opposition to proprietary remedies is based in their interest to discard them. We have always had confidence in the honorable motives of our medical men, and are glad to find it sustained by the liberal welcome they accord to such remedies as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and Cathartic Pills, even though they are not ordered in the book but are made known to the people through the newspapers.—New Orleans Delta.

Corn Meal for Milch Cows.

The Rural New Yorker gives the following as the experience of one of its correspondents in the use of Indian meal. The proprietors of some of our best milk dairies regard it as the best food for providing the largest amount as well as the richest quality of milk.

In the of 1852 I began to feed three farrow cows for the purpose of supplying a milkman in this vicinity with which I began, and as I designed the farrow cows for the butcher in the spring. I commenced giving them meal from corn and barley, some ten bushels old grain, then corn meal alone, increasing till they eat one peck each every day. I tried it cooked and raw, wet and dry, mixed with cut fodder composed of hay straw, and corn stalks, cut up together, varying the amount of each as convenience might suggest, as I think all animals require a variety.

Now for the result. The cows increased in milk, giving more on the above feed than they had done on grass during summer. Contrary to my expectations they did not improve very fast in flesh on the food given, and I was obliged to dry them up early in March, to get them fit for the shambles. My cows that were coming in, in the spring had two quarts of corn meal each per day, and they also gave milk liberally. The milk being sold daily, an excellent opportunity for testing the amount given at the time. I made up my mind that corn meal was the best for milk of any food for the milk cow, and still think so, if good, rich milk is wanted. It has been tried considerably in this vicinity, with the same results here given. I fed cut feed; but I do not think that would vary the result. With me if the cows get their daily allowance, I get the returns. Farmers please try it and report the effect.

Currants Grafted on Maple.

Currants Grafted on Maple.—A correspondent of the Rural New Yorker says he transplated into his door-yard a young, thrifty maple, and engrafted into it scions from a currant bush. They grew well, and when ripe, looked very handsome. He says that you must not graft until the sugar-water ceases to run.

Transplanting Hiccories.

Transplanting Hiccories.—The Prairie Farmer, (Chicago) says that Mr. Adams, living there, transplants the hickories from the forest with the same success as other trees. His plan is to dig down and down till he gets tired of it, and then cut off the tap root. He never stops till he gets four feet, and has that to six, and yet he states that he never got so low as to find the tap root as small as the tree at the surface of the ground.

Charcoal as a Fertilizer.

For two years past I have used some fifty loads each season of refuse charcoal, and being fully convinced that it pays, I wish to recommend it to my brother farmers. I have tried it on grass, corn and potatoes—have tried it alone, and in the compost heap and in all situations it has proved beneficial to its trust. As a top dressing for grass, it gives a green color and luxuriant growth. Applied to half an acre of early potatoes the last summer, the yield was seventy-five bushels of as fine, healthy potatoes, as could be desired that sold readily for one dollar per bushel, and yielded the best profit of any thing on the farm.

The virtue of charcoal mainly consists in its absorbing power. The purity of the air around a charcoal pit has long been known, and the colliers, notwithstanding their smutty appearance, are robust men. The source of this purity of the air and the health of the colliers, lies in the fact that charcoal absorbs from the air the ammonia and other noxious gases, unsuited for our lungs, but just the food for plants. Every good housekeeper knows that if her boiling meat gives forth an unsavory odor, a piece of fresh charcoal put into the pot will not only sweeten the air but will remedy the taint of the meat. In the same manner it acts when applied to the land. It absorbs from the air those gases offensive to our nostrils, but the main food of plants. And this it will do, not once only, or for one season, but very possibly for a century. Where an old coal-pit has been burnt, the land never seems to wear out, and the first settlers point to the coal bottoms that are fifty years old, still by their exuberant vegetation marking well the spot where the wood was converted into coal. A fertilizer so lasting is well worth some expense at the outset. But where can we get it, some may ask. If any charcoal pits are burned in your vicinity, the bottoms will furnish three or four loads each of refuse charcoal mingled with burnt soil. The latter is highly valued also as an absorbent. Around furnaces and blacksmith shops, the waste charcoal also accumulates, and in many instances may be had for the carting. It may be found also around engine houses thrown out from locomotives. If none of these resources are at hand, then use the best substitute possible, which is muck, or swamp mud, and double the manure heap by composting, and if the crops are not doubled, then my experience in vain.—Country Gentleman.

Home Made Guano.

As there is a good deal said about guano and other fertilizers, I will give you my experience. Last summer, in July, I cleared out my hen-roost, and found about two bushels of droppings. I had about one quarter on a level on an acre of corn, in a place where I could not well get at it with the cultivator, without doing more damage than I expected the crop to be worth. I planted it about the 6th of June, intending to subdue it with the hoe. It was so wet that I could do but little with it once after a sort cut down the weeds, and then applied the guano. This I prepared as follows: To the two bushels of hen droppings, I put about four bushels of ashes from the ash-house, and ground them together, as a mason mixes his mortar. Of this mixture I applied about half a pint to the hill. I husked thirty-four bushels of ears from this piece. There was a good growth of stalks, of a good color, broad leaf, &c. Had this piece been cultivated as corn ground should be, I think you will agree with me that I should have had a great crop. D.—Gates N. Y.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,
AND JOURNAL OF SUBURBAN ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the United States.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced. The growing interest with which the rising generation view the science of Horticulture, renders such a Journal as "The Illustrated Horticulturist" imperatively necessary to the progress of Rural Arts.

Rural Architecture forms one of the principal features; each number contains from two to four engravings of model cottages, from designs by eminent and skilful architects. Space has been assigned to the tasteful art of Landscape Gardening, engraved plans of gardens in every style, and adapted to the peculiarities of different orders of architecture, illustrate the work.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and to all who can boast the sovereignty of a square rod of tillable earth, "The Illustrated Horticulturist and Journal of Suburban Art" will prove an invaluable companion. The extraordinary low price at which it is affordeds together with its really superior execution, both as regard to typography and editorial ability, must make it the most popular work of the kind in America.

"The Illustrated Horticulturist" is printed on the finest quality of pearl surfaced paper, manufactured expressly for the purpose, regularly the first of each month, commencing with July, 1855. The following gentlemen, eminent for their ability in the science of Horticulture, are engaged as Editorial and Editorial department: H. P. KNIGHT, JAMES SNOWDEN and D. W. RAY.

TERMS: Two Dollars per annum, payable invariably in advance; a liberal discount to the Trade, Postmasters, and getters-up of Clubs.

NEW VOLUME OF THE
AGRICULTURIST

SUBSCRIPTION REDUCED FROM
25 TO 50 PER CENT.

The Canadian Agriculturist

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by its present proprietor in 1848, and is too well known to the leading farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us. The undersigned have made arrangements with the proprietor to publish the next, and probably succeeding volumes, and intend to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE
Illustrated with Engravings

Such as Farm Implements, Portraits of Animals, designs of Farm Buildings, New Inventions, &c., &c., interesting to the Farmer, and also portraits of some of the most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM MACDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the practice of Agrienlture near this city. The active promoter of the various improvements made in Gore Agricultural Legislation since 1847, and having also been connected with this Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and writings in behalf of Canadian Agriculture are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to its columns as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to extend the correspondence on subjects of a practical kind.

THE AGRICULTURIST IS NOT LIABLE TO POSTAGE.

AYER'S
PILLS

Are curing the Sick to an extent never before known of any Medicine.

INVALIDS, READ AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES.

JULES HAUEL, Esq., the well known perfumer, of Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, whose choice products are found at almost every toilet, says:

"I am happy to say that your CATHARTIC PILLS, this day have found them a better family medicine, for common use than any other in my knowledge. Some of my friends have insisted months from them, and one family in particular is believing that they possess extraordinary virtues for driving out diseases and curing the sick. They are not only effectual, but are so mild and pleasant in their qualities which must make them valued by the public, when they are known."

The venerable Chancellor WARDLAW writes from Columbia, 15th April, 1854:

"DR. J. C. AYER.—Sir: I have taken your Pills with great benefit, for the dyspepsia, indigestion, loss of appetite and bilious headache, which has of late years overtaken me in the spring. A few doses of your Pills cured me. I have used your Cherry Pectoral many years in my family for coughs and colds with unfailing success. You make medicines which cure; and I feel it a pleasure to commend you for the good you have done and are doing."

JOHN F. HATTY, Dec., Sec. of the Penn. Railroad Co., says:

"Sir: I take pleasure in adding my testimony to the efficacy of your medicines. I have long derived much benefit from the use of both your Pectoral and Cathartic Pills. I am never without them in my family, nor shall I ever consent to be, while my means will procure them."

The widely renowned S. S. STEVENS, M. D., of Westworth, N. H., writes:

"Having used your CATHARTIC PILLS in my practice, I certify that I consider that they are the most valuable purgative. In cases of disordered functions of the liver, causing bilious complaints, they produce a more speedy cure of diseases that follow, they are a surer remedy than any I have ever used, and more pleasant to be required. I confidently recommend these Pills to the public, as superior to any other I have ever used in my family, and in their operation, and perfectly safe—qualities which make them an invaluable article for public use. I have used your Cherry Pectoral as the best for many years known in this section of country. I have since refused to take admiralist preparation for the treatment of diseases."

"Acton, Me., Nov. 25, 1853.

"DR. J. C. AYER.—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted from my boyhood with a humor in my blood. For about two years, after twenty years' trial, and an untold of amount of suffering, I was induced to purchase one box of your Sarsaparilla Pills. With what feelings of rejoicing I write can only be imagined by those who realize what I have suffered for so long.

"Never until now have I been free from this loathsome disease in some shape. At times it attacked my eyes, and made me almost blind; then the scrofula would break out; in others it settled in the scalp of my head, and destroyed my hair, and has kept me partly bald all the time, sometimes it came out in my face, and kept it for months a raw sore. At last one week ago I commenced taking your Cathartic Pills, and now am entirely free from the complaint. My eyes are well, my skin is fair, and my hair is coming as natural as before my sickness, by which makes me feel already a new person.

"Having the above statement may be the means of conveying information that shall do good to others, I am, with every sentiment of gratitude, Yours, &c.,

MARIA RICKER.

"I have known the above named Miss Ricker from her childhood, and her statement is strictly true.

CYRUS HOLLEY,
Overseer of the Portsmouth Manufacturing Co."

CAPT. JOEL BUTLER, of the ship Rachel Watson from Boston, 20th April, 1854:

"Your Pills have relieved me from a bilious attack which arose from derangement of the Liver, which had become very serious. I had failed of any relief by my Physician, and from every remedy I could try; but a few doses of your Pills set my Liver right, and I have no doubt but they have given them to my children for worms, with the best of effects. They were promptly cured. I recommended them to a friend afflicted with dyspepsia, which had lasted for months; he told me in a few days they had cured him. You make the best medicine in the world; and I am free to say so."

Read this from the distinguished Solicitor of the Supreme Court, whose brilliant abilities have made him well known, and only in this city, to the neighborhood:

"New Orleans, 5th April, 1854.

"Sir: I have great satisfaction in assuring you that myself and many friends have very much benefited by your medicines. My wife was cured, two years since, of a severe and dangerous disease of the Liver, by Ayer's Pectoral, and since then has enjoyed perfect health. My children have several times been relieved of fever and ague, and Lumbago and Croup by it. It is an invaluable remedy for these complaints. Your CATHARTIC PILLS have entirely cured me from a dyspepsia and costiveness, which has grown upon me for many years, rendering my life so much more important, from the fact that I had failed to get relief from the best Physicians which the section of the country affords, and from any of the numerous remedies I had taken.

"You seem to us, Doctor, like a providential blessing to our community, and we feel anxious that you should be reminded of it.

Yours respectfully,
LEAVITT, THAXTER."

"Senate Chamber, Ohio, April 5th, 1854.

"DR. J. C. AYER.—Honored Sir: I have made a hot cough mixture of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, left me by your agent, and have been cured by them of the dreadful Rheumatism and a which he had suffered so severely. The first dose relieved me, and a few subsequent doses have entirely removed the disease. I feel it better health than I have for some years before, which I attribute entirely to the effects of your medicine. Yours truly,

LUCIUS B. METCALF."

The above are all from persons who are personally known where they reside, and who would not make these statements without a thorough conviction that they were true.

Building on the Sand.

BY EMMA COOK.

'Tis well to woo, 'tis well to wed,
For so the world has done
Since myrtles grew and roses blew,
And morning brought the sun.

But have a pledge with truth!
Be certain that your love will wear
Beyond the days of youth.

But if ye give not heart for heart,
As well as hand for hand,
You'll find you've played the unwise part,
And "built upon the sand."

'Tis well to save, 'tis well to have
A goodly store of gold,
And bold enough of shining stuff—
For charity is cold.

But place not all your hopes and trust
In what the deep mine brings:
We cannot live on yellow dust,
Unmixed with purer things.

And he who piles up wealth alone,
Will often have to stand
Beside his coffer chest, and own
'Tis "built upon the sand,"

'Tis good to speak in kindly guise
And soothe where'er we can;
Fair speech should blind the human mind,
And love links man to man.

But stay not at the gentle words,
Let deeds with language dwell;
The one who pities starving birds,
Should scatter crumbs as well.

The mercy that is warm and true
Must lend a helping hand,
For those who talk yet fail to do,
But "build upon the sand."

How John Graham was Cured of Discontent.

Among the first settlers of this part of the world, was an honest Scotchman, whom we will call John Graham, who had come, with wife and bairns, to make for themselves a new home in the woods. Being very industrious, or as his neighbors said, a "well doing" man, it was not long before he was the possessor of a snug log house in the middle of a pleasant clearing. He raised good crops too and got his land cleared up as fast as other people, so that one would have thought he was prosperous enough to be contented, and so he might have been but for his unfortunate propensity to look upon the worst side of things, as far as they concerned himself. He was always dissatisfied, thinking that all his neighbors were doing better than he, and seeming almost to take a morbid pleasure in undervaluing what he did himself. This was provoking to his wife, who was of a more cheerful disposition, but it was no use to remonstrate with him.

One fine morning in Summer, John Graham rose very early and went out to drive up his oxen, as he wanted to use them, but they were no where to be found. As there were no fences to restrain them cattle, in those days, were continually straying into the woods, causing their owners a great deal of trouble. Here was another subject of complaint for John. Nobody's oxen he was sure, strayed away so often as his but as that did not help any to bring them back he went into the house, hastily dispatched his breakfast and set off to look for them. He wandered around for a couple of hours, with his eyes almost constantly on the ground, for fear of losing the track which the oxen had made through thickets and wading bits of swamp till at last the trail suddenly disappered. John stopped a moment to wipe his heated face and look around when he instantly became aware that he was lost. He had not the slightest idea where he was. He was sure, from the height of the sun, that he must have gone a number of miles from home but in what direction he did not know, as everything was entirely new and strange to him. So after considering awhile he determined to take the first cow-path he should come to feeling sure that it would, before long bring him out at some house where he could inquire the way home. He was not long in finding a path which, after following it two or three miles, brought him out at a place close to the house, its bright water rippling and dancing in the sunshine. He was sure he had never seen the place before, and he stood admiring, until at last he began to envy the possessor of it.

"Ah!" said he to himself, "if I had as good a home as that, with as nice a clearing, and such a beautiful spring close by, I would never ask for anything better. It is'nt likely I ever will be so well off," he continued sighing, "but I may as well go in and ask the way." He went up to the door and knocked.

"Come in," said a voice which sounded familiar. He opened it and there sat his own wife and children.

"Dear me John," said his wife, "have ye found the oxen already. I did'na think ye would be back yet."

It was his own house he had been coveting. John Graham was wise after all. He sat down silent and bewildered, for a moment, and then just told his wife all that had been passing through his mind when he thought the place was unknown to him.

"It's the best lesson I ever had," he continued. "and I see now how foolish I have been, for what I despised when I knew it was my own, I coveted when I thought it was a stranger's. After this, I shall try to be more contented, and take thankfully whatever the Lord pleases to send."

And the next time he [illegible]

Frightening a Squatter.

About thirteen years ago, when the now flourishing city of Hannibal on the Mississippi river, was but a yard, surrounded by a few huts belonging to some hardy 'Squatters,' and such a thing as a steamboat was considered quite a sight, the following incident occurred.

A tall, brawny woodsman stood leaning against a tree which stood upon the bank river, gazing at some approaching object which would easily have been discovered to be a steamboat.

About half an hour elapsed, and the boat was moored, and the hands busily engaged in taking on wood.

Now among the many passengers on this boat, both male and female, was a spruce young dandy with a killing moustache, &c., who seemed bent on making an impression on the hearts of the young ladies on board; and to do that he must perform some heroic deed.

Observing our squatter friend, he imagined this to be a fine opportunity to bring himself into notice; so stepping into the cabin he said:

"Ladies, if you want to enjoy a good laugh step out on the guards. I intend to frighten that gentleman into fits who stands on the bank."

The ladies complied with the request and our dandy drew from his bosom a formidable bowie knife and thrust it into his belt; then taking a large horse pistol in each hand, he seemed satisfied that all was right. Thus equipped, he strode on shore, with an air that seemed to say, 'the hope of a nation depends on me.'

Marching up to the woodsman he exclaimed:

"I found you at last have I? You are the man I've been looking for these three weeks! Say your prayers," he continued presenting his pistols; "you'll make a capital barn door, and I shall drill the key-hole myself."

The squatter calmly surveyed him a moment, and then drawing back a step, he planted his huge fist between the eyes of his antagonist who in moment, was floundering in the turbid waters of the Mississippi.

Every passenger on the boat had by this time, collected on the guards, and the shout that now went up from the crowd speedily restored our crest fallen hero to his senses, and as he was sneaking off towards the boat, he was thus accosted by his conqueror.

"I say, you, next time you come around drilling key-holes don't forget your old acquaintances."

Life in a Powder Mill.

Dickens thus describes a visit to the powder mill of Hounslow, near London:

"In this silent region, amid whose ninety-seven work places no human voice ever breaks upon the ear, and where, indeed, no human form is seen except in the isolated house in which his allotted task is performed, there are upwards of two hundred and fifty workmen employed. They are a peculiar race, not, of course, by nature, in most cases, but by the habit of years. The circumstances of momentary destruction in which they live, added to the stringent and necessary regulations, have subdued their minds and feelings to the condition of their hire. There is seldom any need to enforce those regulations. Some terrific explosion here, or in works of a similar kind elsewhere, leaves a fled mark in their memories, and acts as a constant warning. Here no shadow of a practical joke, or caper of animal spirits ever transpires—no witticism, no chaffing or slang. A laugh is never heard, a smile seldom seen. Even the work is carried on by the men with as few words as possible, and these uttered in a low tone. Not that anybody fancies that mere sound will awaken the spirit of combustion, or cause an explosion to take place, but their being are all ways kept subdued. If one man wishes to communicate anything to another, or ask for anything from somebody at a short distance, he must go there; he is never to shout or call out. There is a particular reason for this last regulation. Amid all this silence, however a shout does occur, everybody knows that some imminent ranger is expected the next moment, and all rush away headlong from the direction of the shout. As to running toward it to offer any assistance, as common in all other cases, it is thoroughly understood that none can be afforded. An incident here is immediate and beyond remedy. If the shouting be continued for sometime (or a man might be drowning in a river), that might cause one or two of the boldest to return; but this would be a very rare occurrence. It is by no means to be inferred that the men are selfish and insensible to the perils of each other; on the contrary, they have the greatest consideration for each other, as well as for their employers, and think of danger to the lives of others, and of property at stake at all times, and more especially in the more dangerous houses. The proprietors of the various gun-powder mills all display the same consideration for each other; and whenever any improvement tending to lessen danger is made by one, it immediately communicated to all others. The wages of the men are good, and the hours very short; no artificial lights are ever used in the work. They leave the mill at half past three in the afternoon, winter and summer."

Natural Phenomenon.

The Ottawa Times says on Friday afternoon last the wind brought up, apparently from the rear of the Gatineau mountains, over the whole [illegible] country, a singular and more extraordinary appearance than we ever saw—the cloud itself, particularly towards the Zenith was of a lurid copper color, while towards the quarter from which the wind came there was a large spot of lighter color, absolutely fiery, very like what sailors call the "ox-eye," which is seen amidst the masses of dark clouds which prelude a hurricane on the west coast of Africa. It is no exaggeration to say that the scene was a most awful one, and every one expected a tremendous outbreak of the powers of nature; some predicted an awful thunder storm; others a hurricane of wind and deluge of rain; but nothing came of it; the clouds gradually passed away and the evening was fine. During the continuance of this dense cloud, a few ashes, and some burnt leaves fell in the streets in various places, and our own opinion is that all this most remarkable appearance was the result of an enormous fire in the forest, far up on the Southern slope of the range of mountains which terminate on the Saguenay, passing behind Three Rivers and Quebec. If it be so, the conflagration must have been of an astounding character, to have produced such results her, and it is evident that the scene of the fire must have been far off, and probably in a tract of land where none but the Red Man puts his foot, for we have heard no fire anywhere near civilized settlements in that direction.

SMART CHAPS.—We have very smart boys in this town (says a contemporary)—one in particular, who was called up the other day by the pedagogue to give some account of his absence, and to give some evidence, if possible, of progress in his studies. 'Where were you yesterday?' 'I was out in the field all alone.' 'What were you doing in the field, sir?' 'Picking berries!' 'Well; but what were you doing?' 'I was meditating.' 'Meditating upon what?' 'I was meditating upon what I'd be when I go to be growed up—printer, doctor, lawyer, or schoolmaster, and took the field for it.' 'Brave boy!' 'What was your conclusion?' 'Why, as how I'd be a schoolmaster: they live easy—likes to give likens, and teach the young dea what to shoot at.'

Lola Montez was playing at the Victoria Theatre, Ballarat diggings, where she had an encounter with Mr. Seekamp, the editor of the Times at that place. A writer in the Times had made some remarks reflecting on the character of Lola, and a few evenings afterward, Mr. Seekamp called at the United States Hotel, where she was reading. Hearing he was below, she came down stairs with a whip, and laid it on his back with hearty good will. Mr. S. retaliated with a riding whip, and ere long the combatants had each other literally by the hair. Some of the parties interposed, and they were separated, but not before life preservers and revolvers had been produced. At the theatre next evening, Lola Montez was enthusiastically received, and at the close of the performance made a characteristic speech.

THE CREDIT SYSTEM.—A beautiful girl with a pair of pouting lips, stepped into a store to buy a pair of mits. "How much are they?" "Why," said the gallant but impudent clerk, lost in gazing upon her sparkling eyes and ruby lips, "you shall have them for a kiss!" "I agreed" said the young lady, pocketing the gloves, and her eyes speaking daggers, "and as I see you give credit here, charge it on your books, and collect it in the best way you can!" So saying she hastily tripped out at the door.

A WHITE GIRL IN SLAVERY.—The Quincy (Ill.) Republican gives the particulars of a slave-catching case which occurred at that place recently. The story runs that a female slave of one Mr. Pond, living near Palmyra, Mo., ran away, and after several days' search she was captured on the ferry-boat crossing from Missouri to Quincy.—She had been kept at the house of a Mr. Davies, a German in Palmyra, for a few days, and brought thence by Scheible, another German, to the ferry-boat opposite this city. When she was taken back to Palmyra both Germans and free Negro were imprisoned.

Upon the examination of Scheible, he alledged that he did not know the girl was a slave, as she was white. Several gentlemen were called on the witness stand who testified that they had seen her while she was at Davies', and thought she was a white woman. After a three days' trial, Scheible was discharged on the ground of her being a slave, but "he found it necessary," the Palmyra Whig states, "to leave the country forthwith!" otherwise he would have been lynched for his humanity. Davies is still in jail, and the Whig declares the penitentiary will be his fate. Such is slavery. For a simple act of kindness towards a fellow being, these two men are thus thrown into jail, and one saves himself from the fury of a mob only by escaping to a free State, while the other may consider himself fortunate if he escapes a five years' penitentiary.—*Det. Some time since we gave an account of the invention, by a Worcester gentleman, of an instrument which plays numerous national airs by steam power. A joint stock company has now been formed for the manufacture of the instrument, and is called the "Steam Music Company."

"HEADS UP!"—A tall, raw-boned recruit was put on drill by a little cock sparrow of an officer; as every order was given to him he would look down to see his commander, and was as often admonished to hold up his head. Repeated admonitions of this kind at length had the effect to induce the recruit to raise his head, at length to a level with the setting sun, and the officer ordered him to keep it there.

"What, always?" was the enquiry.

"Yes always!" was the stern reply.

"Then good bye, leftenant: I shall never see you, again!"

At a social gathering near Montpelier, Vt., a young man had the task of "getting a wife," imposed upon him during a recent evening's amusement, and went through a mock ceremony, as they both supposed. After the nuptions had been gone through with, it was discovered that the person who married them was a real justice, and the matrimonial knot could not be untied! The parties are satisfied with their bargain, but they are nettled at the manner in which they were launched upon the sea of matrimony.

THE TYPE BATTERY.—Mr. Fye, of the New York press, being called upon to reply to a toast in honor of the craft at the late celebration of the Typographical society, made a very excellent speech; the speech of the evening decidedly, in the course of which he said: There are two kinds of weapons. We have Paixan guns and Minie rifles, but there is one thing that shoots further than all these. It is the shot from the type battery. It goes round the world; it circles and threads plains; it wends its way through woods; it rattles in the rigging of the ship in the most distant seas; it is never spent when aimed high, but ricochets, striking with fresh force every form of evil, dishonour and oppression. In firing then let your aim always be true, and remember that to hit the mark aim a little above it.

THE MURDER IN WASHINGTON.—The New York Mirror, in commenting upon the recent murderous affray at Washington, uses the following language, which will commend itself to the approval of most readers:

We forbear comments to day upon this bloody business, beyond this, that the time, the place, and the relative position of the parties, render the conduct of Herbert wholly inexcusable. No gentleman, in a public dining-room, will have any altercation with the servants; and no man, untainted by cowardice or ruffianism, will deem it necessary to go armed into a peaceful breakfast room. If waiters are insolent, the gentlemanly guest will appeal to the host, and if he refuses to make the amende honorable, the dignified alternative is to quit the house. We do not believe in hanging; but we would sentence the Honorable Mr. Herbert to the next severe penalty, and place the mark of Cain upon his brow.

A correspondent of the London Literary Gazette, alluding to the numerous cases of death from accidental poisoning, adds: "I venture to affirm there is scarce even a cottage in this country that does not contain an invaluable, certain, immediate remedy for such events—nothing more than a dessert spoonful of made mustard mixed in a tumbler of warm water, and drank immediately.—It acts as an emetic, is always ready, and may be used with safety in any case where one is required. By making this simple antidote known, you may be the means of saving a fellow creature from an untimely end.

GUN METAL EXPERIMENTS.—The result of some carefully conducted trials and experiments with various kinds of gun metal has convinced the authorities of Woolwich Arsenal that the Nova Scotia charcoal iron possess capabilities of greater resistance as well as other desirable qualities in a superior degree. They have, therefore, recommended its adoption for the purposes of the new foundry and gun factory there. The War Department has just concluded a contract with the Acadian Iron Company for a large and regular supply of that material, which it is considered, will also be brought extensively into use, as, with such ready means of procuring superior gun metal now at their disposal, government will be relieved of that dependence on foreign countries for an article of the greatest importance, which England herself has not the means of producing. The government of Nova Scotia have shown a strong desire to encourage the manufacture of the iron of these mines, and have agreed to appropriate extensive tracts of forest land in the immediate vicinity of their mines for the purposes of the company. The Nova Scotia iron has been pronounced to be perfectly adapted for the higher qualities of steel, and all those other purposes to which Swedish or Russian iro has in times past been exclusively applied.

AN IMPROVED PIANO FORTE.—A new piano forte has been invented, which has two key boards, and is said to have greater power than two grand pianos. The principle of construction consists in the movement being placed around a hollow cylinder, which is placed perpendicularly within the body of the instrument.

A LAND SPEC.—A couple of sharp lawyers in St. Clair county, recently discovered that some trespassers were at work cutting pine on a non-resident lot, and wrote to the owner that if he would send them $25, they would put the trespassers through, and get pay for the damage done. The owner, who had been bothered and perplexed about taxes, &c., replied that if they would send him $25, he would send them a deed. They did so, received their deed, waited upon the trespassers in person, and on their own account, and took $450 from them, and sold the lot of pine as it stands for $1000. —Det Adv.

A fire was raging in the vicinity of Pembroke, C. W., on the 28th. The scene is spoken of as awful beyond description, PAYING FOR A NEWSPAPER.—The Germantown (Pa.) Telegraph very truly says: "Except the cash system is exclusively adopted and rigidly observed, we know of no business in which its billsare so difficult to collect as subscriptions to a newspaper.—This is not because subscribers are unwilling to pay, but is principally owing to pure neglect.—Each one imagines that because the year's indebtedness amounts to so small a sum, the printer cannot be in need of that, forgetting that the fruits of his business is made up of such little sums, and that the aggregate of all the subscribers is by no means an inconsiderable amount of money, and without which, the publisher could not for a single month continue the issue of his paper.

A few days ago, while a Mr. Young was walking in Eighth street, Philadelphia, he was accosted by a young man, quite genteelly dressed, who appeared to be in great agony. He inquired of Mr. Young where the nearest dentist could be found, and said he was suffering greatly from the toothache. Mr. Young kindly gave the desired directions. "Just put your finger in my mouth and feel the tooth that tortures me," said the sufferer, apparently writhing in agony. Mr. Young complied, and inserted one of his digits. The young man started away to seek for the dentist. Meanwhile, Mr. Young having occasion to put his hand into his pocket, discovered that his portmonnaie, containing forty dollars, was gone.

Great Britain and the United States.

The formal announcement of Mr. Crampton's dismissal was not made to him until the afternoon of Wednesday week, the 23th ult., at an hour when he could not send home by the steamer of that date his own notification of the fact. But the despatch of Mr. Marcy to Mr. Dallas, informing the latter of the President's intention, was dated on the previous day, and sent off by the next steamer forward. There have been many remarks passed on this peculiar timing of the deed, and on the small cunning that it displays. Mr. Dallas would have in his possession at the same time the despatch on Cuba at American affairs, dated the 24th ult., of which we have now to speak, and positive knowledge of Mr Crampton's dismissal which he might or might not with hold from Lord Clarendon. But the dodge—if there were one—is alike contemptible in itself and unimportant. It is extremely likely Lord Clarendon would not take any special step on any other point, until he knew the issue of the enlistment difficulty.

Elsewhere will be found the answer of Mr. Marcy to sundry hints thrown out by Lord Clarendon on the subject of arbitration—hints more or less positive, more or less designedly misunderstood. And if on [illegible] disingenuous document emanates from a State Department, President Pierce offers to arbitrate on one point, leaving another open to the disputants; and such a proposal speaks plainly of that paltry and calculating and personally selfish spirit, which has latterly characterised all his Excellency's political moves. He strives to carry favour with every one, and secure his renomination to the Chair. Failing in this, he would leave an awkward legacy to his successor, in an irritating open question. If he take up a national policy, he fears that he may sacrifice his party popularity. If he please the North by showing signs of accomodation, he tickles the recklessness of the West and the vapouring of the South by flat refusal to consider certain points as debatable. And to all this Mr. Marcy has to square his instructions. How painfully he labours through them, as the 24th ult. discovers will present no surprise, nor shall we do much more than put a mark on one fatal objection to the receipt of this as a bona fide offer of settlement. It consists herein. Mr. Marcy divides the dispute into two parts—the one being the construction of the Treaty; that is to say, was it retrospective or not—the other being the actual possessions held by Great Britain at the date of the Treaty: what were they, and what right had she to hold them. Such a division is pretty simple. Now, says the American Secretary of State, it would be absurd to submit the first point to arbitration, because if decided in Great Britain's favour; the dispute as to the latter would still exist. Would it so? Why! It seems palpable enough that this difficulty would be obviated by submitting both issues to a simultaneous arbitration; it would also seem impossible that such an easy solution should not have occurred to Mr. Marcy, when we find him at last consenting to refer this latter abstruse point.' It is true that he tries to fortify his reluctance to refer the construction of the Treaty, by declaring that a decision adverse to his view could not for a moment be tolerated, Yet, after laying down his position so firmly, he has the chil ish and illogical folly to add in his closing paragraph, that if the geographical questions were settled by reference, the "other points of difference would, after that, yield, as a matter of course to a conference between the Earl of Clarendon and yourself (Mr. Dallas)." Was there ever a greater tissue of absurdities? The sole scrap that merits approbation, in all this long attempt at complication, is the still further a very complicated matter, is the preference given to "men of science" as arbitrators.—We sincerely regret that the despatch is so unpalatable; and can scarcely doubt that it will meet with a curt answer, which, in truth, is all that it deserves. Looked at below the surface, and in connection with other circumstances of the moment.

On one of these, a word. It may be remembered that, not long since, a solemn fuss was made over the alleged piracy of one Capt. Tarleton, of H. M. S. Eurydice, with the passengers on board the American steamer Orizaba, on the latter's arrival at San Juan. "Another insult to our flag" was echoed far and wide; and the story goes that the Cabinet of Washington demonstrated with that of London on the occurrence. And now what are the facts? Without running through the details which have gone the usual rounds, it is sufficient to say that the precautions taken by Capt. Tarleton against apprehended violence and bloodshed at what may be called a natural port, were limited to that object; that such as they were, they were adopted at the urgent solicitation of an American commercial company; and that discreet British officer finally refused to be led into any proceedings whatever that might be construed in an offensive sense.

Nor is this all. Thanks to the speed of the admirable new line of Liverpool and Montreal steamers, we have at the moment of writing been furnished with a few days later news from England, and specially with an explanation given by Lord Clarendon in the House of Lords, in reply to an enquiry by Lord Elgin, touching the alleged supply of muskets to the Costa Ricans.—We subjoined this other significant fact to what we called the old hardware, so soon as the charge was gravely mooted here, and flatly contradicted the Congressional and newspaper busy-bodies who saw active sympathy in a certain letter from Mr. Hammond of our Foreign Office, to Mr. Wyndham, who is since dead, but who was then Agent of Costa Rica in London. [illegible] stone throw were no proof whatever that the transaction was ever completed; and might have added that the correspondence actually took place before it was known that Costa Rica and Nicaragua were at war. Now it comes out that the purchase never was completed; and furthermore, Lord Clarendon, then as now, reiterated most emphatically that Great Britain would in no case meddle with the intestine quarrels of Central America, but would strictly limit her "interference" to the actual protection of British life and property.

But worse still is behind; and we come now again to the recent recognition by President Pierce, of the Walker dynasty in Nicaragua. From this same speech of Lord Clarendon we learn that, on or about the 5th of March, Mr. Marcy assured Mr Crampton that the American Government shared the disgust of the British government at the career of Walker; and that the propriety of joint action in order to prevent its consequences was suggested by Mr. Marcy. We shall perhaps be told hereafter—for on all sides misunderstandings prevail—that Mr. Marcy's languages did not bear this construction. It matters not. For several consecutive months the President steadily refused to recognise the quasi-filibustering rule. Then suddenly it came upon us that he had veered round to the very opposite quarter of of the compass, and that Padre Vijil was the right man in the right place! Surely Mr. Dallas must have been thoroughly cognizant of the small, time-serving, trimming, thriftless, vacillating character of his Chief Magistrate, when he said, during the interchange of courtesies at some public dinner or other, that nothing but "inexorable policy" could drive the two countries into collision. "The "inexorable policy" of such men as President Pierce is moulded by the temporary exigencies of his own supposed interests, and by the timid counsels of those who are cleverer than he and not as unscrupulous. Perhaps this may be [illegible] but it is not far from graphic news to the 24th ult. has arrived, and it seems clear that the London Times argues upon Mr. Marcy's willingness to join Lord Clarendon in chuckeing General Walker, as though there were positive evidence of its existence. We regret all the more that we cannot wait to see this important point cleared up. If it be Mr. Marcy's offer, and not merely Mr. Crampton's report, Lord Clarendon and the British public will take much more offence at the subsequent recognition of Padre Vijil, than at Mr. Crampton's dismissal. How could Lord Clarendon deal diplomatically with such fast and loose diplomatists! On this point, we confess of some anxiety.—Albion.

The Menace against Belgium.

The affair between Belgium and France begins to assume an unpleasant aspect. If Belgium press is not, however, the only cause of displeasure. It is complained that the King of the Belgians hastened to give to the Czar the Grand Cross of Leopold, and made a display of it in the Belgian Moniteur. It is not usual to publish the name of the recipient of such honours in the official organ of the Government when the recipient is a crowned head. Kings and subjects cannot of course be put on a level. On the other hand it was declared that there was no intention of bravado in the act. The Czar of Leopold could not be given to the Czar so long as he had not recognised the Government of King Leopold, and that recognition coming late was all but coincident with the political situation which preceded the war. Moreover, the decoration could not have been spontaneous without offence to England and France while Russia was at war with those powers. Now as the Czar appears to prize the Belgian Order beyond measure, King Leopold took the first favourable opportunity of gratifying his intense longing—but nothing disrespectful, and nothing approaching it, was intended by the act.

The proceedings in the Chamber of Representatives will go far to appease the uneasy excitement which has pervaded the whole Belgian nation ever since the speech from the throne. The words which fell from it assuredly such a sedative was urgently required. It is well known that the present Ministry of Belgium does not enjoy the public confidence. The remarkable report of an agent of the French Minister of Police in the Brussels press which was falsely published, indicates as much. Of eighteen journals published in the capital of Belgium, advocating every shade of political and ecclesiastical opinion, with an aggregate circulation of about 40,000 copies, only two of Ministerial tone of them the official Moniteur) and their circulation is only 6,500. The remainder—Catholic and anti-Catholic, Conservative, Moderate, Democratic, and even Republican—are for the most part in decided opposition. The Belgian people, whose pressing sentiments are thus represented, have been less alarmed by the menacing language of the French Minister for Foreign Affairs than by their doubts of the firmness and good faith of their own Government.

Naval Supremacy of Britain.

The Paris Siecle of the 10th, in an article on the Congress of Paris, contains the following curious passage:—"Amongst other reasons for not wishing to continue the hostilities was the fear that the campaign of 1856 was to have been essentially a maritime one. England had made unheard-of preparations, which may have been appreciated in the accounts published by the English and French journals; she was about to acquire an enormous superiority over the European fleets, and this was a dangerous one. Now, the final act of the congress—the abolition of letters of marque, &c.—proved that Europe is no more prepared to support maritime tyranny than the continental excess of military development. It may, therefore, be said that the European diplomacy in its actual desire for peace displayed its fears of maritime proportions of England. English diplomatists cannot have mistaken this. If it had escaped their attention, the shock of the London panic would have awakened them to the fact.—But their shouts did not prevail, and England was compelled to console herself by a review, for the impossibility in which she found herself to obtain elevation in a despotic country. The Minie rifle was the consolation of this last motive for deserting peace. It was their natural policy to conceal it."

Arms for the Militia.

The Editor of the Montreal Gazette gives the following account of the arms just imported into the province for the militia—

"Such arms as these, persons say, were never seen in Canada before. They are very complete in all their parts; and the workmanship, as far as we can judge is good.—The Minie rifles are much lighter than the common musket; and the bayonets attached to them are also lighter than those of common muskets, while the mode of "fixing" them is simple and ingenious, and infinitely superior to the old plan. The sights, adjusted for ranges of from one to nine hundred yards, are also simple and ingenious, and admirably arranged. We are much mistaken if these light weapons will not prove quite as effective as the crow-bar barrels which our neighbours across the frontier so much admire. However the question of length of range and precision of throwing the ball may be decided between the enormously thick and comparatively thin barrels, there can be no question that the latter can be far more easily carried; and with the loose-fitting and sounding Minie ball, it can be loaded in much less time.—Actual practice in the Crimea proved the Minie carbines in the Old Court House the same general revolver horse-pistols are formidable weapons, and please the officers much,—they carry six charges with one loading. The bore of the barrel is not large, but it is in all cases beautifully polished and carefully groved. It is certainly a marvellous improvement on the old style of pistol, and will throw a ball with precision and force a long way. The cavalry swords also please. Science and art have combined to render them as deadly as possible—to have strength without unnecessary weight—to be, in fact, so arranged as to split a scull, or in the [illegible] so out civilization progresses; and so, in the words of a writer, is man devilishly ingenious in devising means to make his fellow-man bite the dust."

THE MAPLE LEAF.

SANDWICH, JUNE 13, 1856.

If we may judge rightly from appearances, at the seat of Government, the present Parliament will be of short duration; for when it was found impossible to carry on the Government with a majority of twenty-three, much less will the present batch be able to live through the storm which is gathering to sweep them from power. The principle of sectional majorities, upon which the last ministry resigned, was again, so soon as the new one had been formed and a vote taken upon them in the house, which gave a larger sectional majority against ministers than the one upon which the former resigned; then how can the present Government retain office contrary to the very same principle which led them to leave their seats before. It is generally believed that upon any measure of importance the ministry would be defeated; and in that case, there is no doubt but a Ministerial [illegible] of them [illegible] of the official Monitour) and their circulation is only 6,500. The remainder—Catholic and anti-Catholic, Conservative, Moderate, Democratic, and even Republican—are for the most part in decided opposition. The Belgian people, whose pressing sentiments are thus represented, have been less alarmed by the menacing language of the French Minister for Foreign Affairs than by their doubts of the firmness and good faith of their own Government.

We take the following from the London Correspondence of the Globe, in regard to the marriage of the Princess Royal.

The subject of the marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, is again revived, by the arrival this week of the young gentleman himself on a visit to Her Majesty; and the impression seems to be gaining ground, that the alliance may prove useful to both nations in future years. The Post, the daily organ of Lord Palmerston, says "the Prince is a good and eligible match for the Princess Royal as age, in birth, in character. He comes of a good stock. His father is a strong and able man, and has the reputation of holding just and right political opinions. He is himself worthy and amiable young man—one with whom any family might gladly form a connection. It is, after all, but a small circle round which our Reigning Family can look for its alliances. The greatest kingdoms are forbidden ground, in consequence of their Faith. We cannot join in marriage with France or with Austria. Prussia is the first and most considerable country with which it is in the power of our Royal Family to connect itself. Sweden offers the sole exception beyond the great German depot of nominal and trifling States to the rule of exclusion made by the religious belief of other families. It is a good thing that we can step forth from the eternal circle of small Powers which are rapidly becoming not less of a burden to themselves than they have long been a source of ridicule to the real governing States—a subject for strife to Austria and Prussia, which struggled for their reduction—a means of disquiet to all Europe. Politically, therefore, we really think that no objection can be urged with any show of reason to the contemplated marriage between the Princess Royal and Prince Frederick William.

Parliamentary.

The House commenced its sitting yesterday at 12 o'clock, and was occupied for some hours in disposing of third readings of bills, and other routine business. The General Incorporations bill was then taken up, and reconsidered in Committee of the Whole. An amendment by Mr. Drummond to extend the period for disposing of real estate, acquired by bequest, from six months to two years, was agreed to, with some other minor important amendments, by the same members, to expunge the clause requiring sold all bequests of land not made within six months of the death of the testator, was also agreed to after a warm discussion, on a vote of 41 to 35 in Committee. A proviso moved by Mr. Papin, to annual all bequests of land made during the last sickness of the testator, was negatived.

The Speaker then resumed the chair, and on the question of concurrence, Mr. J. S. Macdonald moved an amendment, restoring the clause struck out in Committee, which was negatived by a majority of 52 to 20. Messrs. Bellingham, Chisholm, Fellowes and Macbeth. voted with the minority. Parliament adjourned at 5 o'clock.

Mr. Crampton in New York.—We regret to learn that there was an attempt, on the part of some of the over-zealous patriots in this city, of the Brooks school, to offer an insult, on Saturday night, to Mr. Crampton, the late British Minister, now in our city, en route to England, by getting up a serenade of tin kettles and implements of that class, in jeering derision, beneath the windows of the British Consul's private residence up town, where Mr. Crampton is residing for the present. This disgraceful design was, however, frustrated by the active vigilance of the Police of the Ward, who remained during the night drawn up and prepared to commit any parties attempting to perpetrate so shameful an outrage.—The character of this country is already sufficiently injured by the Know Nothing without the occasion for others of the crew to inflict on it this additional stigma. Whatever may be our political differences with Mr. Crampton, he is personally, both as the representative of a Power which should be our nearest ally, as a gentleman and a distinguished ability, and most courteous bearing, entitled not alone to the absence of insult, but to the exercise of every kindness and consideration towards him.

Russian Officers and their Revelations.—A French letter from Kamiesch, of the 27th ult., after noticing the preparations for returning home, says—"In the camp everybody impatiently awaits his turn. Hunting excursions in the interior are the principal diversion of the officers. The recent visits of Russian officers to afford them some recreation. The officers of the staff, artillery, engineers, and cavalry are generally well-educated gentlemen. The same, however, cannot be said of the officers of the line. Many of them, after copious libations, too entertain too eastern notion of hospitality, and make themselves too much at home. We are, consequently, obliged to send them back to their quarters. The English and French officers who visit the Russian camp frequently extend their excursions to Simpheropol and Bakhisrai. I attended a few days ago a splendid breakfast given here to twelve Russian officers, five of whom hold a superior rank in the army. Many toasts were drunk, after which they warmly pressed their guests to visit them within their lines. One of them, however, evidently more sharp-sighted on their journey, as Simpheropol and Bakshisrai are at this moment infected with typhus fever. Those officers admitted that the condition of the Russian army was truly deplorable, and that it was indispensable to make peace. Prince Gortschakoff, the Emperor Alexander, they said, was so determined on putting an end to the war, that, after accepting the four Vienna propositions, he issued orders to break up the army and station the different corps as close as possible to the frontiers, in order to facilitate their supplies. These military movements were effected in the month of March, and were attended with serious losses to the Russians. This is not to be wondered at when we remember the frightful snow storms with which we were assailed at that period.—The Russians are astonished to find us living under canvas, and cannot understand how we are able to endure the rigour of winter. 'We men of the North,' they say, 'could not have borne the cold under such a shelter. We require either wooden huts or holes underground.'

Mr. Crampton went to New York on the morning after he received his passport. Mr. Lumley and Mr. Waugh, first and second secretaries of legation, have also gone to New York, where they propose ramining for ten days, when they will return to Washington in an official capacity until after receiving the orders of their Goverment. The legation is thus entirely broken up. We have no doubt the suspension of intercourse will be rendered complete by the dismissal of Mr. Dallas, and that it will continue so until an apology is made, and a new representative from England solicited. A similar course was adopted by Spain some years ago, and England only consented to be represented when an apology and solicitation like that we have named was preferred. Sir H. L. Bulwer had his passports returned on a charge of fomenting a change in the Government. The British Mission remained vacant for two years, and was only finally terminated by an apology from the Spanish Government, and the consequent appointment, by the Palmerston Cabinet, of another Minister, accompanied by an expression of regret that Sir Henry, being employed in confidential service at Washington, could not be restored to the station at Madrid from which he had been expelled.—Montreal Transcript.

Gambling Houses are temples where the most sordid and turbulent passions contend. There a no speculator can be indifferent; a card or a small piece of ivory, interests more than the loss of an Empire, or the ruin of an unoffending group of infants and their nearest relatives.

Mr. Crampton and the three late consuls to the United States, sailed in the steamer Canada on Wednesday for Liverpool. The consul who was resident at New York has given his office temporarily in charge of Mr. Joseph Fowler. The French Minister at Washington is said to sympathise deeply with Mr. Crampton. Some anxiety is naturally felt in the commercial circles of the United States as to the effect which Mr. Crampton's dismissal will produce in England. The general opinion is that it will lead to no disturbance of the existing peaceable relations between the two countries.

Shocking Murder!--Seven Persons Butchered and Burnt.

From the St. Louis Republican, May 28th.

St. Joseph, May 22, 1856.—Last night one of the most diabolical and terrible murders occurred within four miles of this city, that ever shocked a community or outraged humanity.

Mr. Jacob Friend, with his wife and five children, residing in a neat cabin, upon the border of the lake which lies just below our town.

Young Barada was there last evening, left them all in the enjoyment of health and [illegible] passing, and found the house and its inhabitants in ashes.

The news spread like wild-fire, and in a few hours many of the persons from our neighborhood were on the spot.

It was hardly possible that seven persons —a man of 45, a woman of 40, a young man of 13, a girl of 16 and five children could have been burnt from fire originating in the fire place. There were too many ways of escape. The conclusion then, before an examination was that murder, most foul and unnatural, had been busy with his bloody knife, before the fire was ignited.

This conclusion was confirmed by silent evidences which lay around. There, in the corner near the fire-place was a skillet, and there, just in front of the fire-place was another; and where the bed stood, was all of the others—a large one with the smallest clasped in her arms, and the rest clustered near the fire-place, the father and the son.

By one of the latter was a large knife; and by the other a three pronged pitch fork, with points extremely sharpened, and the barrel of a gun; and in front of the other a revolver was found.

The jury of inquest are now sitting.—They have arrived at no further conclusion yet, than that it was a horrible murder.

ARRIVAL OF THE NIAGARA.

Halifax, June 5.

The steamer Niagara arrived at this port last evening.

We publish the most interesting news by the Niagara.

The London money market was rather easier.

Consols for money closed at 94¼ a 94⅝

In the Liverpool cotton market an easier tone had prevailed, especially for the lower grades; but at the close a rather firmer feeling was evinced, and the tendency was towards an improvement. The week's business amounted to about 37,000 bales of which about four-fifths was to the trade.

In breadstuffs a slight decline is noticed on all descriptions, with a limited demand for wheat and flour.

In corn the business had been extensive, and the market at the close was firm at the decline of 6d, a 1s.

Provisions generally were dull at about former rates.

GREAT BRITAIN.

DEBATE IN PARLIAMENT ON THE MARITIME CODE, ETC.

An interesting debate in the House of Lords had taken place on maritime law.

Lord Colchester moved that Parliament disapproves of the conduct of the plenipotentiaries of the Congress held at Paris, for making a random sale, without the knowledge or the sanction of the Parliament, the principle inherent in all belligerent powers, of capturing enemies' goods on board neutral ships.

Lord Clarendon made an able speech in reply, having reference chiefly to the position of the United States. He read a good deal of ex's letter on the subject, calling it moderate and dignified. He defended the course of the British plenipotent aries in giving up a principle which it was impossible to maintain.

Lord Derby, in a strong speech, denounced the abandonment of this ancient privilege, as not only humiliating and derogatory, but dangerous to the interests of England. It was favorable to France, who proposed it, and fatal to Great Britain that assented to it. After further debate, the motion was lost, a majority of 54 against it.

Lord John Russell gave notice, that on Monday he should ask Lord Palmerston a question with a view of ascertaining whether it was the intention of this Government to interfere in the war between Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

The Danish Sound Dues are still unsettled between Great Britain and Denmark. The Gazette contains a Board of Trade notice, stating that the Danish Consuls in all Russian Ports have been instructed to afford the necessary commercial facilities to British subjects until British Consuls can be sent to Russia; also announcing that Carthagena will be deemed a free port from the first of September next.

The London Times thinks the affairs of Central America will compel a combination of Great Britain and the United States for their adjustment. It also states that Mr. Buchanan's statement "that there is nothing to arbitrate," is untenable, and suggests the Emperor of Russia as arbitrator for the United States.

The British press, especially the Times, continues to keep alive the excitement on the Italian question. Lord Lyndhurst has withdrawn his motion in the House of Lords, lest it might prejudice negotiations pending in Italian courts.

The Bank of England, on the 22nd, reduced the rate of discount for bills of more than sixty days from seven to six per cent, short bills remaining at six per cent.

The trial of Palmer for poisoning his sporting friend, Cook, continues. The defence is closed. The case turns mainly on the medical testimony, whether or not the symptoms of death accord with the symptoms of poison by strichnine. The most eminent physicians of Great Britain have given evidence which seems equally balanced for and against the prisoner. The case excites extraordinary interest. The testimony is valuable, as making public that vegetable poisons are readily detected long after death.

FRANCE.

Baron Hubner has presented his credentials as Ministers from Austria. No resident Minister has yet been appointed from Russia—Count Orloff at present performing the duties.

The Princes Maximilian of Austria and Oscar of Sweden have attended a review and the balls given in their honor by the Emperor.

The baptism of the Prince Imperial will take place about the middle of June. The Legislative session will be extended to witness the event.

M. Thiers, historian of the Norman Conquest, died at Paris on the 22nd ult.

SPAIN.

The democrats have brought forward a vote of censure on the government, respecting the recent troubles at Valencia, but it was negatived by a large majority.

PRUSSIA.

A postal convention has been signed between Prussia and the United States.

Herr Von Roschen has been sentenced to five years' imprisonment in the fortress, for his recent duel with the Minister of Police.

DENMARK.

The protocol of the Danish proposition, to which Russia, Sweden and the Duchy of Oldenburg have given their adhesion, is published, bearing date Copenhagen, May 9. It is a lengthy document, its substance being that Denmark will renounce the Sound and Belt dues for thirty-five millions rix dollars. All maritime Powers must give assent, and Denmark is to reserve the right to treat separately with the Powers not represented in the present negotiations. The compensation named covers dues both on shipping and cargo. Denmark demands security for the money, and apportions the same as follows, in round numbers:—Denmark herself to contribute a million two hundred and fifty thousand rix dollars; Austria, 29,000; Belgium, 300,000; Spain, 1,000,000; France, 1,250,000; Great Britain, 10,000,000; Norway, 647,000; Oldenburg, 28,000; Netherlands, 1,500,000; Prussia, 4,500,000; Russia, 9,750,000; Sweden, 1,000,000—total, 31,500,000; leaving a balance of 3,000,000 rix dollars due by Powers not above named. Further, as there exists at present differences between Denmark and Great Britain that may delay a settlement, Russia accepts to keep open her offer on condition of the other Powers doing the same. The document is signed by Blahme, Tengoborski, and Lagerheim.

RUSSIA.

Navigation was opened at St. Petersburg May 18. Commercial advices as yet do not describe any material variation in the course of trade. The rate of exchange at St. Petersburg was steady. The prohibition of exports of gold continued, but was expected soon to be removed.

The Empress Dowager of Russia had arrived, on a visit to her brother, the King of Prussa. The first English steamer bound to Cronstadt, reached the Tyrus, has been laid, with all her cargo, on the Island of Oesil, in the Gulf of Finland.

THE EAST.

The evacuation of the Crimes, by the French proceeds rapidly. Letters to May 10 state that the Russians had hung several Tartars for assisting the allies. Some had been sent to exile, and others condemned to work on the roads for life. The scurvy had appeared in the English Regiments.—A banquet had been given to Sir Colin Campbell, Peace has been proclaimed at Tiflis.

The capture of the Circassian village of Sunech and six thousand cattle, by the Russians, is confirmed.

Letters from Corfu report the Ionian Islands quiet. There is a flourishing crop of olives, and currants promise well.

The patent safe swindlers have commenced operations in Toronto. On Thursday last a wealthy gentleman from Western Canada was operated upon by a couple of young sharpers, who came down in the Great Western cars with him to the Bridge, something after this fashion: The youths were of course apparently strangers to each other, but one of them had become very intimate with the old man who was to be victimized. The other came along and introduced his "little joke," and offered to bet that the ball was in the safe. The stool pigeon was fierce to bet, but had no money by him. He had, however, a check on a Buffalo Bank for $1,200, which he offered the old man as security for a loan of $500 to bet on the ball. The money was loaned, staked and lost, in less time than it takes to tell of it. The winner fled, leaving the loser crying over his loss. The five hundred was gone, and the check for twelve hundred also. The usual ceremony of going for a police officer, and not coming back was gone through with, but the old gentleman finally ascertained that he was "out" $500. He returned home to replenish. Travellers should be on the look out for such characters.—Buffalo Express.

Indiana Banks.—The Indiana Banks are fortifying themselves with silver coin—quarters and halves—with which they propose, hereafter to redeem their issues. This will annoy the assorting brokers, and render the business of returning notes for redemption inconvenient. The brokers contend that silver is not a legal tender, but the bankers regard it differently, and are determined to give it a trial. If it shall prove a legal tender, and the bankers persist in redeeming their paper in all cases with this coin, it will go a great ways.

Man Drowned.—On Saturday last, Dominique Bertrand, of Chataguay, one of Mr. Boyd's men, fell off a crib in the Chonabee River, and before assistance could reach him, he sank to rise no more.—Review.

Quebec Timber Market.

There is still a very limited business doing. Only a few rafts—and that of inferior quality—have arrived in market. The total arrivals from sea are still only 158 vessels, something more than the arrivals at the same time last year; but much short of average at this port. Accounts from the West lead us to xpect that the quantity of timber that would be left behind owing to want of water, was much overated.

White Pine.—A large lot 80 feet average, good quality, was sold early in the week at 9d, and subsequently a superior cargo for a large new ship, average about 70 feet, was sold in shipping order at 9½.—A parcel also of superior quality, 90 feet, was sold in shipping order at 10d. Some small lots of inferior timber (new) 50 to 60 feet average, have been sold at 5d to 6d.

Red Pine.—Is a foot for 40 feet average, in shipping order, is asked, and some small sales have actually been made at that figure.

Elm.—Is very scarce. 40 feet Rock, in shipping order, was sold at 20d, and some holders ask even a higher price for good quality timber.

Deals.—Floated Pine have been disposed of at £12 10s and two-thirds, the purchaser having the advantage of saying the proportion of each quality. By the specification £12, two thirds and one-third is as much as can be had. Bright pine—£13 10s to £14 is a fair quotation; but £15 was paid for all Sets. Spruce are more enquired for at £7 10s £5 10s, and £4 10s.

Staves.—Merchantable Standard have been taken at £65 to £67 10s, according to the proportion of Pipes among them.—Cull Standard dull, at £30 to £42 10s.—Merchantable W O W I £16. Culls dull at £6 10s to £7.

Lathwood.—Some sales have been made at 25s to 27s 6d under peculiar circumstances; but the same prices would not be taken from those regularly in the trade, who will not sell under 32s 6d to 35s.

Oak.—Is plentiful. Best quality Lake St. Clair is held at 1s 7d to 1s 8d, in ship ping order. By the dram transactions have taken place to 1s 6d and 1s 8d. Middling quality offering at 1s to 1s 4d without finding purchasers.

Birch.—Some excitement has been manifested about this article, a sale of 30,000 feet, to average 16 inches, having been made some days ago at 1s 3d. Since that as much as 2s was paid for a selected parcel—all early.

Freights have become every day more dull since the opening of the navigation, there being vessels continually offering and but few charters for them. To Liverpool 31s would be taken. A vessel was chartered for Bristol at 35s and another to London at 30s 6d. A ship to load Deals for London was also taken at £5 15s.—Quebec Gazette.

A Young Man's Character.

No young man, who has a just sense of his own value, will sport with his own character. A watchful regard to his character, in early youth, will be of inconceivable value to him in all the remaining years of his life. When tempted to deviate from strict prop isty of deportment he should ask himself, can I afford this? can I endure hereafter to look upon this?

It is of amazing worth to a young man to have a pure mind; for this is the foundation of a pure character. The mind, in order to be kept pure, must be employed in topics of thought, which are themselves lovely, chaste and elevating. The mind has the power to select its own themes for meditation. If youth only knew how durable and how dismal is the injury produced by the indulgence of degraded thoughts; if they only realized how frightful are the moral depravities which a cherished habit of loose imagination produces on the soul, they would shun them as the bite of a serpent. The power of books to excite the imagination, is a fearful element of morals when employed in the destructive services of vice.

The cultivation of an amiable, elevated and glowing heart, alive to all the beauties of nature, all the sublimities of truth, invigorates the intellect, gives to the will independence of base passions, and to the affections that power of adhesion to whatever is pure, and good, and grand, which is adapted to lead out the whole nature of man into those scenes of action and impression by which its energies may most appropriately be employed, and by which its high destination may be most effectually reached.

The opportunities for exciting these faculties in benevolent and self denying efforts for the welfare of our fellow men are so many and great, that it really is worth while to live, if the heart, and soul is truly evangelically benevolent, may luxuriate in an age like this. The promises of God are inexpressibly rich, the main tendencies of things so manifestly in accordance, with them, the extent of moral influence is so great, and the field of its employment so visible, that whoever aspires after benevolent action, and reaches forth for things that remain for us, to the true dignity of his nature, can find free scope for his intellect, and all inspiring themes for his heart.

In these times of house-cleaning and white-washing, the following article from the New York Commercial Advertiser, will be acceptable to our readers:—

Zinc Preparation for Walls.—A property has been discovered possessed by oxychloride of zinc, which renders it superior to the plaster of Paris for coating the walls of rooms. It is applied in the following manner:—A coat of oxyde of zinc mixed with size, and make up like a white wash, is first laid on the wall, ceiling, or wainscot, and over that a coat of chloride of zinc applied, being prepared in the same way as the first wash. The oxyde and chloride effect an immediate combination, and form a kind of cement, smooth and polished as glass, and possessing all the advantages of oil paint, without its disadvantages of smell, &c. The inventor further suggests the employment of oxy-chloride of zinc as a paint for iron, and also to stop hollow teeth, for which its plasticity and subsequent hardness and irpenetrability to the moisture of the mouth, render it particularly suitable.

Stings of Bees, Serpents, &c.—The pure uncarbonated aqua ammonia, when applied to the stings of bees, mosquitoes, serpents, &c., produces instant relief.

Formidable Insurrection in Hayti

The Boston Traveler of Monday published extracts from a letter bearing date Auo Caves, Hayti, May 10, which states that a formiable insurrection had again broken out in that part of the island against the Emperor Soulouque. The writer says:

"A body of from two to three thousand insurgents took possession of a post between this place and Pingrey last night, with the view of attacking the town to day. The military authorities were only aware of this at 7 o'clock this morning. The alarm drums were immediately beaten, and every male adult in town was ordered to join the troops. At 10 A. M. the troops marched out with citizens who joined them; but being only five hundred strong, it is probable they will not make an attack on the insurgents, but will content themselves with defending the entry of the town till reinforced. A postscript to the letter, under date of 11 a. m., adds:—The alarm drums are again beating. It is said that the troops sent out are repulsed, and the insurgents are pushing forward. People are running distractedly through the streets, closing stores, &c.

The Allies of the Costa Ricans.—One of the prominent officers of the Costa Rican army is a Prussian by the name of Below. He held a command in the army of Blucher when it so opportunely arrived to the aid of Wellington on the field of Waterloo. Some years ago he took part in an emigration scheme to this Continent, which did not however, answer the expectations of its progenitors. Afterwards he too up his residence in Central America. A gentleman who saw him in Honduras several years since, states that he is one of the most expert marksmen he ever saw, and expresses the opinion that if there are many like him in the Costa Rican army, a bloody and doubtful contest is before the force of Gen. Walker and his Nicaraguan allies.—Boston Traveller.

A Fool's Answer.—As a gentleman was walking near Edinburgh one day, he met one of those beings usually called fools 'Pray,' said the professor accosting him, 'how long can a person live without brains?' 'I dinna ken,' replied the fellow scratching his head; "how long have you lived yirsel, Sir ?"

Railroad Earnings.—The earnings of the Michigan Central Railroad for the third week in may 1856, were: Passengers $37, 111 37, freight $30,979 01. Total $68,090 38. Total $68,090 38. Total of the same week last year $62,239 63. Increase $5,853 99.

The total earnings for the Great Western Railway for the week ending May 31st, 1856, were $50,727 79½ against $36,773 16½ for the corresponding period last year, being an increase of $13,954 63.

A western editor whose subscriber complained very loudley that he did not give them news enough for their money, told them that if they did not find enough in the paper they had better read the Bible which he had no doubt would be news to most of them.

Deplorable Accident.—On Wednesday last, as Mr. Benjamin Reynolds, in the employ of Mr. Sam. Dickson, was oiling the engine in the mill, his left arm was caught by the shaft, and so seriously bruised that amputation had to be peformed. The operation was performed by Drs. Burnham and McNab.—Review.

Courageous Woman.—In Jersey City, a few days since, a bold attempt was made at robbery. About midnight the lady of the house woke up, and seeing the burglar, demanded the cause of his intrusion, when he stepped to her bed side, and raising his clenched fist, said: "Lie still, or I'll take your life!" "Take my life!" responded our undaunted heroine, "take care that you don't have your own taken!" and suiting the action to the word, she said, "John, hand me that pistol!" Now, although there was no John in the room, (the heroic lady being all alone,) yet her Spartan courage had the desired effect, and the burglar, with several of his accomplices, fled from the premises without carrying off any booty.

Montreal, June 10.

About half-past one o'clock to-day, the ferryboat of the Grand Trunk Railroad exploded at Longueuil. She is a complete wreck; her boiler was blown an immense distance on the warf, and everything in the neighbourhood completely shattered. The works of the boat were entirely new, and were under the charge of the builder's engineer at the time of the accident. The train had just arrived, filled with passengers, who had been all transferred to the boat. The scene of the explosion was fearful. The steam rushed to the back part of the boat so as to completely blind those that were there. Many rushed hither and thither, shrieking hideously; while others jumped into the river, where many were doubtless drowned. A woman, who was near the boiler, had her child, five months old, blown out of her arms, and carried up into the air, coming down on the top of the freight shed she herself was dreadfully injured, and since died. Immediately after the explosion, the boat sank. It is thought not less than twenty persons have perished, thirty or forty injured. The following are known to be killed:—Two engineers; Mr. Madden, mail conductor; the pilot of the boat; a boy named Hunter; two firemen; a woman from St. Hayacinthe; Mr. Schofield, engineer to the Grand Trunk Railway. Baillera, belonging the American line of steamers, was so badly injured, that he expired while being brought across the river. Injured—Mr. Pierce, express messenger, one leg broken, and badly scalded; the Captain of the boat, not exactly known; Mr. K. McQuaig, of Glengary, seriously injured; Narcesse Perrault, from Warwick, eastern townships, badly scalded; Major Johnston and lady were thrown into the river, and escaped with slight injuries. To-morrow, we shal give further particulars.

A boarder at one of the hotels was recently observed to shed tears when the cheese was passed. Upon being asked the cause of this agitation, he replied that 'the cheese was a very moving sight!'

Agriculture and Science.

Charring Timber for Fences.

A great objection to the common board or picket fence, as compared with walls, is the certainty of the rotting of the lower parts of the posts, in the ground. After a few years they have rotted away almost to nothing, and the fence leans and sags wherever a post has given out. There is one very effectual remedy for preventing this, which should be more frequently noticed and practised by farmers than it is at present. This consists of charring the bottoms of the posts.

The preservative qualities of charcoal are well known. It is not affected by moisture, and hence the extremities of posts properly charred, and placed in the ground, will not decompose. The incorruptibility of charcoal was well known to the ancients, and they availed themselves of this property on all important occasions.

About 60 years ago, a quantity of oak stakes were found in the bed of the Thames, England, in the very spot where Tacitus says that the Britons fixed a vast number of such stakes to prevent the passage of Julius Cæsar and his army. These stakes were charred to a considerable depth, had retained their form completely, and were firm at the heart.

Pines or wood, which have not been previously charred for their preservation. In England, estates were formerly marked out by charred stakes driven to a considerable depth in the ground.

How to Determine the Height a Colt will attain when Full Grown.—When the colt gets to be three weeks old, or as soon as it is perfectly straightened in its limbs, measure from the edge of the hair on the hoofs to the middle of the first joint and for every inch it will grow to the height of a hand of four inches, when it is matured. Thus, if this distance be found sixteen inches, it will make a horse sixteen hands high. By this means a man may know something of what sort of a horse, with proper care, he is to expect from his colt.

To Agriculturists.—In her increase, the moon supplies more directly to the atmosphere; hence all vegetation which depends upon the atmospheric electricity chiefly for nourishment should be sown, planted, or set, near the second quarter, they grow thrifty, but seldom bear much flowers or fruit—to yield best, seed should be sown, fruit trees set or pruned, some four or two days before the full moon. If such vegetables or trees are sown, &c., after the full they seldom realize expectation; but esculent roots, potatoes, onions, beets, &c. depending for nourishment on terrestial magnetism instead of atmospheric electricity, do best when sown or planted in the decreasing moon,—Rainbow.

Copper Castings.—An English brazier has patented a method of casting copper cylinders and vessels for which purpose he employs a mould of iron, sand, loam, or other suitable material, the core of which is cupial parts—the bottom, outside jacket or mould, and the core. The core is supported at one end by a pin in its centre, falling into a hole into the bottom, and at the other end by another pin passing through a crossbead attached to the top of the mould, so that the core is held in a suitable position in relation to the outer mould, the space between the core and the outer mould is to be made close at one end, and at the other to be open, so that a continuous passage or 'git' is provided for the flow of the melted metal into the mould, a sufficient supply of which is to be kept up to keep this git closed, so that the space between the inner surface of the melted metal and the end of the chamber intended to receive it shall be excluded from communication with the atmosphere at the opposite end to the inlet or git end; a communication is to be made with a partially exhausted chamber, or an exhaust pump or pumps, so that the air in the chamber between the surface of the melted metal and the end of the mould may be kept in a partially exhausted state, in order to facilitate the flow of the melted metal into it.

To Prevent Cutlery from Rusting.—Case knives, watch chains, and other small articles made of steel, may be preserved from rust, by being carefully wiped after use, and then wrapped in coarse brown paper, the virtue of which is such that all hardware goods from Sheffield and other renowned places of manufacture are always wrapped in the same.

For Kicking Cows.—Take a short strap and fasten the end together. Next prepare a pin of some soft wood, about 6 or 8 inches long, 1½ inches in diameter. Take the cow by the off fore-leg, and double it at the knee joint close; pass the strap or loop over the knee, pressing it back until you can insert the pin between the bend of the joint, and she cannot kick.—J. B. T.

The following method for remedying smoky chimneys is recommended in the London Critic: A revolving fan is placed vertically in the opening of a small, compact, moving cowl, fixed on the chimney-top. The gentlest current of air sets this fan in motion, creating an upward draught in the chimney, preventing the return of smoke, sparks, vapours, etc., into the apartment, and also the falling of soot and rain.

Apple Syrup.—Take a dozen fine semi-acid ripe apples, pare and cut them into thin slices, and put them into a stone bottle with a gill of water and one and a half pounds of powdered sugar. Cork the bottle and boil it quite fast in a kettle of hot water (a better way is to put the bottle containing the apples and water into a pot of cold water which may be heated), and then put it into wide necked bottles for use.

Apple Custard.—Take large and fair tart apples, core them, and fill the openings with sugar, put them into a well tinned pan scatter sugar, on the whole and flavor with lemon peel orange, or cinnamon.—Bake until soft, then put them in a dish, and pour over them a custard made of eggs and milk in proportion of four of the former to one quart of the latter.

TILES, TILES,

THE Public are respectfully informed that M. & J. L. WHITEHOUSE are Manufacturing and have on hand a large quantity of Tiles, for Draining Cellars, Farms, &c., at their Brick Yard, Westminster, two miles from Hamilton, and a part of a mile from Mr. J. Nellis's Tavern, at First Toll Gate on the Hamilton Road, which they will sell at the Low Price of £4 per 1000 with Sole or Bottom, without Cap or Top will be found to be much cheaper than any other Material for Draining, as they facilitate greatly in the labor, also in the expense of Ditching, only requiring a Drain the width of the Spade and when put down will never require removing. Samples may be seen and orders received at the Store of Mr. J. Pitzell, corner of Richmond and Dundas Streets, London.

Also Roofing Tiles and Press Bricks for fronting Buildings of a superior quality.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,
AND JOURNAL OF SUBURBAN ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the United States.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced. The growing interest with which the rising generation view the science of Horticulture, renders such a Journal as "The Illustrated Horticulturist" imperatively necessary to the progress of Rural affairs.

Rural Architecture forms one of the principal features; each number contains from two to four engravings of model cottages, from designs by eminent and skilful architects. Space has been assigned to the useful art of Landscape Gardening, engraved plans of gardens in every style, and adapted to the peculiarities of different orders of architecture, beautifies the work.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and to all who can boast the sovereignty of a square rod of tillable earth, "The Illustrated Horticulturist" in connection with "Downing's Fruit" will prove an invaluable companion. The extraordinary low price at which it is afforded; together with its really superior execution, both in regard to typographic and editorial ability, must make it the most popular work of the kind in America.

"The Illustrated Horticulturist" is printed on fine finely calendered paper, manufactured expressly. It is issued regularly the first of each month, commencing with July, 1855. The following gentlemen, eminent for their ability in the Science of Horticulture, are engaged to conduct the Editorial department: H. P. Knight, James Snowden and D. W. Ray.

Terms.—Two dollars per annum, payable invariably in advance; a liberal discount to the Trade, Postmasters, and getters-up of Clubs.

Advertisements inserted at the rate of Ten Dollars per page.

N.B.—Newspapers inserting the above prospectus, and drawing attention editorially to the same, will be forwarded the Illustrated Horticulturist for one year, a copy containing the advertisement should be sent in all cases to ensure attention.

NEW VOLUME OF THE
AGRICULTURIST

SUBSCRIPTION REDUCED FROM 25 TO 50 PER CENT.

The Canadian Agriculturist

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by its present proprietor in 1848, and is too well known and long favoring farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us. The undersigned have made arrangements with the proprietor to publish the next, and probably succeeding volumes, and is enabled to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE
Illustrated with Engravings

Such as Farm Implements, Portraits of Animals, Designs of Farm Buildings, New Inventions, &c. &c. Interesting to the Farmer, and also portraits of some of the most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM MACDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the practice of Agriculture near Toronto. The active promoter of the various improvements made in our Agricultural Legislation since 1847, and having also been connected with this Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and writings in behalf of Canadian Agriculture are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to its columns as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to extend the correspondence on subjects of a practical kind.

THE AGRICULTURIST IS NOT LIABLE TO POSTAGE.

AYER'S
PILLS
Are curing the Sick to an extent never before known of any Medicine.
INVALIDS, READ AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES.

JULES HAUEL, Esq., the well known perfumer, of Chemist Corner, Philadelphia, whose choice articles are found at almost every toilet, says:

"I can bear my testimony to your Cathartic Pills, that I have found them a better family medicine, for common use, than any other within my knowledge." Many of my friends have realized marked benefits from them, and coincide with me in believing that they possess remarkable purifying virtues for driving out diseases and curing the sick. They are not only effectual, but safe and pleasant to be taken—qualities which must make them valued by the people when they are known."

The venerable Chancellor WARDLAW writes from Baltimore, 15th April, 1854:

"Dr. J. C. Ayer.—Sir: I have taken your Pills with great benefit, for the listlessness, languor, loss of appetite, and bilious headache, which has of late years overtaken me in the spring. A few doses of your Pills cured me. I have used your Cherry Pectoral many years in my family for coughs and colds with unfailing success. You make a medicine which can't be beat; and I feel it a pleasure to commend you for the good you have done and are doing."

JOHN F. BEATTY, Esq., late of the Penn. Railroad Co., writes:

"Sir: I take pleasure in adding my testimony to the efficacy of your medicines, having derived very material benefit from the use of both your Pectoral and Cathartic Pills. I am never without them in my family, nor shall I ever consent to be, while my means will procure them."

The widely renowned S. S. STEVENS, M. D., of Westworth, N. H., writes:

"Having used your Cathartic Pills in my practice, I have found your Cherry Pectoral many years in my family certify from experience that they are invaluable purifiers. In cases of disordered functions of the liver, causing pain, headache, indigestion, costiveness, and the whole train of diseases arising from a torpid liver, no other remedy than any of these pills will be found to be adequate, and long acting."

"Never until now have I been free from this loathsome disease in some shape. At times it attacked my eyes, and made me fear blindness; then it would settle in one of my thumbs, and swell up and discharge matter for months; then it would break out in my face, and keep it for months a raw sore. At last some weeks ago I commenced using your Cathartic Pills, and now am entirely free from the complaint. My system and my skin is clear, and I feel as if a new man. I commenced a healthy growth; all of which makes me feel thankful as I can be."

"Hoping this statement may be the means of conveying information that shall do good to others, I am, with every sentiment of gratitude, Yours, &c.,

MARY A. RICKER."

"I have known the above named Maria Ricker from her childhood, and her statement is strictly true.

SAMUEL REVERE,
Overseer of the Portsmouth Manufacturing Co."

Capt. Joel Pitcher, of the ship Marion, writes from Boston, 30th April, 1854:

"Your Pills have relieved me from a bilious attack which arose from derangement of the Liver, which had become very much obstructed. I tried of my own free will, myself, and from every remedy I could try; but a few doses of your Pills relieved me entirely, and in a short length. I have given them to my children for worms, with the best effects. They were pronounced by Dr. Ellis, the family physician to a friend for costiveness, which had troubled him for years. He told me that he had never found anything equal. You make the best medicine in the world, and I am free to say so."

Read this from the distinguished Solicitor of the Supreme Court, whose brilliant abilities have made him well known, and who is himself one of the ablest writers:

"New Orleans, 7th April, 1854.

"Sir: I have great pleasure in adding my name to that myself and family have been very much benefited by your medicines. My wife suffered for years with a severe and dangerous cough, by your Cherry Pectoral, she has been entirely relieved, and though my children have several times been cured from attacks of the Influenza and Croup, by your Pectoral, its invigorating tonic effects these complaints. Your Cathartic Pills have entirely cured me from a dyspepsia and costiveness, which has proven a source of misery to me—leaving the tone of my system much more important, from the fact that I had failed to get relief from the best physicians in this city and many of the country friends, and from any of the numerous remedies I had tried.

"You owe to us, Doctor, like a providential blessing to our family, and you have our best wishes for your high mindedness.

Yours respectfully,
LEAVITT THAXTER."

"Scioto Chronicler, Ohio, April 5th, 1854.

"Dr. J. C. Ayer.—Sir: I have been afflicted with a severe cough trial of the Cathartic Pills, left me by your agent, which have been cured by them of the dreadful Consumption under which he found me suffering. The first dose he blessed me, and a few subsequent doses have entirely removed the disease. I feel in honor bound to say this, for some years before, which I attribute entirely to the effects of your medicines. Yours truly,

LUCIUS B. METCALF."

The above are all from persons well known to the town where they reside, and who would not make these statements without the fullest conviction that they are true.

Poetry.

The Gipsey Maid.

BY FRANK FREELOVE.

In the bright dawn of youth,
When the lips utter truth,
Ere the heart hath yet learned deceit,
O would that the hour
Had been fraught with the power
Of retaining me still at thy feet.

Then the wild gipsey maid
Would never have strayed,
And afar o'er the wide world roam—
Through the haunts of mankind,
Ever searching to find
A nook, where the heart feels at home.

But the Romany child
Had a heart dancing wild
To the music that called her away;
And though pleasant was the dream,
By the dashing, bright stream,
Her tent was but pitched for a day.

And when the pale youth,
With his heart full of truth,
And his brain full of thought, seeks the glade,
Does he dream of the night,
In the witching moonlight,
He first met the dark gipsey maid?

The Crazy Engineer.

FROM THE REPORT OF A PRUSSIAN CONDUCTOR.

BY HORACE P. STANFORD.

My train left Danzing in the morning, generally at eight o'clock, but once a week we had to wait for the arrival of the steamer from Stockholm. It was on the morning of the steamer's arrival that I came down from my hotel and found that my engineer had been so seriously injured that he could not run. One of the railway carriages had run over him and broken one of his legs.—I went immediately to the engine house to obtain another engineer, for I knew there were three or four in reserve there; but I was disappointed. I inquired for Weyhal, and was informed that he had gone to Steegen to see his mother. Goudolpho had been sent on to Konigsberg on that road. But where was Mayne? He had leave of absence for two days, and had gone, no one knew whither.

Here was a fix. I heard the puffing of the steamer in the Neufahrwasser, and the passengers would be on hand in fifteen minutes. I ran to the guard and asked them if they knew where there was an engineer. but they did not. I then went to the firemen, and asked if any one of them felt competent to run the engine to Bromberg. Not one of them dared attempt it. The distance was nearly one hundred miles.—What was to be done?

The steamer came to her wharf, and those who were going on by rail came flocking to the station. They had eaten breakfast on board the boat, and were all ready for a fresh start. The baggage was checked and registered; the tickets bought; the different carriages pointed out to the various classes of passengers, and the passengers themselves seated. The train was in readiness in the long station house, and the engine was steaming and puffing away impatiently in the distant firing-house.

It was past nine o'clock.

"Come—why don't we start?" growled an old fat Swede, who had been watching me narrowly for the last fifteen minutes.

And upon this there was a general chorus of anxious inquiry, which soon settled into downright murmuring. At this juncture, my eye touched upon the elbow.—I turned and saw a stranger standing by my side. I expected he was going to remonstrate with me for my backwardness.—In fact, I began to have strong temptations to pull off my uniform, for every anxious eye was fixed upon the glaring lamps which marked me as the chief official of the train.

However—this stranger was a middle-aged man, tall and stout, with a face expressive of great energy and intelligence.—His eye was black and brilliant—so brilliant that I could not, for the soul of me, gaze steadily into it; and his lips, which were very thin, seemed more like polished marble than like human flesh. His dress was of black throughout, and not only fitted with exact nicety, but was scrupulously clean and neat.

"You want an engineer, I understand," he said, in a low, cautious tone, at the same time gazing quietly about him, as though he wanted no one else to hear what he said.

"I do," I replied. "My train is all ready, and we have no engineer within twenty miles of here."

"Well, sir—I am going to Bromberg—I must go,—and if you can find none other I will run the engine for you."

"Ha! Is it true? are you an engineer?"

"I am, sir—one of the oldest in the country; and I am now on my way to Berlin to make arrangements for a great improvement I have invented in the application of steam to locomotion. My name is Martin Kroller. If you wish I will run you as far as Bromberg; and I will show you running that is running."

Was I not fortunate? I determined to accept the man's offer at once, and so I told him. He received my answer with a nod and smile, and then proposed to go and get the engine. I went with him to the house where we found the iron horse in charge of the fireman, and all ready for the start. Kroller got upon the platform, and I followed him. I had never seen a man betray such peculiar aptness amid the machinery than he did. He let on the steam in an instant, but yet with care and judgment, and he backed up to the baggage carriage with the most exact nicety. I had seen enough to assure me that he was thoroughly acquainted with the business, and I felt composed once more. I gave the signal up to my new man, and then hastened away to the office. The word was passed for all passengers to take their seats, and soon afterwards I waved my hand to the engineer. There was a puff—a groaning of the heavy axletrees—a trembling of the building—and the train was in motion. I leaped upon the platform of the guard carriage, and in a few moments more the station house was behind us.

In less than an hour we reached Dirschau, where we took up the passengers that had come in on the Konigsberg railway. Here I went forward and asked Kroller how he liked the engine. He replied that he liked it much.

"But," he added, with a strange sparkling of the eyes, "wait until you get my improvements, and then you shall see travelling. By the soul of the Virgin Mother, sir, I could run an engine of my construction to the moon in four-and-twenty hours!"

I smiled at what I thought his quaint enthusiasm, and then went back to my station. As soon as the Konigsberg passengers were all on board, and their baggage crate attached, we started on again.

As soon as all matters had been attended to connected with the new accession of passengers, I went into the guard-carriage and sat down. An early train from Konigsberg had been through two hours before, reaching Bromberg, and that was at Little Oscue, where we took the western mail.

"How we go!" uttered one of the guard, some fifteen minutes after we had left Dirschau.

"The new engineer is trying the speed," I returned, not yet holding any fear.

But ere long, I began to be fearful, that he was running a little too fast. The carriages began to sway to and fro, and I could hear the exclamations of fear from the passengers.

"Good heavens!" cried one of the guard, coming in at that moment, "what is that fellow doing? Look, sir, and see how we are going!"

I looked at the window and found that we were dashing along at a speed never before travelled on that road. Posts, fences, rocks, and trees, flew by in one undistinguishable mass, and the carriage now swayed fearfully. I started to my feet, and met a passenger on the platform. He was one of the chief officers of the road, and was just on his way to Berlin. He was pale and excited.

"Sir," he gasped, "is Martin Kroller on the engine?"

"Yes," I told him.

"Holy Virgin! didn't you know him?"

"Know him?" I repeated somewhat puzzled.

"What do you mean? He told me his name was Kroller, and that he was an engineer. We had no one to run the engine, and—"

"You took him?" interrupted the man. "Good heavens, sir, he is as crazy as a man can be! He turned his brain over a new plan for applying steam power. I saw him at the station, but I did not then recognize him, as I was in a hurry. Just now one of the passengers told me that your engineers were all gone this morning, and that you found one that was a stranger to you.—Then I knew that the man whom I had seen, was Martin Kroller! He has escaped from the hospital at Stettin. You must get him off somehow."

The whole fearful truth was now open to me. The speed of the train was increasing every moment, and I knew that a few more miles per hour would surely launch us all into destruction. I called to the guard, and then made my way forward as quickly as possible. I reached the after platform of the after tender, and there stood Kroller, upon the engine-board, his hat and coat off; his long black hair floating wildly in the wind; his shirt unbuttoned at the throat; his sleeves rolled up; with a pistol in his teeth, and thus glaring upon the fireman who lay motionless upon the fuel. The furnace was stuffed till the very latch of the door was red hot, and the whole engine was quivering and swaying as though it would shiver in pieces!

"Kroller! Kroller!" I cried at the top of my voice.

The crazy engineer started, and caught the pistol in his hand. Oh! how those great black eyes glared, and how ghastly and frightful the face looked!

"Ha! ha! ha!" he pulled, demonically, glaring upon me like a roused lion. "They swore I could not make it! But see! see! See my power! See my new engine! I made it! I made it!—and they were jealous of me. I made it, and when they were done they stole it from me! But I've found it. For years I've been wandering in search of my great engine—and they swore it was not made! But I've found it! I knew it when I saw it this morning at Danzing—and I was determined to have it. And I've got it! Ho! ho! ho!—we're off to the moon, I say! By the Virgin Mother we'll be in the moon in four-and-twenty hours! ——Down! down, villain! If you move I'll shoot you!"

This last was spoken to the poor fireman who at that moment attempted to rise; and the frightened man sank back again.

But even as he spoke, the buildings were at hand. A sickening sensation settled upon my heart, for I supposed we were gone now. The houses flew by like lightning—I knew if the officers here had turned the switch as usual, we should be hurled into eternity in one fearful earth! I saw a flash—it was another engine—I closed my eyes—but still we thundered on. The officers had seen our speed, and knowing that we could not halt up at that distance, they had changed the switch, so that we kept on.

But there was sure death ahead if we did not stop. Only fifteen miles ahead was the town of Schwetz, on the Vistula, and at the entrance near the bank of the river, was a short curve in the road! And at the rate we were now going we should be there in a few minutes, for each minute carried us over a mile! The shrieks of the passengers now arose above the crash of the rails, and more terrific than all else, arose the demoniac yells of the mad engineer.

"Merciful heaven!" gasped the guardman, "there's not a moment of time to lose. Schwetz is close by! If you dare not go, I'll go myself! But hold!" he added. "Let's shoot him!"

At that moment a tall, stout German student came over to the platform where we stood, and he saw that the madman had his heavy pistol aimed at us. He grasped a heavy stick of wood from the tender, and with a steadiness of nerve which I could not have commanded, he hurled it with such force and precision, that he knocked the pistol from the maniac's grasp. I saw the movement, and on the instant that the pistol fell I sprang forward, and the German followed me. I grasped the man by the arm, but—I wish I had have been a more infuriated man myself than I have been since, he would have hurled me from the platform, had not the student at that moment struck him upon the head with a stick of wood which he had caught as he came over the tender.

Kroller settled down like a dead man, and on the next instant, I shut off the steam, and opened the safety-valve. As the freed steam shrieked and howled in its escape, the speed of the train began to decrease, and in a few moments more, the danger was passed; and as I settled back, entirely overcome by the wild emotions that had raged within me, we began to turn the curve by the river; and before I was fairly recovered the fireman had stopped the train in the station house at Schwetz!

Martin Kroller still insensible, was taken from the platform, and as we carried him into the guard-room, one of the guard recognized him and told us that he had been there about two weeks before.

"He came," said the guard, "and swore that an engine should stand there, was his. He said it was one he had made to go to the moon in, and that it had been stolen from him. We sent for more help to arrest him, and he fled."

"Well," I replied with a shudder, "I wish he had approached me in the same way. But he was more cautious at Danzig."

At Schwetz we found an engineer to run the engine to Bromberg; and having taken out the western mail, for the next northern train to take along, we saw that Kroller was properly attended to, and then started on.

The rest of the trip we run in safety, tho' I could see that the passengers were not wholly at ease, and would not be until they were entirely clear of the railway. A heavy purse was made up by them for the German student, and he accepted it with much gratitude,—and I was glad of it, for the current of their gratitude to him may have prevented a far different current which might have been poured upon my head for having engaged a madman to run a railway train.

But this is not the end. Martin Kroller remained insensible from the effects of that blow upon the head, nearly two weeks, and when he recovered from that, he was sound in mind again. His insanity was all gone. I saw him about three weeks afterwards, but he had no recollection of me. He remembered nothing of the past year—not even his mad freak on my engine.

But I remembered it, and I remember it still; and people need never fear that I shall ever be imposed upon again by a crazy engineer!

Miscellany.

A TOUCHING NARRATIVE.—After whirling for some time in the extactic mzaes of a delightful waltz Cornelia Adamanda and myself stepped out unobserved on the balcony, to enjoy a few of those moments of solitude so precious to lovers. It was a glorious night—the air cool and refreshing. As I gazed on the beautiful being at my side, I thought I never saw her look so lovely; the full moon cast her bright ray over her white person, giving her an almost angelic appearance; and imparting to her flow curls a still more golden hue. One of of her soft, fair hands rested in mine, and ever anon she met my ardent gaze with one of pure confiding love. Suddenly a change came over her soft features, her full, red lip trembled as it struck in repressed emotion, a tear-drop rested on her long droping lashes, the muscles around her faultless mouth became convulsed, the eyes assumed a glassy appearance, she gasped for breath—and snatched her hand from the warm pressure of my own, she turned suddenly away, buried her face in her fine cambrick handkerchief, and—sneezed.

Marriage on First Sight.

A Couple presented themselves at the office of Judge Hill the night before last, at six o'clock just as he was about to close his office. They wanted they said, to engage his services in a little affair which they wanted to come off immediately.

'Where is your license?' 'We have none,' replied Jemmy. 'Well, you will have to procure one before I can consent to make you one flesh,' replied the Judge. Jemmy, upon being told where he could procure the requsite document, shot out of the office in 2.40 time. While the groom was absent his Honor made the following queries to the bride elect; 'How long have you known this man?' 'since this mornin', your worship,' she replied. 'You do not intend to marry a man on such short acquaintance, do you?' he asked. 'In good faith and truth I do that same; yer honor.

It is the first offer I ever had, and they say that marriages are made in heaven.—Sure it's all a lottery any how, d'ye mind?' queried the Judge. 'Why yes see, yer honor, just as I was coming off the boat, and while I was looking after my things this mornin,' the sweet jintleman came to me and sez he. 'Well,' says he, 'I am a lone man and I want a wife.' 'So you see, yer honor, we just took to one another naturally.' About this time the groom returned with the documents, and the parties were made one. The bride was kissed by the deputy Judge, and all hands left the office in high spirits.

THIEVES AMONG THE MONKEYS.—In the accomplishment of bad purposes, thieves often display a degree of industry and ingenuity which, if exercised in a more worthy cause, would earn for them an honest, comfortable livelihood. The Italian organ-grinders of London have devised a new plan of theft, in which monkeys, trained for the purpose assist. The monkey, having plenty of length of cord, is allowed to enter the windows of an unoccupied dining or drawing-room, and immediately returns, bringing to his master such articles of property from there, as he is able to carry. The master receives and conceals them about his person and makes off with his booty.—Post.

DUMB SHOW.—Lord Seaforth, who was born deaf and dumb, was to dine one day with Lord Melville. Just before the time of the company's arrival, Lady Melville sent into the drawing-room a lady of her acquaintance, who could talk with her fingers to dumb people, that she might receive Lord Seaforth. Presently Lord Guilford entered the room; and the lady, taking him for Lord Seaforth, began to ply her fingers very nimbly. Lord Guilford did the same; and they had been carrying on a conversa. tion in this manner for about ten minutes, when Lady Melville joined them. Her female friend immediately said: "Well, I have been talking away to this dumb man." "Dumb!" cried Lord Guilford; "bless me, I thought you were dumb." I told this story (which is perfectly true) to Matthews; and he said that he could make excellent use of it at one of his evening entertainments; but I know not if ever he did.—Roger's Table Talk.

A GALLANT ROOSTER.—A notable housewife towards the other end of the town, and whose taste in flowers and shrubs is admired by many who pass her dwelling, has a goodly exhibition of poultry. For some months past, the family have been a good deal mystified to find eggs carried off from the nests, and attempted in one part or another of the barn. This matter received its elucidation last week. The lady has a pair of Bantams, and she had set the hen on some eggs in a barrel laid on its side. One morning a huge rat was found stretched in the barrel, evidently killed by the vigorous application of the bill and spurs of the heroic mate of the little thing confined by the duties of incubation. It is fairly referred that the rat attempted to get an egg from under the hen, and its cries were answered by its proper defender with an effect that could scarce have been expected from so tiny a member of the Gallinaceous family. So might it be with all marauders.—St. Catherine's Journal.

STEAMERS FOR RUSSIA.—During the past fortnight, agents from Russia have visited the Tyne, with the view of purchasing tug steamers to be employed at Cronstadt and the Baltic. Eight steam vessels have been disposed of by the Tyne owners for the purpose; and the Royal Albert, the Wallace, the Powerful, the Volga and the Alexander, have sailed. The North of Europe Company are also building iron vessels of light draught of water upon the Tyne for Baltic trade. They will be propelled by pressure engines, and will be fitted with the view of navigating shallow water. During the past few days a large number of foreign vessels have reached the Tyne from various parts of the Baltic. A considerable number of large American vessels are in the Tyne, at the present moment taking in coal.

THE CANADIAN MAIL-LINE OF OCEAN STEAMERS.—The good passages made by these steamers have extorted complimentary notices from the New York press. The New York Herald of Wednesday last contains the following:—

"The new Canadian Line of Steamers.—The new line of propellers running between Quebec and Liverpool, is already distinguishing itself by the rapidity and regularity of its passages. The Canadian which made the first trip of the season, brought us four days' later news from Europe. The second vessel of the line arrived on the same day as the Fulton, and was very near participating her advices; and yesterday we had telegraphed to us from Quebec the arrival of the Indian, with four days' later intelligence. The Boston and New York paddle-wheel lines will have to look sharp, or they will be shorn of their hard-earned reputations by their Canadian rival. Quebec bids fair to become one of the principal points of intelligence between this country and Europe.

"The New York Commercial Advertiser also draws attention to the matter in somewhat similar terms.

We are happy to learn that provision is to be made by Government for a boat to take the news from the steamer at Riviere du Loup, and so give us the intelligence she brings some hours earlier than now. When the vessels come through the Straits of Belleisle, and their news is telegraphed from Riviere du Loup, we may hope to have it in ten days from Liverpool. The successful establishment of this Canadian line of steamers, and furnishing news by them to our Southern neighbors, marks a new and important era in the social and commercial history of Canada.—Mont. Gazette.

GOOD NEWS.—The London (C. W.) Atlas has been informed by the most reliable authority, that the estate of Kermott & Co. will pay every cent of its liabilities, and after doing so, a handsome surplus of Mr. Strong's property will be left. [Thank Providence—from a creditor!]

There are more than eight thousand miles of railway in Great Britain, costing some two hundred millions of pounds. The tunnels are more than fifty miles in extent, and the earth works measure fifty-five millions of cubic yards. The number of miles of telegraph wires is thirty six thousand—an increase of fifty fold in a period of only seven years.

Men are not attracted by highly accomplished women so much as by truly natural and artless women—women sufficiently well educated to be able to speak and write accurately, and sufficiently childish not to despise common things.

A tall keen-eyed countryman stepped into the Court Room, at Detroit, the other day during the progress of the Railroad Trial. Stepping up to the spectator he requested that the prisoners might be pointed out to him. The man he accosted being somewhat of a wag pointed towards the jury. The fellow scanned the twelve with his interesting eye, and when satisfied with the scrutiny, turned to his informer and whispered, "well, they are a hard looking set, ain't they! I know by their looks they ought to go to the States Prison every one of them."

WOULDN'T COME WHEN SOBER.—Three or four times a couple appeared before a clergyman for marriage; but the bridegroom was drunk, and he refused to tie the knot. Or the last occasion he expressed his surprise that so respectable a looking girl was not ashamed to appear at the altar with a man in such a state. The poor girl broke into tears, and said she could not help it.—"And why, pray?" inquired the minister. "Because, sir, he won't come when he is sober!"

At a public meeting at Chicago on Saturday, fifteen thousand dollars were raised to assist Kansas free state emigrants and their families.

COULDN'T DO IT.—Blitz had a bright little fellow on the stand to assist him in his "experiments."

"Sir," said the signor, "do you think I could put the twenty-five cent piece, which the lady holds, into your coat pocket?"

"No," said the boy, confidently.

"Think not?"

"I know you couldn't," said the little fellow, with great firmness.

"Why not?"

"Cause the pocket is all torn out!"

'Bobby, what does your father do for a living?'

'He's a philantrophist, sir.'

'A what?'

'A philantrophist. He collects money for Central Africa, and builds houses out of the proceeds.'

NOT VICIOUS BUT PLAYFUL.—'Is your horse perfectly gentle, Mr. Trotter?'

'Perfectly gentle, sir. The only fault he has got—is a playful habit of extending his hinder hoofs; 'you don't mean kicking, I hope?' 'Some people call it kicking, Mr. Green; but it is only a slight re-action of the muscles—a disease rather than a vice.' Exit Green.

The report of a Spanish fleet to be sent against Mexico is confirmed. The object is to compel the payment of certain old claims, once acknowledged but now repudiated.

Provincial Parliament.

GRAND TRUNK SCHEME.

The house then again resolved itself into committee on Mr. Cayley's Grand Trunk resolutions—Mr. Gamble in the chair.

Mr. Chapais spoke in favour of the road to Trois Pistoles, as a most important undertaking, scarcely inferior to any of the public works of the Province. He considered that Lower Canada had within itself much greater elements of prosperity than Upper Canada.

Hon. Mr. Cartier (in French) spoke at some length in support of the resolutions and traced the history of the Grand Trunk Railway, giving an account of those lines which had been already opened for service, and of those which would be opened in a short time in Lower Canada. He contended that it would be imperative on the Company—under the new arrangement—to complete those lines.

Mr. Bellingham asked the hon. Attorney General a question in reference to £20,000, which the Inspector General had told the house had been granted to the Company to purchase the right of roadway from Stratford to Sarnia. He (Mr. Bellingham) had gone to the office of the Provincial Secretary, where he had ascertained that no plan of this roadway had been deposited as required by law. He wished to be informed as to the reason of this, and as to whether it was true that this roadway had been purchased. He had also seen an advertisement for the purchase of land between the Dawn and Sarnia of £34 per acre, which he knew could be purchased for £5 parcre. He wished to know too, whether 700 acres in the neighborhood of the Dawn had been made over to the contractor. By the terms of the contract, the Government were obliged to make over such such land to the contractor free of charge, and if 300 acres of the military reserves of Sarnia were given up to the Company, it would save the cost of building the station, which was the principal expense.

Mr. Marcholdon, with great vehemence, denounced the Government for having the audacity to deal with so important a question as this, after they had lost the confidence of the house, when they had been defeated last night on the School question, and when they were holding office against the will of the people.

Mr. Freeman complained that the contract for the road from Toronto to Montreal had not been properly carried out.—The contractors had agreed to receive £250,000 of money partly in Provincial debentures partly in County debentures, and partly in the stock of the Company. This agreement had not been carried out, and the contractors themselves had acknowledged that it was their fault, and not that of the Company, and had been stated by the Attorney General. He hoped that the written agreement would be produced and explained, so that the country might know whether they had not some remedy against the contractors.

Mr. Attorney General Cartier had not the agreement in his pocket. The contracts were entitled, in 1853, for £1,600,000—£870,000 in cash, £400,000 in bonds and £400,000 in the shares of the Company.

Hon. Mr. Merritt asked if, under the Act of 15th Vic., c. 39, the Company were entitled to more than a guarantee from the Government of £3,000 per mile? He thought that the legal gentlemen who were paid for it, should produce the vessels of the contract, but in spite of those lawyers, both this country and the English shareholders had been deceived. The effect of this was to increase the debt of the country 10 per cent.

Mr. Cartier explained that the additional £200,000 was advanced to the company as a loan under the Act of 1854.

Mr. Merritt complained that the £900,000 had been spent on the line to Sarnia, although it had been understood that not one penny of the guarantee was to be spent on a line west of Toronto.

Mr. A. A. Dorion desired to be informed if the shareholders had received the interest on their shares, which had been promised? If they had he did not think they had much to complain of, whatever might be their future position.

Hon. Mr. Cayley stated that the shareholders would receive the interest as soon as the works were taken out of the hands of the contractors. In reference to what had been said by the hon. member for Lincoln, he (Mr. Merritt) appeared to forget the correspondence of last year, in which the contractors complained that the drafts of the Company had not been paid.

M. Casault regretted that he could not vote for the resolutions, as he had been deceived by the Government in reference to the London and St. Mary's road, in a manner which could not be excused. Had they told him the truth, he would still have voted for them, but he had been deceived, and he could not support them, as the confidence he had reposed in them and the support he had given them, did not deserve to be treated. He had been assured before that on the London and St. Mary's road there would be nothing but the rolling stock of the Grand Trunk. This assurance had been violated, and these resolutions were framed so as to catch as many votes as possible, and all he wondered at was that the North Shore road was not brought in too. An appropriation of £450,000 was made to the London and St. Mary's road, and £325,000 to the Trois Pistoles road; but the latter sum the Trois Pistoles road had given back £325,000 to build the other sections, as that they were only paying back their own money. What the Government were really giving to the Trois Pistoles road was only £200,000, which the St. Mary's and Sarnia road was given £450,000. He complained also that the road to Trois Pistoles was not to be completed till 1st January, 1860, and, instead of the money being applied to building the road, it was to be put into the hands of the Provincial agents.—He could not vote for the resolutions because they gave no security for the completion of the road to Trois Pistoles. As looked upon them as just another attempt to bribe members with promises which it was never intended to carry out. (Hear, hear.) They were framed for the mere purpose of getting votes, without any intention of doing justice to the part of the country he represented.—He believed that the railroads in Lower Canada would pay well. The little line from Quebec to St. Thomas, only 45 miles in length, was now paying more than the Northern Railroad from Toronto to Collingwood. He was informed it would pay two per cent. over the working expenses. At its opening it did not pay, because it was badly managed, but that was remedied now. The Quebec and Richmond Railroad could not pay, because it was not required in summer, on account of the Pointe Levi Ferry. The freight from Quebec to Pointe Levi was as great as from Pointe Levi to New York. It did not succeed—not because the people of Lower Canada were backward, but because the road was so badly managed that it could not be taken advantage of.—He believed the Trois Pistoles road would ultimately pay more than any road in Upper Canada, except the Great Western.

Hon. Mr. Cayley explained that on this, as on the school question, the extremes met to oppose the Government. The member for Lambton went against the scheme, because the Trois Pistoles road, they said, would never pay; while the hon. member who had just spoken, opposed it because the Government were doing too much for the London and Sarnia section, and too little for the Trois Pistoles road. The county would believe that the Government had hit the right mean between the two. He did not think the Government were properly chargeable with deception, but those hon. members who accused them of that had deceived themselves. They were free to vote as they pleased, but the country would judge of their votes. From the time that the £900,000 were granted, he considered that the Grand Trunk had not deceived the Government and that the Government had not deceived the country. What interest had the Government in deceiving the member for Montmagny, and those who thought with him? The Government had no interest but to serve the country. They had no interest in the Grand Trunk.

Hon. J. S. Macdonald.—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Cauchon.—They have no more interest in it than the member for Glengarry, if it be true that he has become security for a contractor.

Hon. J. S. Macdonald.—No never.

Hon. Mr. Cauchon.—The hon. member need not be so indignant. I did not say it was the case, but I said that the Government have less to do with the Grand Trunk than the hon member has, if it be true that he became guarantee for one of the contractors. I did not say it was true.

Hon. J. S. Macdonald said the Commissioner of Crown Lands now found that his scheme was unpalatable, and he was attempting the gasp of popularity. He said the Government had no interest in the Company. He (Mr. M.) asserted that every Government since the scheme originated, had been at the foot of the Grand Trunk. By intendo he charged himself (Mr. M.) with having become responsible for the Grand Trunk. It was not so. He never had had anything to do with them. From their first start he saw that their sole object was to make out of the people of Canada as enormous a sum as possible, and they had failed in doing so by their own improvidence. He congratulated the member for Montmagny on the slashing charge he had had made on the Administration. That hon. gentleman had been in daily intercourse with them, had been at all their caucus meetings, had got from them in the house, and now come forward and declared solemnly that he he had been deceived by them, and that the country had been deceived. (Hear, hear.)

Hon. Robinson said the people of Canada would well long for a railroad, if it depended on the advocacy of the hon. gentleman who had just spoken.

Mr. O'Farrell would vote for the resolutions. (Sol. Gen. Smith—hear, hear.) But he would not pledge himself to vote for the second and third reading of the Bill to be founded on them. When the Bill came up, he would then see what other course he would take on the matter.

The Chairman (Mr. Gamble) then proceded to put the question to the Committee upon the resolutions.

Mr. Brown desired that they should be put separately.

Attorney General Macdonald said that the resolutions were founded on an agreement, made after negotiations with the Grand Trunk, and, must be accepted or rejected as a whole. If one clause was altered, the Grand Trunk would not be bound to accept them.

Mr. Rankin said he was in favour of some of the resolutions, but if asked to accept of them as a whole, he must vote against them.

Mr. Turcotte could not agree with the view laid down by the Attorney General. The house was at liberty to agree to any propositions they thought proper, and if the Grand Trunk would not accept them, let them take the consequence.

Mr. Brown.—I move that the resolutions be put separately.

The Chairman not putting the motion,

Mr. Mackenzie said he wished to re er the point to the Speaker at once.

The Chairman was about that it was the Parliamentary practice to put the resolutions separately.

A vote was then taken and was found to be—for the resolutions, 47; against them, 42.

A warm discussion ensued on whether the vote had been taken on the resolutions as a whole, or only on the first. Mr. Brown, Mr. J. S. Macdonald, Mr. Mackenzie, &c., insisted that they believed from the Chairman's remark, that only the first resolution was put, while the Government contended that the whole of the resolutions had been put.

Committee finally rose and reported the resolutions—report ordered to be received on Tuesday.

The house then adjourned at 1. A. M.

Vigilant Society.

We learn from the Welland Herald, that there is an organization in Pelham, known as the "Pelham Vigilant Society." A fact that we were not hitherto aware of. It was first formed in 1844, when means of communication and intelligence were not so common as now, and the country sadly infested with horse thieves. We remember the time when the number of horses stolen from the neighborhood of Pelham, celebrated for its fine animals, became really alarming, and the inhabitants thought it high time to put a stop to further depredations.

The organization was a praiseworthy one, and is still kept up. Payment of one dollar constitutes a member of the society, and a President, Secretary, Treasurer, and Board of Directors are annually elected. There also 12 young men annually elected, called Riders, who, when a horse is stolen, are furnished with funds from the Society, with a description of the lost animal, and start in various directions in pursuit. So efficient is the organization, says the Herald, that no thief has made good his escape with the booty of a member.—St Cath. Post

SANDWICH, JUNE 20, 1856.

GRAND TRUNK SPREE.

The Directors of the Grand Trunk Company having given an invitation to members of Parliament and others to take a trip to Guelph, upon that portion of the line which was opened, on Friday last, between Toronto and Guelph, of course a number of honmembers availed themselves of their politeness; and so favorable an opportunity could not be lost of having a little sport at the expense of the Guelphites, who, in their anxiety to witness the first train of cars that should arrive in their town, were only too credulous, and the merry excursionists, after disposing of a goodly quantity of champagne, were exactly in the proper trim for sport; and when the train stopped, instead of the Governor General, as was supposed by the good townspeople, who had assembled and were anxious to greet his Excellency, out steps Mr. Shaw, M.P.P., whom the jolly party intended passing off for his Excellency. We copy the description of the scene that followed from the Leader:

Some of the worthy M.P.'s it is said, consented to scheme to introduce Mr. Shaw, the M.P.P. for Lanark, to the inhabitants as the Governor General. Accordingly when the hon. gentlemen stepped out of the cars, they took off their hats and gave him a hearty cheer as the Governor General. Mr. Rankin, the hon. member for Essex, then took Mr. Shaw's arm and they walked along to the new hotel followed by nearly all the excursionists, with a large crowd of the town's people. Upstairs the gentlemen marched and made their appearance on the balcony in front of the hotel which was speedily surrounded by a large crowd desirous of getting a glimpse of his Excellency. The hon. member for Essex, without pausing for a moment to define his new position, introduced Mr. Shaw to the crowd as the Right Honorable Edmund Head, the Governor General of Canada. His Excellency then came forward, and stated that he had come up to Guelph along with a number of gentlemen representing both Upper Canada and Lower Canada, and he was happy to say that upon a closer acquaintance the Lower Canadians did not appear to be that inferior race to which he at first believed them to be. He was happy to see so large and thriving a town as Guelph, and he was sure that the representatives of the Lower Province would long for a railroad, if it depended on the advocacy of the hon. gentleman who had just spoken.

Mr. Turcotte then came forward and stated that he was a representative of that inferior race which had been alluded to. The hon. gentleman spoke at some length, referring to the necessity of maintaining the Union intact, and the fact that if they did so, the two provinces each representing the most civilized nations on the north would, by the combination of French vivacity with English reserve, make the most noble people in the world.

Mr. Head, the hon. member for Waterloo, came forward—seemingly in a state of great excitement. He said that a fraud had been practised upon them, and that this was the very same kind of fraud as that which was practised upon Upper Canada in the present Parliament. They had been grossly deceived by false representations. (Cheers and laughter, and a voice said turmoil.) Several parties pulled Mr. Foley back, but he was determined to speak. He said, Gentlemen, that is French Canadian justice—hisses and cheers.) That is French Canadian justice —(hisses and cheers.) That is the kind of justice which a portion of the Upper Canada representatives with their French major. ity, are giving to us. (Cheers and uproar.) Gentlemen, you have been imposed upon—most fouully imposed upon. You have been led to believe that the Governor General was here to-day, while he is not here. (Here the hon. gentleman was forcibly dragged from the front of the balcony, perhaps in mercy to himself, for he was speaking above his breath.

At this time, fortunately, the steam whistle sounded, and the party hurried to the train which was to take them homeward, and very likely saved them from being mobbed.

Present to a Member of Congress.—From the Lowell News, we learn that when Gold S. Hubbard, formerly a member of Congress, was about leaving Lowell on his return to Congress, a great many gentlemen assembled at the depot to present him with a handsome Colt's revolver, with the inscription "Free Speech" upon it. If freedom of speech can only be obtained in Congress through the medium of Colt's revolvers, then indeed is the boasted liberty of the United States only a farce, and when legislation cannot be carried on without such restraints it would be far better to adopt the Russian or any other despotic form of government

We had the pleasure of going through the Sandwich Flouring Mills, being got ready by Mr. Bullock of this place, and from the appearance of things inside, and the explanations made of many new and useful improvements introduced into this establishment by the millwright, who was particularly kind in shewing and explaining their merits, we may naturally come to the conclusion at once that this will be, when completed, one of the very best mills in the County. It is thought that in a couple of weeks every thing will be ready for a fair start. We would advise an inspection to those who would like to see a complete mill in all its parts. We wish the proprietor every success.

While upon this subject, we cannot close without saying a word or two about Mr. Baines' new Foundry, which he has now got into thorough working order and upon a large scale. Mr. Bullock, like other of our townsmen, thought that no castings could be done short of Detroit, but he is now willing to admit his error, as many of them can there were much inferior to castings which were made at the Sandwich Foundry, which were so well done that Mr. Bullock has used latterly Mr. Baines' castings entirely, and speaks in the highest terms of them.

The "Western Planet," after an existence of one year as a semi-weekly, having met with such success as to warrant the proprietor to issue a tri-weekly, there is little doubt that his enterprise will be rewarded as it deserves with a rich harvest. The Planet has always been a good conservative journal, moderate in its views, but staunch to the party which it represents, and is gifted with ability. We hope that the new Planet will revolve for many years, giving light and life within its sphere, without an eclipse.

☞ We have, within a few days past, received a large addition to our stock of type and material, especially jobbing type; and we may safely say that no office west of London is better supplied than is the Maple Leaf office. We are now prepared to do every description of work, and with our new stock will be able to execute with neatness and despatch every job that may be entrusted to us, and in a manner that will give satisfaction. Printing in colors will also be attended to, and at very low prices.

Review of the Market, and Detroit Prices Current.

For the week ending Saturday, June 15.

The scarcity of money in this market heretofore noted continues unabated. Such is the extreme scarcity that the banks, within the past week, have been unable to supply currency on ten day drafts upon New York. To this fact may be attributed much of the extreme dullness in general business, and the absence of speculative feeling in the produce market. One cause of previous embarrassment among our merchants, both here and in the interior is now removed, that of the opening of the Erie Canal.—Boats are now running its entire length and freights are coming in more liberally than are anticipated. The first propeller load of Canal goods reached here on Friday, after having been detained between Albany and Buffalo about three weeks.

The produce market has been, during the week just closed, almost unprecedently dull, and prices have still further fallen off. There has not been a large amount of flour on the market, and the speculative demand has entirely ceased. The transactions are only to supply the home trade and to fill small eastern orders. There seems to be a general opinion that prices will go still lower than the present, and dealers are afraid to operate, except upon safe ground.

The steamer Ericsson arrived at New York on Friday A. M., with Liverpool dates to the 28th, four days later. Wheat had declined 1a1d per 70lbs; inferior flour declined 1s. per sack and barrel, and best samples were rather easier to buy. Previous prices of corn were tolerably well satisfied. The steamer Arabia arrived on Friday P. M., with dates to the 31st, three days later than those by the Ericsson. Her reports are contradictory. McHenry's circular says Breadstuffs were lower. Wheat, except for choice qualities, neglected. A large consumption of Indian Corn, unusual at this season. Wheat, white, 10a12s, red 9a10s. Maxwell's circular quotes corn 28a28s 6d for best mixed and yellow, and 29a30s for best white, Western Canal flour 21s25s, Ohio, 37s39. Business in wheat and flour confined to retail buyers, at about Tuesday's rates.

We give below a table showing the prices of flour and grain in the market, at the present time, and also at the same date last year. The difference is truly astonishing:

	June 14, 1855.	June 14, 1856.
Flour, per bbl	$8 50@9 75	$3 50@5 75
Wheat, per bush	2 12@2 25	72a1 00
Corn, " "	80a 83	35a 38
Oats, " "	56	34
Potatoes " "	63a 81	38a44

Flour.—The transactions in flour during the week have been very tight, though larger than during the previous week. Prices have gradually declined, and may now be considered fully 25c lower than at the close of last week. The sales for shipment are kept to fill small orders or for freights. Prices will probably continue to fluctuate, but it is generally conceded that the bottom has not been touched. The closing sales of last week were 350 bbls at $4 00. On Monday there was a better feeling, and 100 bbls sold at $4 12½. On Tuesday the feeling was again down, and 908 bbls sold at $4 00. On Wednesday plenty offering at $4 00, but no offers to buy at over $3 75. On Thursday 100 bbls extra sold at $4 00. On Friday no sales; buyers offered $3 50a3 75. The receipts by railroad during the week are 7,814 bbls against 6,185 last week.

Wheat.—On Saturday week 15000 bu wheat sold free on board at 90c. On Monday 5007 bushels more sold free on board at 87c. On Friday 6000 bu free on board sold at 85c. In the street prices range lower, $1 00 being the limit, except for extra lots. The quality received the past week has been good, and receipts reach about 4,5000 bu, less by 7000 bu than last week. The total receipts, however, show a large increase, being 38,000 bu against 19,000 bu for the last week ending the 7th, and 12,500 for the week ending the 31st ult.

Corn.—On Monday 20,000 bu corn was sold, to be delivered in the 1st August, at 80c per bu. This is the only large lot sold during the week. Sales of small lots to supply the home trade amounting in the aggregate to about 4000 bu, have been sold during the week at 38c, and is now steady at that price. The receipts by railroad are 9,530 bu against 8,175 last week.

Oats.—There has been nothing doing in oats, even for the home trade. The prices remain steady at 34c per bu, with only the sale of an occasional small lot.

Provisions.—Steady at previous prices, 37½a40c per lb. The demand for shipment has fallen off, and receipts are not so large.

Wool.—The wool market, since our last, has taken quite a different aspect. At the date of our last review there were quite a number of wool buyers from the East, in the market, who have since that time returned home. One house which purchased quite largely last year, has also gone out of the market. Others, buying on large Eastern orders, have had some of their orders countermanded, and there seems to be a general disposition on the part of Eastern manufacturers, to keep out of the market as much as possible for the present. One house has orders for $10000.00 worth wool, is limited to 35c per lb for the best wools, with positive orders that unless wools are to be bought at from 25 to 35c per lb, not to buy. Other buyers think prices will range about the same as last year, from 25 to 37½c. One house has sent home one car each over 3000 lbs. This has been received in small lots, and mostly in rather bad order. A few lots, of ½ blood has been taken, for which 33a 39c was paid. Most of the lots, however, have been sold at under 30c.

Freights.—With regard to freights we can say nothing, except that the scarcity is very great, and the regular propeller lines are not able to obtain, as a general thing, more than half cargoes. Rates are the same as last quoted—$2 per bbl.

Pork.—Remains firm at $17 50 for mess, and $15 for prime, with little doing. Sales only in small lots to the home and up river trade.

Live Stock.—Fat cattle are lower, with a still lower demand for them. The range is now from $3 to $4 per hundred lbs live weight, and there are plenty at these prices.

Calves are rather scarce, and prices keep up the range being at $5a10 each.

Sheep are more plenty and rather lower. The best sell at $2 per head sheared, or 6c per lb dressed.

Hogs are also a trifle lower and rather more plenty. The range is from $4 40 to $5 per 100 lbs gross weight.

Money Matters—Doubtful Banks.—The New York Journal of Saturday evening, says that the week just past, though an active one in money transactions, has been one of increased facilities, for raising money. They have not refused accommodation either for loans or discounts to their regular connections, in proportion to their customary business, but they have not sought customers, they have been sparing of accommodation. The leading private bankers, exchange houses included, all are loaning readily and liberally at 7 per cent. Discount rates close easy at 7 to 8 for first class bills, short and long dates, 6 months; and 8 to 9 for second class and 8 to 10 for single names.

The Metropolitan and American Exchange Banks, New York, throw out the notes of the Mount Vernon Bank, Providence, Foster, R. I.

ARRIVAL OF THE ARABIA.

New York, Friday 13th.

The Arabia arrived at her dock about 10 o'clock.

She left Liverpool on the 31st, at 4 o'clock p. m.

The excitement with regard to American affairs was increasing.

The London Times, in reference to the recognition of Padre Vigil, says. "It seems as if the demand on one side and concessions on the other had reached their utmost limit and suggests that the United States should send to London a special ambassador or accredit the present Minister with plenipotentiary powers to settle the dispute amicably. There is a rumor to-day that Lord Elgin will be sent as a plenipotentiary to Washington. Another rumour says Sir H. Bulwer will be the envoy.

On the 29th, the Bank of England reduced the minimum discount to 5 per cent.

Arrangements for the British deputation to the Czar's coronation were completed.

Mr. and Mrs. Dallas and Phillip Dallas attended the Queen's drawing-room reception. Mr. Dallas was invited to dine with the Judges at the Lord Mayor's, but declined on account of business with Lord Clarendon.

A letter from Berlin says, that a strong party in Prussia believes that the present Government instead of following the example of Russia and Sweden in regard to capitalization of Sound dues, should fail.

The interest is fixed at 6per cent. The loan is principally for the construction of railroads in the interior, and partly for indemnification of Sound dues. The peace rejoicings on the 29th of May, in London, passed off with great eclat.

The papers are full of the details.

Liverpool Markets.—Messrs. Maxwell & Co., under date of May 30th, quote as follows:—Our imports since Tuesday have been trivial and only moderate from abroad. Very fine weather has prevailed. Prices remain generally unchanged. At this mornings market business in wheat and flour was confined to retail buyers, at about rates current Tuesday's prices, if anything in favour of buyer. A limited enquiry for Indian Corn, at 28s to 28s 6d, for best mixed and yellow, 29s to 30s for best white, Western Canal, 21s to 25s. Ohio, 37s to 39s. Canals closed on the 31st, at 94½ to 94¾.

McHenry's circular says:—

"Liverpool, May 30th.—A large business has been done in Provisions. Bacon advanced 1s. to 2s. In Beef nothing new. Pork dull and begins to drag. Shoulders and Hams find sale at full rates. Cheese keeps cleared on arrival. Sales of Lard are at an average of 33s. to 35s. Brand stuffs dull and lower. Wheat, except for choice qualities, neglected. A large consumption of Indian Corn, unusual at this season. White 10s. to 11s. Red 9s. to 10s."

New York, June 16.

The New York Express has seen several private letters from San Francisco, detailing events there connected with the murder of James King. One of the Vigilance Committee says the Committee has upwards of 5,000 members on its muster roll. Also, that Casey and Cora will certainly be executed May 22nd. They have prepared a list, embracing the names of about 180 of the most notorious murderers, thieves and blacklegs, all of whom will be required to quit the country on short notice, or contemplate summary judgment before the tribunal of Judge Lynch. Among them are Yankee Sullivan and David Roderick, the latter of whom was at one time Democratic candidate for the United States Senate.

It is rumoured that a project for a new treaty between the United States and Nicaragua is entertained, and if consummated, it is thought it will be, it will have an important bearing on the destinies of Nicaragua and Central American States.

Washington, June 16.

The Times correspondent says Secretary Marcy has formerly signified to the Danish Minister his purpose of withholding aid to, or a forcible resistance to the Sound dues for one year from the 14th instant.

The Union of this morning contains a lengthy notice of the enlistment question in the House of Lords, evidently prepared at the State Department. It contains the following significant passage:—"We repeat, and we do it with satisfaction, that later incidents have essentially modified public questions here with regard to Lord Clarendon mission." How far these new and more favourable impressions in regard to Lord Clarendon may be destined to avail, it shall be better able to judge when we see what response he has to make to Mr. Marcy's last two despatches.

Kansas.

(From the special Correspondent of the Tribune.)

Lawrence, K. T., Tuesday, June, 3.

A "State" Governor.—Shannon has still been instituting his "searching" examinations for Sharp's rifles, and has, since he commenced operations, appropriated about half a dozen. The course pursued is, for him to go round with a lot of dragoons, search a free State house for arms, and after he has gone, the Georgians, who are camped near Lecompton, come up and steal the horses. They follow close at his heels, and it is, on the whole, a very clever arrangement, as the Georgians run little risk. There is some small probability that this business will be interfered with shortly. On the Friday, Governor Shannon, while out on one of thes expeditions, was so drunk that he could not have told a Sharp's rifle from a blunderbuss. I have been assured that he actually threatened to have Capt. Walker's house burned down. He gave a proof to a man who appealed to him a written order which would entitle her to protection against the Southerners, and other "Law and Order" marauders. I would have sent a copy, but it is altogether inscrutable, no doubt owing to the Governor's peculiar situation at the time it was penned. I could hardly make out even the "Wilson Shannon" at the bottom, and there would be no use in sending you a copy without lithographing it.

ARRIVAL OF THE AMERICA.

Halifax, June 18.

The steamer America arrived here this a. m.

Dates from Liverpool are to the 8th.

The Cobb's steamer Atlantic, whose arrival off Holyhead was reported by Argo, reached Liverpool on Wednesday 4th p. m.

The leading topic in England continued to be the difficulty between Great Britain and the United States. Nothing more than appeared in the Paris Conference in the London Journal had published, with some show of authority, that Mr. Crampton had been dismissed. The announcement had scarcely any effect on funds.

Business in American securities is limited and prices show a declining tendency.

The advices by the Atlantic had exercised a depressing influence on the Liverpool Cotton market and it had receded one-sixteenth a one-eight pence per pound.

Breadstuffs—A firm tone had prevailed and in some descriptions of wheat quoted the quotations show a slight advance on those of the previous week.

Friday—In the Provision market there had been some trifling fluctuations. Beef was unchanged. Pork was lower. Lard quoted Holyhead was the same number, on Thursday, by the Puyallup. Major Van Bokkelen and Captains Swindel and Ralbeson, of the volunteers, with their different commands, had moved in the same direction. The volunteers still garrisoned Fort McAllister.

A Battle Field for Sale.—The battle field of the Marengo, with its palatial monuments, its rich museum of precious objects, and its classic souvenirs, is now offered at public auction in the streets of Paris! The domain of Marengo is situated near Alexandria, in Piedmont, on the line of the railroad between Genoa and Turin, and contains about two hundred and fifty acres of ground, vines, woods, and fields of the most fertile description. The monumental palace destined to perpetuate the memory of the battle of Marengo, gained in 1800 by Napoleon, was built by the Chevalier Delavo in 1855, and is a large and handsome palace. It contains furniture, objects of art, paintings and statues, commemorative of the battle, and a museum composed of objects which belonged to Napoleon and Desaix, and arms found on the field of battle. This museum is collected in the old tavern which stood on the ground before the battle, and around which the palace is built. For the information of Americans, ambitious for an Italian residence and for Bonapartist souvenirs, it is added that the upset price of the whole property is 600,000 francs, and that there is a good mill privilege on the premises.

We learn from Mr. E. T. Gunn, editor and publisher of The People's Sound Observer, which was developed, that on Wednesday morning last, that considerable alarm still exists along the Sound in relation to the Indian war. That the volunteers and regulars were all taking the field, to concentrate their forces, expecting to meet the Indians in force. Col. McAllister, on South Prairie, between the Puyallup and Nisqually Rivers. An encampment has been found in a swamp near by, from which, it is supposed, about one hundred and fifty Indians had just left. Fresh signs of men and horses were seen in abundance close around, and it is probable there spies in the immediate vicinity. Lieut. McKibbin, with a command of twenty regulars left Fort Steilacoom for that region on Wednesday of last week, by way of the Nisqually, and Lieut Kautz, with the same number, on Thursday, by the Puyallup. Major Van Bokkelen and Captains Swindel and Ralbeson, of the volunteers, with their different commands, had moved in the same direction. The volunteers still garrisoned Fort McAllister.

Sad Occurrence.

A very melancholy accident occured in this town, on Wednesday last, resulting in the death of Mr. Henry Agustus Jarvis, brother of P. E. Jarvis Esq., and Mr. Hiram Nelson Lee, one of the sons of R. H. Lee, Esq., two of the most respected young men in the place. It appears that the deceased were amusing themselves in a boat on the dam at about four o'clock on the afternoon. The boat grounded on a sunken stump; and while in getting off the boat they were upset. They were seen struggling in the water, and were heard to call for help; but there being no one near, some times elapsed; and before assistance could be rendered, the parties sank to rise no more. The exact place, in which they sank could not at first be ascertained, and fully two hours elapsed before the bodies were recovered. They were only a few feet from the shore; but by their struggles they had evidently got entangled in the weeds which grew in that part of the dam. Both were good swimmers. All praise is due to the parties who exerted themselves to rescue the unfortunate young men. When the news of the sad occurrence spread through the town, hundreds of people flocked to the spot to learn the fearful particulars, and to sympathise with the sorrowing friends of the deceased. In every eye there was a tear, and in every breast a sigh: and old and young seemed to realize the personal one.—Mr. Jarvis was only twenty-three years of age, and Mr. Lee only twenty; and we think we may say, without any disparagement, that they have not left behind them other two young men more highly respected than they were themselves. How such an occurrence reminds us that in the midst of life we are in death.—Strat ford Beacon.

We have at length before us the true cause of the difficulty between Governor Sutton, and New Brunswick, and his late Council. The whole difficulty arose out of the Liquor Law. This law cannot be enforced; at any rate it is not. Governor Sutton, in a memorandum, drew the attention of his Council to this fact; and having that of the law were capable of being enforced it was their duty to put a stop to its continued violation; but that if it were incapable of enforcement it ought no longer to remain on the statute book, a dead letter, as the effect would be to beget a contempt for law. The Governor took no side in the question as to the expediency of the law; he very properly abstained from giving any opinion as whether it was desirable or not. So far Governor Sutton was perfectly right in theory and principle. As a solution of the difficulty, he suggested a dissolution and an appeal to the people. The Council seat a written dissent from the Governor's view of the matter. The Governor was inexorable; and, in a rejoinder intimated that he should have to look out for new advisers. The ministry, however, had no more ideas of giving up their places than Mr. Sutton had of changing his opinion or purpose. The Governor resolved to take the responsibility of a dissolution; and instructed the Provincial Secretary to prepare a proclamation forthwith dissolving the Assembly, to countersign it in the usual way, and then transmit it to him. The Council was unwilling to take the responsibility of the dissolution, and tendered their resignation. This is the whole story. It is the affair that led to the dissolution the Governor was perfectly right, but whether he was justifiable in carrying out his own opinions, in the way he did, is the question. It was certainly a high-handed act, even if it were strictly constitutional. —Leader

A question touching the right of Mr. Gould to sit in the Assembly, for North Ontario, was raised on Friday. The amount of the whole matter seems to be that Mr. Gould took a contract, some years ago, for carrying the mail, at about half what it would cost to do it: that he transferred his contract some time ago and paid another party the difference, between what he got himself from Government and what anybody else could be induced to do it for.—The contract fell short of 100 miles beyond that he has nothing to do with it.—Mr. Vankoughnet wants an opening some where, and if a vacancy can be created in North Ontario, on the plea that Mr. Gould has no right to his seat, the needed opportunity would be created. Hell Attorney General Macdonald this in view when he advised Mr. Gould seriously to take legal advice on the matter?

French Intervention in Spain.—A letter from one of our Paris correspondents, and an extract from the London Times, which will be found in another part of our paper, recently set forth by one of the Madrid journals, that it was the intention of Louis Napoleon to interfere as a pacificator in the affairs of Spain. The marked attention paid to that she wolf Christina by the Emperor, the establishment of a French imperial organ at Madrid, which does not hesitate to call loudly for the intervention of France, and the tone of the Paris press generally, lead to the belief that this step is only a question of time. Its object is stated to be to crush the republican spirit, which threatens the repose of Europe. Knowing how little any danger of this sort is to be apprehended from Spain, people are tempted to ask what are the real motives of this project. A prospective appendage for an Imperial Prince in the Spanish throne, and acquisition to France of the richest colony in our hemisphere, are, in all probability, the prizes aimed at. Look out therefore, for another coup d'etat in Spain, with the cession of Cuba to France as its consequence. —N. Y. Herald.

There is great commotion in the Western States on the Kansas business. Meetings are held and subscriptions in money and arms raised; State conventions declare in favor of Kansas being a free State; Western poets embody the popular feeling. Colonization companies exist, whose object is to send voters favorable to their views. Arms, men, and money are in motion to determine whether Kansas shall be a free or a slave State. The following list of subscriptions raised at Chicago is so curious that it is worth giving:—

F. B. Gardner, six rifles—three with double barrels, sure at each post; Major Van Horn, one 18 shooter; C. W. Davenport, six shooter and ten pounds of balls; an editor and a lawyer, four Sharpe's rifles, and themselves; D. G. Park, can of dry powder; C. H. Whitney, one revolver; J. M. Isaacs, one Sharpe's rifle; G. M. Jerome Iowa City, one rifle; J. A. Byrnoy, one rifle; H. A. Blakesly, one rifle; W. H. Clark, one double barrelled rifle, and $20; J. A. Graves, one Sharpe's rifle; Frank Hansen, one double barrelled gun, and $25; a German, one pair of pistols; J. H. Huges, one Colt's revolver; F. M. Chapman, one horse; Urhlaub & Sattler, three revolvers. In all —money and property—about $16,000.

A Subject for Scientific Men to Investigate.—The Normandi of Rouen has the following curious statement:—

"Some years ago a female was attacked with epilepsy in one of the streets of Oporto, and several persons gathered around her. A bystander suddenly cried out, "Cover her face with a black silk handkerchief." A man took of his cravat and threw it over her face. Strange to say, her convulsions instantly ceased, and, raising to her feet, she thanked the persons around and walked away without assistance. One of the spectators of this strange scene was a gentleman who afterwards became director of the Institute of Manufactures at Oporto; and when a year ago one of the pupils, named Vidal, was attacked with epilepsy, recollected what he had seen. He proposed to the physician of the establishment to try the effect of a black silk handkerchief thrown over his face, but, he said, that he really believed the remedy to be worth much, but that it might be well to try it, as it could do no harm. A black cravat was accordingly thrown on the face of Vidal—and the spasms ceased as if by enchantment, and he soon after recovered. Twenty times Vidal had other attacks but he always recovered by means of the same remedy."

The Normandi, after relating these facts, says that it cannt explain whether it is silk or the black colour, or both, which stops the epileptic attack; but as an ebullient the investigation of scientific men, it strongly recommends.

Colt's Revolvers.—It has been estimated that over 400,000 pistols have been turned out of the manufactory in Hartford. Of these over one third have been sold in California. The U. S. have been furnished with 7,000, which, at a cost of $28 would be $168,000, added to repairs, which would amount to several thousand more. About 2000 are annually sold in New York City, by jobbers and the retail trade, which would amount by average to nearly $40,000.

The Grand River Eagle says that Mary Brooks, of Kalamazoo, was on Friday arraigned on an indictment for the murder of the husband Simeon Brooks, by administering poison to him on the 15th of March last. The testimony, a young woman of about 24 years of age, listened to the reading of the indictment, and drew the searching gaze of the audience without any visible emotion. Her trial is to take place on next Thursday week.

SIR ASTLEY COOPER'S PILLS.

This most excellent Vegetable Medicine is, if taken for the time, and in the manner specified, warranted, on oath, to effect a cure in the fine balsamic and invigorating powers which Sir Astley Cooper's Pills possess, are wonderful; a trial of a single dose will carry conviction that they are all that is necessary to invigorate the weak, restore the invalid to health, and do good in all cases; no fear need be entertained, as they are quite harmless.

The heads of families should always have them in the house, as they may, with the greatest confidence be resorted to at any time, or in any case.

Bilious attacks are sometimes had recourse to when a purgative is required. If the true nature of Epsom Salts, Sedelitz Powders, and all saline aperients, were fully understood, they would never be resorted to—they occasion an excessive secretion and discharge of the natural moisture of the stomach and bowels, and thus soften the parts of the stomach and bowels, and produces watery emotions—the vessels after the unnatural draining are dried up, and a confined state of the bowels is produced, which, if not carefully attended to, produces costiveness, and all the train of evils; besides all salts are cold and griping, to say nothing of the danger of mistaking Prussic Acid for Salts, which mistake has in numerous instances terminated fatally. Sir Astley Cooper's Mild Aperient Anti-Bilious Pills are now generally established as the most favorite Family Medicine.

Caution to the Public.—Observe that on the top of each box of the Genuine Pills there is an excellent likeness of Sir Astley Cooper; also the fac simile of the signature of MacPhail and Co, Sole Proprietors, London and New York, on the directions. Without these marks of authenticity, they are certainly spurious and an imposition. Sold at 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1 per box. Full directions are given with each box. There is a great saving by taking the larger sizes.

For sale by Simpson and Dunspaugh, Druggists, Toronto; John M. Thornton, Dundas; Andrew Oliver Gait; A. H. Cook, Brantford, General Agents, by whom all country Druggists and Merchants will be supplied at London and New York prices.

SUBJECT—MANURES.

The third regular meeting for discussion of this Club took place on 1st April, Col. Thomson, Vice President, in the chair

Professor H. Y. Hind, M. A., Trinity College, read the following paper "On the preservation of Farm Yard Manures, with some remarks on the sudden appearance of Rust, Blight, and Mildew, and suggestions as to a remedy."

The variety of new or modified views respecting the relative importance of different kinds of plant food which are periodically presented to the public under the shadow of great and trustworthy names, is a proof that the question is still involved in much obscurity and well deserves the most careful attention and study.

It cannot now be doubted that it would be very unwise to pen our faith exclusively upon the application of any artificial organic manure, it would be equally injudicious to lay too much stress upon the constant but bare renewal of the mineral elements of the soil renewed by cropping; and we should not the less fall into error if we were to neglect all kinds of manures and rely altogether upon the exalted physical and chemical properties of the soil, induced by deep spade husbandry and drainage. We must avoid all extremes, and in deciding upon the kind of plant food to be administered, or the mode of administration, we must be guided, firstly, by the sources from which plants derive their food; secondly, by economical considerations, the physical condition of the soil, and the peculiarities of climate.

In this paper I propose to limit myself to a discussion of the theories of preservation and distribution of one kind of plant food which is universally acknowledged to be necessary, and to lie within our immediate reach. Indeed, the majority of scientific and practical farmers believe it to be the most important element of stable and organic manures, (guano, &c., &c.,) and a few, regard it as the main spring of vegetable growth and luxuriance.

Nitrogen, in the free state or in the form of ammonia and nitric acid, has, probably, excited more discussion and led to a larger number of experiments in relation to vegetables than any other element or compound which assists in building up their structure. Its importance cannot be over-estimated, the simple fact that no flesh forming principles and no seeds can be formed by vegetables in the absence of nitrogen is a sufficient testimony to the nature of this most inert and tractable element.

How often has the question been asked, —is free nitrogen directly absorbed by vegetables from the atmosphere? And how repeatedly and with what zeal has this illustration and argument has the question been answered in the negative. Latterly the subject has again excited attention, and an able advocate for the direct absorption and assimilation of Nitrogen from the atmosphere been found in M. Ville. It is not necessary here to refer further to this difficult and unsatisfactory subject; and for present purposes it is sufficient to assume that nitrogen is not directly absorbed from air, but that before entering into plants for assimilation it takes the form of ammonia or nitric acid.

Ammonia we know exists in the atmosphere, probably to the extent of one part in ten million parts on the average. At times the quantity of Ammonia present is much greater than the above ratio, at other periods less. Rain water contains on an average nearly one part of Ammonia to the million, and of nitric acid about five parts to the million.† Dew always contains ammonia, and mists have prevailed so rich in this substance that the water had an alkaline reaction. Barral says of the water collected in the rain gauge of the observatory at Paris. He found that in one year, 10.94 lbs of ammonia fell with the rain, and 10.7 lbs. of nitric acid. In July he found the amount of the ammonia was least in March and increased gradually to July. In August it diminished suddenly, and continued to diminish until October, attaining its second maximum in February. These observations although very interesting are not satisfactory, because they were made in the neighborhood of a great city. Homes find that Boussingault discovered much less ammonia in the air far away from towns—a gallon of rain water containing only one twenty-fifth of a grain of ammonia. As a general fact, however, the water collected during fogs was extraordinary rich in Ammonia, containing on an average one third of a grain to the gallon—but an instance has been known—referred to—of a gallon or water from a fog containing not less than four grains of Ammonia The constant presence of this substance in the atmosphere is not only now fully established, but its influence upon vegetable growth in this gaseous form is of the highest interest, and possibly, of the highest importance.

The experiments of M. Ville upon the effects of ammonia in air upon vegetation show how rapidly and remarkably its influence is felt. If ammonia be artificially introduced into air in the same proportional average as carbonic acid is found to be constantly present, namely about one part in 2500 parts of air, its influence soon shows itself upon the leaves, which continually acquire a deeper and deeper tint. The presence of such ammonical vapours not only stimulates vegetation, but changes the growth of the plant, and causes the development and enlargement of particular organs. In prosecuting a series of experiments on the phenomena of vegetation with a view to ascertain whether nitrogen was directly absorbed from the atmosphere and assimilated, Boussingault observed the growth of minute green cryptogamia on the outside of the flower pots which had been exposed to the air, but he failed to detect any vegetable growth on those from which fresh air had been carefully excluded. The sudden growth of varieties of fungi during rusty weather has often been noticed, and their appearance may be accelerated by the introduction of a small quantity of vapour of ammonia into any confined space where they are observed. I am not aware that any extensive experiments have been made upon the growth of fungi in an atmosphere rich in ammonia, such as certain fogs. I have, however, remarked with surprise their absence in an atmosphere from which ammonical vapours were probably abstracted by powdered charcoal, without, however, drawing any conclusions from the observation until attracted by the curious discovery of M. Boussingault; that fogs are eminently rich in ammonia.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,
AND JOURNAL OF RURAL ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the Field, Garden, and Shade.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced. The growing interest with which the rising generation view the science of Horticulture, renders such a Journal as "The Illustrated Horticulturist" imperatively necessary to the progress of Rural affairs.

Practical Architecture forms one of the principal features; each number contains from two to four engravings of model cottages, from designs by eminent and skilful architects in Canada and United States. The tasteful art of Landscape Gardening, engraved plans of gardens in every style, and adapted to the peculiarities of different orders of architecture, finish the work.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and to all who can boast the sovereignty of a square rod of tillable earth, "The Illustrated Horticulturist" will be found a valuable companion. The extraordinary low price at which it is afforded: together with its really superior execution, both typographically, typography and editorial ability, must make it the most popular work of the kind in America.

"The Illustrated Horticulturist" is printed on the finest white paper, and is made up in a manufactured expressly. It is issued regularly the first of each month, commencing with July, 1855. The following gentlemen, eminently skilful in every branch of science of Horticulture, are engaged to conduct the Editorial department: H. P. KNIGHT, JAMES SNOWDEN and D. W. RAY.

Terms: Two Dollars per annum, payable invariably in advance; a liberal discount to the Trade, Postmasters, and getters-up of Clubs.

Advertisements inserted at the rate of Ten Dollars per page.

N.B.—Newspapers inserting the above prospectus, and drawing attention editorially to the same, will be forwarded the ILLUSTRATED HORTICULTURIST for one year, a copy containing the advertisement should be sent in all cases to insure attention.

NEW VOLUME OF THE
AGRICULTURIST

SUBSCRIPTION REDUCED FROM
25 TO 50 PER CENT.

The Canadian Agriculturist

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by its present proprietor in 1848, and is too well known to the leading farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us. The undersigned have made arrangements with the proprietor to publish the next, and probably succeeding volumes, and have resolved to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE
Illustrated with Engravings

Such as From Implements of Husbandry to Animals, designs of Farm Buildings, New Inventions, &c., &c., interesting to the Farmer, and also portraits of some of the most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM MACDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the position of Secretary to Agriculture since 1847, and having also been connected with the Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and writings in behalf of Canadian Agriculture are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to its columns as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to extend the correspondence on subjects of a practical kind.

THE AGRICULTURIST IS NOT LIABLE TO POSTAGE.

AYER'S
PILLS

Are curing the Sick to an extent never before known of any Medicine.

INVALIDS, READ AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES.

JULES HAUEL, Esq., the well known perfumer of Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, whose chemic products are found in almost every toilet, says:

"I am happy to say of your CATHARTIC PILLS, that I have found them a badly needed remedy. No one, than any other within my knowledge. Many of my friends have received marked benefits from their use. I consider it my duty to my fellow-men to add my testimony in favor of their extraordinary virtues in relieving that form of suffering which arises from the derangement of the digestive organs. They are not only effectual, but safe and pleasant to be taken—qualities which must make them valuable to the public when they were known."

The venerable Chancellor WARDLAW writes from Sumpter, 15th April, 1854:

"Dr. J. C. AYER — Sir: I have taken your Pills with great benefit, for the listlessness, languor, loss of appetite, and bilious headache, which are of very frequent occurrence in the spring. A few doses of your Pills cured me. I have found your Pectoral many years in my family for coughs and colds with unfailing success. You make medicines which cure; and I feel it a pleasure to commend you for the good you have done and are doing."

JOHN F. BEATTY, Esq., Sec. of the Penn. Railroad Co., says:

"Sir: I take pleasure in informing my fellowmen of the efficacy of your medicines, having derived very material benefit, from the use of both your Pectoral and Cathartic Pills. I am never without them in my family, nor shall I ever cease to use, while my means will procure them."

The widely renowned S. S. STEVENS, M. D., of Westworth, N. H., writes:

"Having used your CATHARTIC PILLS in my practice, I certify from experience that they are an invaluable purgative. In cases of disordered functions of the liver, in headache, indigestion, costiveness, and the great variety of diseases that arise from the derangement of the stomach, they are a most valuable remedy. In all cases where a purgative remedy is required, I have found your Cathartic Pills the best I ever used, as superior to any other I have ever found. They are now in more operation, and perfect confidence I have to make them an invaluable article for public use. I have had many proofs of the benefit they have done in my practice. Cough medicines in the world; and these Pills are in as low minister to that miserable proportion of the human ment of diseases."

"Acton, Me., Nov. 25, 1853.

"Dr. J. C. AYER — Dear Sir: I have been afflicted from my youth up with a humor in my blood, which has at times for twenty years baffled, and all mankind of amount of suffering, have been exceeded only to a few of the most terrible kind. With what feelings of rejoicing I write can only be known to those who have suffered more than my pen would have me long."

"I have never until now have I been free from this loathsome disease in some shape. At times it attacks my eyes, at times it made me almost blind, besides it has covered my head, at times my body and limbs, and destroyed my hair, and has kept me partly laid all my days; sometimes it came out in my face, and kept it for months; all of which makes me already a new person.

"Hoping that this statement may be the means of conveying information that shall do good to others, I am, with every sentiment of gratitude, Yours truly,

MARIA RICKER."

"I have known the above named Maria Ricker from her childhood, and her statement is strictly true.

"Wm. G. REDFIELD,
Overseer of the Portsmouth Manufacturing Co."

CAPT. JOEL BRYANT, of the Ship Shylock, writes from Boston, 20th April, 1854:

"I have for many years made use from a billious attack, arising from derangement of the Liver, which had become very serious. I found no relief of any relief at all by my Physician, and from every remedy I could get; but by the use of your Pills have completely restored me to health. I have also known to my children for years, with the best of effects. They were promptly cured. I recommended them to a friend for costiveness, which had troubled him for 6 months; he told me in a few days they had cured him. You make the best medicine in the world, and I feel bound to say so."

Send this from the distinguished Solicitor of the Supreme Court, whose brilliant abilities have made him well known, not only in this country, but in Europe:

"New Orleans, 5th April, 1854.

"Sir: I have great satisfaction in assuring you that myself and family have derived great benefit from your medicines. My wife was cured, two years since, of a severe and dangerous cough, by your CHERRY PECTORAL, and since then has enjoyed perfect health. My children have frequently been cured of Croup, Colds, Fever and Ague and Croup by it. It is an invaluable remedy for these complaints. Your CATHARTIC PILLS have also cured me from a dyspepsia and costiveness, which has given me more or less trouble for some years. I owe much more important, from the fact that I had failed to get relief from the most skilful Physicians in this and the country affords, and from any of the numerous remedies I had taken.

"You seem to us, Doctor, like a providential blessing to our family, and my prayer is that you may be with mankind of it. Yours respectfully,

LEANDER D. THAXTER."

"Senate Chambers, Ohio, April 5th, 1854.

"Dr. J. C. AYER — Honored Sir: I have made a thorough trial of your Cherry Pectoral, and can say that its virtues have been cured by them of the dreadful Rheumatism kind of which I have suffered so much. The first dose relieved me, and a few subsequent doses have entirely removed the disease. I feel in duty bound to say this, as some years before, which I attribute entirely to the effects of your CHERRY PECTORAL, I was given up to die.

LUCIUS B. METCALF."

The above are all from persons well known in the vicinity where they reside, and who would not make these statements without the most convincing proof they were true.

Poetry.

The Maiden's Song.

BY THOMAS PATTEN, JR.

O, I'll have my home where the sea-birds roam,
Near the foaming, stormy sea,
Where the craggy peaks on the breast-work seeks,
And I'll shield his form from the raging storm,
And I'll shield his form from the raging storm,
'Neath some branching shady tree.

When the storm is o'er on the rock-bound shore,
And the slumbering waves at rest
When the bright sun smiles on the distant isles,
Asleep on their mother's breast—
Then together we'll sit where the gay birds flit,
Carolling their richest lays—
And we'll talk of love, like a gentle dove,
In its cooing, winning ways.

Thus we'll pass our hours in old Nature's bowers,
And hear every sighing breeze
Re echo the moan of my chosen home,
As it ruffles the leafy trees.
O, give then to me my home of the sea,
By the overhanging rocks;
There let me die to the whirlwind's sigh,
Where the shrill-toned sea-bird mocks.

The Boy who Conquered.

Some few years ago a lad, who was left without a father or a mother, of good natural abilities, went to New York, alone and friendless, to get a situation in a store as an errand-boy or otherwise till he could command a higher position; but this boy had got in bad company, and got in the habit of calling for his "bitters" occasionally, because he thought it looked manly. He smoked cheap cigars also.

He had a pretty good education, and on looking over the papers he noticed that a merchant on Pearl street wanted a lad of his age, and he called there and made his business known.

"Walk into the office, my lad," said the merchant. "I'll attend to you soon."

When he had waited on his customer, he took a seat near the lad and he espied a cigar in his hat. This was enough. "My boy," said he, "I want a smart, honest, faithful lad; but I see that you smoke cigars, and in my experience of many years I have ever found cigar-smoking lads to be connected with various other evil habits, and if I am not mistaken, your breath is an evidence that you are not an exception. You can have no situation here, sir."

John—for this was his name—held down his head and left the store; and as he walked along the street, a stranger and friendless, the counsel of his poor mother came forcibly to his mind, who upon her death bed called him to her side, and placing her emaciated hand upon his head, said, "Johnny, my dear boy, I'm going to leave you. You well know what disgrace and misery your father brought on us before his death, and I want you to promise me before I die that you will never taste one drop of the accursed poison that killed your father. Promise me this, and be a good boy, Johnny, and I shall die in peace."

The scalding tears trickled down Johnny's cheeks, and he promised ever to remember the dying words of his mother, and never to drink any spirituous liquors; but he soon forgot his promise, and when he received the rebuke from the merchant, he remembered what his mother had said, and what he had promised her, and he cried aloud, and the people gazed at him as he passed along, and the boys railed at him. He went to his lodgings and throwing himself upon his bed, he gave vent to his feelings in sobs that were heard all over the house.

But John had moral courage. He had energy and determination, and ere an hour had passed he made up his mind never to taste another drop of liquor or smoke an other cigar as long as he lived. He went straight back to the merchant. Said he, "Sir, you very properly sent me away this morning for habits that I have been guilty of; but sir, I have neither father nor mother, and though I have occasionally done what I ought not to do, and have not followed the advice of my poor mother on her death bed, nor done as I promised her I would do, yet I have now made a vow never to drink another drop of liquor, nor smoke another cigar; and if you sir, will only try me it is all I ask."

The merchant was struck with the decision and energy of the boy, and at once employed him. At the expiration of five years, this lad was a partner in the business, and is now worth ten thousand dollars. He has faithfully kept his pledge to which he owes his elevation.

Boys think of this circumstance, as you enter upon the duties of life, and remember upon what points of character your destiny for good or evil depends.

A True Hero.

The world is deaf, dumb and blind to its truest heroes, while it lavishes laurels on sham greatness. But whenever an act of heroic daring occurs, it is the duty of the press to sound its praises. Let not, therefore, the name of John T. Hasgins be forgotten. He was the engineer in charge of a passenger train on the Rochester and Niagara Falls Railroad, and he saved one hundred and fifty passengers from destruction or mutilation by his nerve and presence of mind. He was running rapidly upon an embankment, when a flange of one of his wheels flew off, and his practised eye warned him that the slight divergence of the head of the locomotive foretold the immediate precipitation of the machine down the precipice. It occurred to him that if he could break the coupling of the cars, he could carry the passengers through the crisis unharmed. The idea and the execution were with him almost simultaneous. He twitched open the throttle valve to its full extent, and suddenly gave the pistons a full head of steam. The engine bounded forward frantically, snapped the couplings, and rolled down the embankment, while the train shot safely forward on the rails, and was stopped by the breaks. It is pleasant to add that the engineer, though severely wounded by the fall of the locomotive, was not fatally injured. With the dignity of true heroism he refused a present of money which the grateful passengers tendered him, saying that he had simply done his duty, and that the safety of the passengers was his sufficient reward. He is truly what the Germans call a "golden man."

It is such deeds as his that excite our highest admiration. The pilot clinging to the wheel while his boat is in flames; the heroic girl launching the life boat to the rescue of the wretched mariners; the angel abandoning the luxuries of rank to breathe the pestilential air of the Crimean hospitals are those are figures that live in our gallery of heroic men and women. And there are not so few of them as the world imagines. Their deeds are not recorded here, but elsewhere there is a record that embalms their deeds, and an angel voice to chant their praises in a better world.

A Ghost Story.

Some years ago a gentleman to all appearances of large fortune, took furnished lodgings in Soho Square, London. After he had resided there some weeks with this establishment, he lost his brother who had lived at Hampstead, and who on his death bed particularly desired to be enterred in the family vault at Westminister Abbey.—The gentleman requested the landlord to bring the corpse of his brother to his lodgings, and he made arrangements there for the funeral. The landlord, without hesitation, signified his compliance. The body dressed in a white shroud, was brought in a very handsome coffin, and placed in a large dining room. The funeral was to take place the next day, and the lodger and his servant went out to make the necessary preparations for the solemnity. He staid out late, but this was no uncommon thing. The landlord and his family conceived they had no occasion to wait for him, retired to bed as usual, about 12 o'clock. One maid servant was left up to let him in and boil some water, which he desired might be ready for tea on his return. The girl was accordingly sitting alone in the kitchen, when a tall spectral looking figure entered, and slapped itself down in a chair opposite her. The maid was by no means timid of her sex; but she was terrified beyond expression lonely as she was, at this unexpected apparition.

Uttering a loud scream, she flew like an arrow at a side door and hurried to the door of her master and mistress. Scarcely had she awakened them and communicated to the whole family some portion of her fright, with which she was herself overwhelmed, when the spectre, enveloped in a shroud, and with a death like paleness, made its appearance, and sat down in a chair in the bedroom without their having observed how it entered. The worst of all was that the chair stood by the door of the chamber, so that a creature could not get away with out pressing close to the apparition, which fixed its glaring eyes so frightfully, and so hideously distorted its features, that they could not bear to look at it. The master and mistress crept under the bed clothes covered with profuse perspiration while the maid servant sank nearly insensible by the side of the bed.

At the time the whole house seemed to be in an uproar; for they had covered themselves over head and ears, they could hear an incessant noise and clatter, which served to increase their terror. At length all became perfectly still in the house. The landlord ventured to raise his head, and to steal a glance at the chair by the door; but behold the ghost was gone! Sober reason began to resume its power.

The poor girl was brought to herself after a good deal of shaking. In a short time they plucked up sufficient courage to go out of the bed room, and to commence an examination of the house, which they expected to find in great disorder. Nor were their anticipations unfounded. The whole house had been stripped by the artful thieves, and the gentleman had decamped without paying for his lodgings. It turned out that he was no other than an accomplice of the notorious Arthur Baker who was subsequently transported for life, and that the corpse was his arch rogue himself who had whitened his hands and face with chalk, and merely counterfeited death. After midnight he quitted the coffin, and appeared to the maid in the kitchen. When she flew up stairs, he softly followed her, and seated at the door of the chamber, he acted as a sentinel, so that his industrious accomplices were enabled to plunder the house without the least molestation.

A Runaway Steamboat.

An eccentric but most amusing cruise was recently made by a steam tow boat in the waters of Southampton harbor, in England, the particulars of which are related by a correspondent who was an eye witness of the whole affair. It seems that the Belmont, a regular steam tug, had taken in tow the ship Walter Hood, bound from Southampton to Australia. On reaching the lower bay the sails were set on board the ship and at the same time the tow boat cast her off with the intention of returning to Southampton for another vessel, but by some accident the ship ran into the steamer, a violent crash followed, and in the confusion all hands, including the captain and cook of the latter, jumped on board the sailing vessel, leaving their boat in charge of a dog and two cats, a strange crew for a steam-going craft. But her steam was up, and after a succession of plungings and crashing she succeeded in shaking herself clear of the ship, and the next moment was seen 'going it alone,' starting off at terrific speed, and in anything but the right direction.

For a few moments her captain and crew, engineer and all, were struck with dismay; the long tiller of her rudder was seen dashing wildly to and fro, while the fierce barking of the dog, who evidently knew little of navigation or steering, rendered the scene at once absurd and terrific—ludicrous and frightful. Meanwhile the captain of the steamer, having recovered his presence of mind and composure, obtained a small boat and with his men started in pursuit of his absconding craft; but ere he was well underway she had altered her course, and from some cause or other came round and set out for the point whence she had started, thus making or describing a complete circle. The men bent lustily to their oars, but the chased seemed dodged, shied and circulated about in the most erratic manner, the dog keeping up an incessant barking and howling as though endeavoring in this way to head her off or bring her to reason.

Soon she shot off in a new direction, and now made directly for a lightship in the outer harbor. Here the men on the lookout deserted their position, and having manned their own boat also started in pursuit. The race now became truly exciting, the course of the steam-tug becoming more and more uncertain as her helm shifted to and fro at the sport of the waters of the channel. By this time, however, she had nearly run her race, her steam was getting low, and at length her speed gradually diminished, her paddles stopped, and she ultimately gave in from sheer exhaustion. The crew from the light-ship were the first to board her, her own crew coming up about twenty minutes after. She was at length got into working order and brought safely into Southampton dock, where she was sentenced to a heavy complaint soon after her frolic. It is said that the crew were fully justified in leaving her as they did, she being in imminent peril of going down.

Miscellany.

AN INTERESTING EXPERIMENT.—We have heard a good story concerning a selected liquor agency in a certain town not a hundred miles from Hartford, which will do to print. A free and easy looking customer applied to the storekeepers for a pint of rum, for mechanical purposes." It was furnished him, and he disappeared, but not long afterward again presented himself at the counter for another pint.

"What are you going to do with this?"—asked the bar tender.

"O," said the customer, 'we are using it for mechanical purposes—just up here in the next street.

The liquor was measured out, paid for, and disappeared. In the course of an hour the same customer applied for a third pint. This the agent thought best to refuse him, until he was better satisfied of the use to which it was to be appropriated.

"What are you doing with so much.

"O, it's all right—a party of us are trying an experiment, and are obliged to use this to carry it out successfully.

"The agent handed over the liquor, and asked, as his customer received it.

"What is your experiment?"

"Why, the fact is," said Mr. Coon, jamming the bottle safely into his overcoat pocket, "a couple of us are trying to see whether we can get drunk on your rum; we have punished a quart of it, so far without much chance for success, and either we or the rum will have to give it up on this bottle."

DEATH OF A BRIDE ON THE RAILROAD.—Mrs. L. S. Crawford, Cincinnati, died at the Railroad House in Rome, on Friday night last. She had been married on the previous Monday, and started with her husband for Boston. At Buffalo she complained of illness, and the couple remained at the Falls until Thursday, when the journey was continued. On arriving at Oneida Depot, she felt so indisposed that her husband was alarmed, and as she grew worse, removed her from the cars at Rome, where, in the course of an hour, she died. This sad interruption to a wedding excursion, will cause many a pang to the friends of the lady, who is represented as having been a person of great worth and many virtues. The husband continued his journey on Saturday, but under what circumstances!

LUXURIOUS TRAVELLING.—A model of a newly invented train for the Emperor of the French was tried on Monday, on the railway line between Paris and Tours. It consists of five carriages communicating with each other by a gallery. There is a drawing-room and bedroom—in fact, a complete apartment. Another new carriage, for six people, was also tried. It contains eight beds. A ticket with the use of a bed, will only cost double the ordinary fare.

JOHN BULL ON WHISTLES.—As the train from Albany one day was approaching a village station near Rochester, N. Y., the engine gave one of those long, loud, shrieking whistles, to which it sometimes delights, as if in very wantonness of power. "Here we are!" exclaimed a round faced, cosy "John Bull," destined for Rochester, and supposing he had arrived, proceeded to the door of the car to disembark. Finding his mistake, he returned to his seat, exclaiming: "Well—it's really very hodd! I thought they only gave the big whistles at the large towns!"—Rochester Democrat.

IN SCARLET FEVER great benefit is experienced, in the earliest stages, by rubbing the entire body of the sick with a soft lubricating substance—a piece of fat pork has been used for this purpose. It is stated that it softens the skin, opens the pores, and produces a soothing influence on the patient. Another plan is to dissolve some saleratus in water, (about one-fourth of an ounce to the quart,) and bathe the patient's body with this, at a milk heat. Others use vinegar for the purpose. A soft sponge is employed in bathing the body, and a soft towel used for drying. This operation should be done rapidly in a comfortably warm apartment and the patient placed comfortably in bed as soon as possible afterward.

A strong minded woman in Chelsea, Mass., has her own maiden name engraved upon the street door-plate. Her husband, she says, lives with her—not herself with her husband. A distinction with a difference.

COOL.—At one of the California theatres a few weeks since, a quarrel took place between two fellows in the parquette, and they fired several shots at each other with revolvers.—A lady who was in the boxes, was asked if she was not frightened. "O, lal no!" said she. "We are so used to having our bonnets and side curls cut with bullets that we don't mind such things." Such is the "werry last bulletin," as Mr. Weller, senior, says.

During a trial that occurred in the police court the other day, a constable testifying with regard to a lady, said—"I know nothing of her but what I hear the neighbors say; and, in my opinion, what women say of one another is not worthy of belief." His opinion! Where are the strong-minded and the cowhides?

A SCOTCH LAWYER CAUGHT.—A lawyer, say a Berwick paper, lately pleading in a Sheriff's court, in a case of right of way, thus addressed the bench:—"My lord, the road in question is of no use whatever; indeed, it is rather a nuisance, as it is only frequented by blackguard boys and profligate young men and women. I know the road."—Sheriff.—"You have walked the road?" Lawyer.—"A hundred times."—Sheriff.—"You give yourself a bad character."—(Laughter.)

THE BITER BIT.—A poor fellow, who had spent hundreds of dollars at a certain groggery, being one day faint and feeble, and out of change, asked the landlord to trust him with a glass of liquor.

'No,' was the reply, 'I never make a practice of doing such things.'

The poor fellow turned to a gentleman who was sitting by, and whom he had known in better days, saying—'Sir, will you lend me sixpence?'

'Certainly,' was the reply.

The landlord with alacrity placed the decanter and glass before him He took a pretty good horn, and having swallowed it and replaced the glass with evident satisfaction, he turned to the man who had lent him the sixpence, and said—"Here, sir, is the sixpence I owe you—I make it a point, degraded as I am, always to pay borrowed money before I pay my grog bill."

THE BARK RESOLUTE.—In the Senate of the United States, on Tuesday, Mr. Foster offered a resolution directing the Committee on Commerce to enquire into the expediency of authorizing the issue of a register to the British built bark Resolute, which was abandoned by that govermen, and found derelict in the Arctic Ocean by the American whaleship George Henry, and by her brought into the port of New London, where she is now lying, all claims to said vessel by the British government having been relinquished to the sailors.

Mr Mason proposed that the vessel be purchased by government, refitted, and sent back to the British government as a present.

Mr. Foster expressed his gratification at this suggestion, and in order that it might be carried out, he withdrew his resolution.

Recently in Detroit, when Romeo and Juliet was in the bills, a scapegrace known as Romeo, was in the pit. When Juliet exclaimed, "O Romeo where art thou?" the youngster arose and said, 'Here I am in the pit: I had only a quarter, and couldn't get into the boxes!' Juliet fainted.

Leap year, as is well known, invests the gentler sex with extraordinary privileges.—We see from a late exchange, that the young ladies of Aurora, Ill., have passed the following resolution: Resolved: That if we, the young ladies of Aurora, don't get married this year, somebody will be to blame.

A gentleman who had carefully trained up his servant in the way he should go, so that when his wife was present he might not depart from it, he sent him with a box-ticket for the theatre to the house of a young lady.

"The servant returned when the gentleman and his wife were at dinner. He had of course, been told in giving answers to certain kinds of messages, to substitute the masculine for the feminine pronoun, in speaking of the lady.

"'Did you see him!' said the gentleman, giving him the cue.

"'Yes sir,' replied the servant. 'He said he'd go with a great deal of pleasure and that he'd wait for you sir.'

"'What was he doing? asked the wife carelessly.

"'He was putting on his bonnet,' was the reply.

"It is said that there was 'fat in the fire' immediately.

CURIOUS TRIAL IN GERMANY.—A curious trial took place recently at a Rhenish tribunal. A man possessed some nut trees, of which the branches hung over the ground of a neighbor, who picked up the ripe nuts that fell from the tree, and also broke some branches. For this the latter was prosecuted for theft and trespass, but acquitted, on the ground that he was entitled to profit by fruit growing over his own property. Appeal was made from this decision and the judgement reversed by the superior tribunal, because the principles of civil law ordain that all fruit and branches belong to the stem, and the stem to him upon whose ground it is planted, and that the right of property of the latter does not cease with the extension over neighbor's ground, no matter how far this extension. The accused was consequently condemned on both counts.

ARAB SUPERSTITION.—Whilst great inundations have taken place in France, Africa has been suffering from drought. At Constantina, the natives had recourse to what they consider an infallible means of obtaining rain, the ceremony of ducking, with religious forms, in the nearest river, the half-witted creatures called marabouts.—Five or six of these men were conveyed in procession to the Rommel, and there plunged several times in succession into the water, the persons composing the procession at the same time singing and shouting.—One of them, who was unwilling to be dipped, was thrown into the river by force, and when he came out he declared in a passion that no rain should fall for a year. The next day, however, to the great delight of the natives, clouds covered the sky, and after a while abundant rain fell. Of course they ascribe this result to the ducking of the marabouts.—Galignani's Messenger.

Henry Green, a free negro of respectability living in Baltimore, has recently been tried for larceny, and during the trial it came out, that having married a slave woman, many years ago, he purchased her but never gave freedom—consequently their children were his slaves. Last year he sold two of his sons, 18 and 20 years of age, to a slave dealer, for $1,000 each, and they were shipped to Louisiana. He was himself born a slave, but was manumitted when quite young.

RIDING ON A LAKE IN A POTASH KETTLE.—The Skeneateles Democrat, under the head of "Yachting Extraordinary," says that on Saturday, Charley Ellesbury, on a wager with one of his Vulcan shopmates, put to sea in rather a novel craft—which was no less than a potash kettle. He sailed—or rather paddled his canoe—from the west side of Charley Hall's shop to and under the bridge into the mill dam, a distance of several rods, which feat he accomplished in a most gallant manner, to the great gratification of an eager crowd who had gathered on the bridge to witness this new feat in yachting at Skeneateles. When fairly seated in his craft he had about one inch of iron above water in case of emergency, and to steady himself with.

THE LONGUEIL EXPLOSION.—The number of dead bodies recovered at last advices was thirty-three. When the wreck of the steamer is raised it is supposed that others will be found. The Coroner is still engaged in investigating the cause of the calamity.

NEWSPAPERS IN NEW YORK.—New York daily newspaper establishments are getting to be great money-making as well as influential institutions. Ten years ago there was not one of them that yielded an annual profit of $50,000; now there are several that do better than that, and three yield about $100,000. The Herald, Tribune, and Times are at the head of the list. The Herald has the best advertising patronage, and the Tribune the largest aggregate circulation. The first, it is known, is held in 100 shares, at a par value of $1,000 each. A dividend was recently declared on the last year's business of $1,000 on each of these shares—making the year's profits $100,000, over and above the increase of materials, and after paying all salaries, &c. As Greely and McElrath each hold 26 shares—these gentlemen, after taking out their $3,000 salaries, came in for $25,000 a piece, making the aggregate income for the year to each from the concern, $28,900. As the present value of the shares is set down at $2,500 each, the value of the establishment may be estimated at $350,000. That's publishing a newspaper to some purpose.

A Canadian writer from Cincinnatti to the St. John's News, has some remarks on the Canadian Militia Bill so apropo, and so forcibly put, that we copy them below:

"There are doubtless many persons in Canada, who contend that it is time to provide for war and filibustering expeditions, when these afflictions are immenent. The weak men, who adopt this line of argument commonly claim to be immensely cosmopolite and philosophiral, and smile at the foresight of those who would be prepared for every contingency. Experience has demonstrated that these cosmopolitan philosophers are generally deficient in patriotism and backward in the hour of dange.r Their chief strength lies in their capacity to abuse the institutions of their own land. They never permit this faculty to rust, but keep it bright and keen by constant exercise.—Such men are useful in their way, and a due admixture of them in a community, exerts a beneficial effect, but when the opinions of those men obtained general assent, the decadence of the People who follow them, is at hand England has acted too much, in some respects, on the opinions of this class, and when the sound, healthy and patriotic sentiment of her People urged her into War, she was not prepared for it. The cosmopolite philosophers had shorn her of her strength; had diminished her army; had almost annihilated her Field Artillery, and had utterly destroyed her Baggage Train, which Arthur, Duke of Wellington, had brought to perfection.

"In fact, these cosmopolitan gentry have a more tender regard for their pockets than for their reputation. They are sharp business men, can drive a hard bargain either "by hook or by crook," but with all their fine sentiments and universal sympathy of words, they never forget the shop and seldom rise above it. As I have before said, they are useful in their way, but they are neither patriots not sagacious statesmen, and taking them all in all, are as arrant humbugs as ever lived. Country with them, means dollars and cents. Honor too, is dollars and cents; and Reputation, likewise signifies dollars and cents. In their eagerness to accumulate and hoard "dirty gold," they overlook the lessons of history, and are the most expensive of advisers. They never adopt preventive measures, which cost money. In their own individual business matters they have a sharp eye to all possible contingencies, and are commonly prepared for them; but to prevent disasters to the state, by the timely outlay of Cash never enters into their narrow skulls. This unwillingness to prepare for the worst, renders them the most expensive of rulers. May Heaven defend Canada from the ascendency of this short-sighted class! May she be warned by the errors of England, and avoid that policy which encourages marauders to plunder, by disarming those who are to be plundered. In a country where highwaymen abound, it would be silly enough for wealthy people to travel at night with their treasures about them, protected only by a broad brimmed hat. Good sense and sound policy would dictate the propriety of slipping a revolver into one's pocket, and exposing the handle to the eyes of the footpads. The handle would be enough for them. They would be satisfied with it, and would not press for the introduction to the muzzle.

"To lock the stable after the horse has been stolen is a common enough practice, but it does not indicate any very remarkable degree of sagacity. To replenish the dried up water tanks of a combustibie city after the fire has broken out is a practice so frequently followed, but it would be a wiser plan to keep the tanks well filled at all times and the fire engines in prime order.

"It is urged that a people prepared for war are far more apt to go to war than those who are not prepared. This is not true.—History establishes the very reverse. Weak and defenceless nations are far oftener devastated by wars than nations who are strong in means of defence.—Powerful men are generally the least quarrelsome, partly because they escape the insults which are heaped upon the weak. What is true of men, is true of nations, for they are only aggregation of individuals.

"Canada, as I understand, does not propose to raise a large standing army, nor indeed to have a standing army at all, but simply to organize a Volunteer and Militia Force for her own protection. She is right in doing this, and will prosper under it.—She will never regret the cost of her corps of citizen soldiers. They will render incalculable service in the hour of need. That hour may be nearer than we imagine. The "devil is loose" in the world, and as we can't guess what particular rumpus he will kick up for the benefit of Canada, it will be wise to keep an eye to his "filibustering" followers."

Royal Assent to Bills.

The SPEAKER and a number of the members then proceeded to the Legislative Council, when his Excellency was pleased to give the Royal assent to the following Bills:—

An Act to enable the Municipal Council of the Town of Cornwall to appropriate the surplus of certain monies raised for making a Macadamized road.

Assassination of Strang.

Before this time, in all human probability, James J. Strang, the leader of the Mormon settlement, on Beaver Island, is among the dead.

On Monday afternoon, between six and seven o'clock, Captain McBride, of the U. S. Iron Steamer Michigan, (which was lying at the pier at Beaver Island,) sent his pilot, Alex. St. Aubin, a steerage hand, a short distance off, with a request for Strang to come on board the steamer, upon some business, Strang returned with St. Aubin, and when about half way down the dock are two men stepped out from behind the wood piles, with which both sides of the dock lined, there being only a passage way between the wood, and one of the men fired a revolver, the ball striking Strang in the back of the head, passed around under the skin, coming out near the temporal bones. He then fired a second barrel, the ball of which struck Strang near the autram, about level with the nose, and passed into his head; the other man then fired a single pistol, the ball from which struck Strang near the vertebral column, at the small of the back, and passed into his body. The men, whose names are Alexander Wentworth and Thos. Bedford, made no attempt to escape, but surrendered themselves up to Captain McBride. Strang was picked up and carried into a house near by, apparently dead, but after a few moments, he revived sufficiently to ask the sergeon of the Michigan, who was in attendance, if the balls could be extracted. Neither the ball in the head nor that in the loins was traced, and as either of them had created a mortal wound, it was not strongly attempted. The opinion of the surgeon is that long ere this he is dead.

Thomas Bedford, one of the men who committed this act, had been whipped forty lashes on the bare back, with a scourge made of blue beach sprouts, twisted together, some time since, upon a charge of neglecting to disclose facts concerning a robbery. This had been done by Strang's orders. Both Bedford and Wentworth had been Mormons, but had seceded, and had joined with the McCulloch faction, in the late schism. Both had families, and Capt McBride brought them with their families, and five other families who desired to leave the island, over to Mackinac. The actors in the tragedy were given up to the legal authorities at Mackinac.

Strang was the heart and soul as well as the intellect of the Mormon gang, and it is to be strongly hoped that his death will break them up, and scatter them abroad.—There remains no man among them capaple of wielding Strang's influence, or supplying his place.—Advertiser.

THE MAPLE LEAF.

SANDWICH, JUNE 27, 1856.

MARINE DISASTERS.

We are indebted to the Commercial Gazette for a list of disasters upon the lakes for the early part of the month of June, which will be found below, and shews a great loss of vesels in so short a time:

June 12.—A large black top sail and top gallant schooner was seen ashore on Point au Pelee. Said schooner had a white streak had a signal of distress flying.

June 13. — Propeller Wisconsin ran aground at Milwaukee, but was got off without serious damage.

June 13.—A large fore and aft schooner capsized between Grand River and Gravelly Bay, eight miles from shore. None of the crew were discovered.

June 10.—Michael Gillen, a sailor on the schooner Augusta, when in Chicago Harbor, was taken with a fit while at the mast head, and fell to the deck, killing him instantly.

June 14.—The schooner Robert Emmett, with a cargo of lumber, in making the harbor of Chicago, ran on to an anchor and stove a hole. She was kept afloat by extra exertions until discharged, when she was taken into dock for repairs.

June 15. —The schooner George Worthington, of the Lake Navigation Company's Line, which made Chicago this date, was struck by lightning on her way up and her main top mast knocked down and lost, and her mizen mast considerably shattered.

June 14.—The Sandusky, owned by C. M. Reed of Erie, and sailed by Capt Mosier, reached Chicago disabled. She was struck by lightning at the mouth of Carp river, by which her main mast was shivered, the lightning passing off at the pump. Fortunately no one was hurt, the crew being ashore cutting some wood. She loaded with lumber and came up with a double reefed sky sail, but before reaching port had her top mast carried away by a squall.

June 14.—The new propeller Neptune broke a shaft, but succeeded in reaching Detroit, and is now repairing.

June 3. —The Propeller Cataract, Capt. Hunt of the American Transportation Co.'s Line bound from Toledo to this port with a cargo of flour and provisions, came in collision on Friday morning about 2 o'clock, off Long Point, with the brig Oxford, Captain Lee, bound, from Ogdensburg to Toledo with a cargo of 300 tons of iron ore. The propeller struck the brig on the starboard side, just abaft the foremast, cutting her to the water's edge, and causing her to sink in about three minutes. The Captain, his wife, mate and two seamen went down with her. The seamen only out of the whole number were saved. The following is a list of the lost and saved as far as we have been able to ascertain:—Lost—Capt. John Lee and wife, Oswego; Mate Angus——, do.; J. McDonald, seaman, Long Island; and another, name unknown. Saved—Michael McGinnis, Kingston; James Hull, do.; and Henry Anderson, Prescott, Canada, all seamen.

The propeller arrived in port about Friday night, not having sustained any material damage.

June 4.—The propeller Nile, belonging to the American Transportation Company, came in collision with the schooner Sardis Burchard, near Buffalo, and carried off her bowsprit and jibboom, and causing other damage of some moment.

June 3.—The propeller Baltic and schooner Cincinnati came in collision off Point Abino. The former was bound for Sandusky with a cargo of merchandise, and the latter for this port with a cargo of staves.—The Cincinnati had her jibboom and bowsprit carried away, and her bulwarks on her starboard bow badly stove.

June 8.—The schooner Lookout, bound from Chicago to this port, and a propeller, name unknown, collided at the head of this lake. The schooner was towed to Detroit.

Niagara Elections.

From Returns received we learn that Mr. Morrison the Ministerialist Candidate has been returned for this Constituency. The state of the poll at the close of the election stood

	Morrison.	Woodruff.
Town.	274.	5.
Township.	101.	204.
	375	209
	209

Majority for Morrison, 166.

The town going almost entirely for the old member while the township gave a majority for Woodruff.

On Tuesday last a terrific storm passed over this town doing a good deal of damage by rooting up trees and the destruction of fences. The storm commenced about half past five and lasted for nearly an hour, the rain poured down in torrents, and at one time the thunder and lightning was such as to move the stoutest heart to fear at the warring of the elements, accompanied with a perfect hurricane which passed over a portion of the town only marking its path by fallen trees and prostrate fences, the old Pear trees on the Mears property and the orchard upon the "Hand Farm" appeared to have suffered most from its effects in this neighborhood.

ST. LOUIS' LUMBER YARD.—The Messrs St. Louis have recently brought to Sandwich a large assortment of Pine and Hard wood Lumber, which they intend to keep on hand hereafter at their Lumber Yard, and will sell on such terms as will prevent the necessity of parties wishing lumber to go to Detroit. Every description may be obtained at their yard adjoining their store.

Sir Collin Campbell's Farewell to the Highland Brigade.

The following is a copy of the General's address to his soldiers:—"Soldiers of the 42nd, 79th, and 93rd, Old Highland Brigade, with whom I passed the early and perilous part of this war, I have now to take leave of you—in a few hours I shall be on board ship, never to see you again as a body—a long farewell! I am now old and shall not be called to serve any more, and nothing will remain to me but the memory of my campaigns, and of the enduring, hardy, and generous soldiers with whom I have been associated, whose name and glory will long be kept alive in the hearts of our countrymen. When you go home, as you gradually fulfil your term of service each to his family and his cottage, you will tell the story of your immortal advance in that victorious echelon up to the heights of Alma, and of the old brigadier who led you and loved you so well. Your children and your children's children will repeat the tale to other generations, when only a few lines of history will remain to record the discipline and enthusiasm which have borne you so stoutly to the end of this war. Our native land will never forget the name of the Highland Brigade, and in some future war that nation will call for another one equal to this, which it can never surpass. Though I shall be gone, the thought of you will go with me wherever I may be and cheer my old age with a glorious recollection of dangers affronted and hardships endured. A pipe will never sound near me without carrying me back to those bright days when I was at your head, and wore the bonnet you gained for me, and the honourable distinctions on my breast, many of which I owe to your conduct. Brave soldiers, and kind comrades, Farewell!

C. CAMPBELL, Major-Gen."

Projected Murder, and Conspiracy to seize an Australian Vessel.

William Lewis, a seaman, aged twenty-six, a native of Chatham, was charged at the Thames Police Court on Monday, with conspiring to murder the captain and officers of the ship Stebonheath, and piratically run away with the said ship, on the high seas.

John Sargeant, the commander of the ship, said he shipped the prisoner in Melbourne. The crew consisted of thirty-six in all, and there were twenty-two passengers. There were 61,000 ounces of gold on board (value 244,000*l*.) In consequence of a statement made to witness on Feb. 22, five days after leaving Melbourne, witness had prisoner arrested, and kept in irons all the voyage. Witness, after the arrest, went into the forecastle, and took away the fire arms, powder and shot, knives, bottle of laudanum, and keg of brandy, then on the table of that court.

Thomas Whittington, a seaman, deposed: I joined at Melbourne the same day as prisoner. The next day we left Melbourne I was on the topgallant forecastle. The prisoner came up and said, "What a fine prize this ship would be for the Russians to fall into." I knew there was plenty of gold on board, for I helped to bring it into the ship. I laughed when the prisoner made the remark. The prisoner then said how the crew would be cooked if the Russians took the ship, unless they fell in with a British man-of-war. The prisoner said he had some brandy, and asked me to drink. I did so, and the brandy was so strong, it nearly took my breath away, and I said, "This is brandy!" The prisoner then began to talk about killing the officers and seizing the ship, and said it might be done easily. The prisoner also said, "I'll sign a contract with my heart's blood if you will stick by me." The prisoner then said, "How would you like to fall in with a share of the gold?" I said, "We should not be enough to take her?" The prisoner said he would be master of the cabin in five minutes, that he could do it alone, but that it was too much for one, and three would be better. He then asked me who had pistols in the forecastle? I told him I did not know, and he said we must bring them up and find out who has them, and get them all up. I then leant against the side of the vessel, and the prisoner said, "Don't be studying about."—When I told him I was no more afraid of a pistol than he was, he said he knew that, and that was the reason he put it to me.—The prisoner told me to turn into my bunk and consider of it, as the affair must come off in the middle watch. Nothing more was said that watch, but in the dog watch, from six to eight, the prisoner entered into conversation and pressed me to join him, and I advised him to leave it alone. He said I had no pluck, and he would try some one else. From eight to twelve on the Tuesday forenoon I noticed Bolitho leaning over the prisoner's bunk, and in earnest conversation with him, and he was showing him something. The prisoner came again to me on the Thursday, while it was his watch on deck, and talked about the proposed mutiny and seizure of the ship, and said, "Have you made up your mind?" I said, "No; you had better leave it alone; I shall give it up." He said again I had no pluck.—On the Friday morning, I revealed all the prisoner had said to the chief mate. I had previously spoken to Walter Bolitho.

The prisoner, in defence, said Lewis had sworn all falsehoods; he and Bolitho were the first that spoke to him (prisoner) about murdering the officers and scuttling the ship. Magistrate: I will hear your defence another time.

Walter Bolitho, a seaman who had also joined the Stebonheath in Melbourne, gave evidence respecting proposals made to him by prisoner similar to those made to the previous witness.

It was also stated that the prisoner endeavoured to win over a man named Hugh Kent. He told the three men that after the officers were murdered, and the crew "dosed" with laudanum, he should throw all the passengers overboard with the exception of the young women, and then sail for the coast of Peru, where they would take the gold out of the ship, scuttle her, and send her to the bottom with all the females on board. The passengers rewarded the three seamen by a subscription of 115*l*.—50*l* each for Bolitho and Whittington, and 15*l* for Kent.

On Wednesday, the prisoner was re-examined.

Walter Bolitho, one of the ship's crew, corroborated the evidence of the witnesses examined at the former hearing, relative to the various attempts made by the prisoner to induce him and others of the crew to join in the plot to seize the vessel. The prisoner, while conferring with witness on the subject, told him that at Callao he and several other men got a schooner and went towards California to look for some vessel bringing gold from the mines. After waiting about three weeks, he said, they espied two ships, one of which they took, and found in it about 7,000 oz. of gold. They secure the gold and scuttled the ship; and the prisoner added, "Dead men tell no tales."

Mr. Yardley in reference to the arms, laudanum, bowie knives, &c., found in prisoner's bunk, asked Captain Sarjeant if it was not the practice to search the chest or bag of sailors when they came on board?—Witness: No, Sir.

Mr. Yardley: I should think you would in future. Not only you but all captains going from Australia. This ought to be a warning to you. Winess: It will be, sir.

Inspector Soane said he assisted to take the prisoner into custody; that he observed that Whittington and Bolitho had the pull of him, and that Whittington ought to have been in his place. The prisoner, who said he would reserve his defence, and who in the course of the inquiry denied the statement of Bolitho, was committed for trial.

A good deal of political trouble now prevails in Persia, and there is a pretty general feeling in the country in favor of annexation to the British Empire. An East Indian paper called the Indian, of the 15th March, has the following remarks in allusion thereto:—"By a native vessel which arrived yesterday, we learn that Captain Jones, the resident consul at Bushire, has hauled down his flag and left the place, and that the port has been placed in a state of blockade. Our informant is a Persian merchant of respectability, who has connections and relations at Bushire, and we, therefore, believe that this may be relied upon. He informs us, moreover, that Persian troops were rapidly pouring into the town, and that the general impression was that war had become imminent. He also states that the feeling of the inhabitants, not only of Bushire, but of Persia generally, was decidedly in favor of annexation, inasmuch as the oppressions of the present government have become intolerable. As an instance, he cited to us his own case. He had been deprived of property valued at some five and twenty thousand rupees within the last few months, on one pretext or another, and he assures us that his is by no means an isolated case.

The Latest Aspect of the American Question.

The Times, City Article, of Friday evening, says:—

Although the statement of Lord Palmerston, last evening, that he had received information of the fact of Mr. Crampton's having been required to leave Washington, disappointed the expectations excited by private commercial letters received yesterday from New York, the English Funds have been very steady to day, and have closed at a slight advance. In the Stock Exchange there is a good demand for money, and in the discount market there is a fair supply, at, in some instances, ½ to ½ per cent below the Bank terms. A payment of 20 per cent on the new loan falls due on Thursday and as this will absorb one million, the applications at the Bank are likely to increase during the next few days.

The Times has a leading article on the American question, but its objects is chiefly to complain of those politicians in the United States who, though condemning the policy of President Pierce's Cabinet, do not oppose it with sufficient energy.

The Daily News remarks upon the change which has taken place in public opinion in reference to the difficulties with America. There is still, it says, a univeral dislike to the idea with a war with America; but doubts are begining to arise in the minds of many whether our conciliatory deportment has not already been carried quite as far as prudence dictates, and whether President Pierce and his Cabinet are not presuming too far on their knowledge of our desire for peace.

Lawyers at a Discount.

Last week, the following suggestive passage at arms took place in the House of Assembly:

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON.—I am a printer, like yourself!

Mr. BROWN—I'm afraid the hon. gentle-is not any more than myself entitled to call himself a printer. It is an honorable profession; but, if I understand it rightly, the hon. gentleman belongs more properly to the legal profession.

Mr. CAUCHON.—For the last twelve years I have only practised at the bar for a year and a half.

More than once, Solomon has punched the members of the Black Brigade, under their fifth ribs, but never did he give them topdressing equal in truculence to the one above recited.

George Brown declared in so many words that while printing was "an honorable profession," the calling of the law was diametrically the reverse.

Once more, brother Cauchon, in place of showing fight for the togo and wig, admitted, by implication, the truth of the "soft impeachment." Instead of denouncing George as a slanderous knave, he whined out that during the currency of one hundred and forty-four months, he had, 'only practiced at the bar for a year and a half!'

Of a surety it is ripe time for the Brigade to be disbanded, when one of the veterans thereof shrinks like a manipulated aspen-leaf, when accused of being connected therewith.—'Streetsville Review!'

Mirage on Lake Superior.

We have often heard of the optical illusions encountered by mariners on the great Northern Lakes, but nothing equal to that witnessed by a gentleman on Isle Royal.—He writes in the following manner:

The mirage on the Lake shores is a most interesting natural phenomenon. Occasionally it displays a surpassing grandeur which baffles all powers of description, from the rapidity of its changing features. On one occasion, in the spring of 1854, it exceeded anything that I had before seen. From Siskowit Mine, the South shore from the Keweenaw Point to Fon du Lac, a distance not short of 150 miles, which is seldom seen under the most favorable circumstances, now came in full view.—The nearest point of this range of hills is at least fifty miles from us, and though not more than eight or nine hundred feet in height, by actual measurement, presented the appearance at this time of an extensive range of lofty mountains, with numerous peaks starting from their gigantic pillars of Heaven. To the observer, the scene, like a moving panorama, was constantly changing. At one moment the sides of the mountains resembled a vast wall of rocks, and at another a boundless plain of fallen ruins.

"The bluffs, slopes, escarpments, pepressions, ravines, clearings, and wooded regions all change both feature and position with astonishing rapidity. The mountainous walls of rocks and ruins all pass away, and are followed by an endless variety of the most lovely landscapes that the eye ever beheld, apparently hemmed in by distant hills covered with green foliage, and bathed in the gilded rays of a summer sun. A countless number of small rivers might be seen gracefully winding among the green hills, finally discharging their waters into a crystal lake in the midst of the landcape. To contrast with this beauty and enchantment, inverted hills covered with timber might be seen moving over the surface of the water, and passing directly into the side of the mountains, while off the unruffled bosom of the phantom lakes, start a number of pointed cones, widening as they rise to great mountains, whose bases are fixed in the clouds, all moving gently forward and mingling one with the other into every imaginary form and figure that it is possible for the mind to conceive. For a few moments I was interested in seeing one of those inverted mountain peaks passing directly through a large city, and changing on the opposite side into a formless mass of rock, confusedly thrown together and suspended in the air. Afterwards it assumed the form of numerous promontories with low headlands, extending far away into the lake. After the lapse of a few moments it broke into islands, rocks and shoals just emerging from the water, and finally disappeared, leaving nothing behind but the blue surface of the lake—our vision bounded by the horizon.—Detroit Free Press

France and the Continent.

Europe at large does not exhibit the same tranquil aspect, as that which obtains in the British Isles; or if it does, the tranquillity lies on the surface. Denmark is in agony about her Sound Dues. Spain balances between a coup d'etat on behalf of despotism, and a revolutionary movement on behalf of demagogues. Sardinia and Austria are exchanging notes of objurgation and defiance, preparatory to a fiercer encounter. The pope and the King of Naples tremble and temporise, at the warning given them to set their houses in order.—Turkey refuses to acknowledg the independence of Circassia, and thus shows that the gold of Russia is already recommencing the work which its steel could not effect. Russia herself, about to revel in the barbaric splendors of a coronation, offers amnesty to the refugee Poles of London and Paris, and they refuse the boon, if it must be earned by asking pardon.

Dismissing these in a breath, though each might be the theme of an article, come we to France, the great instigator and exemplar of change. Surely the sun cannot rise and set seven times over that fair land, without seeing something happen, whereof other lands will prattle. We ourselves are first struck with what is said regarding the attitude of France towards the disputant governments of this country and our own.—And herein—if he may be believed—the very native correspondent, in Paris, of the London Morning Post lets the cat out of the bag. In a paragraph of one of his letters that was thought worth telegraphing, the other day, from Halifax on the arrival of the Cunard steamer of the 7th., this writer defines Louis Napoleon's drift; and some of our no less naive editors certify to the Post being the French Government's organ in London—just as if the Emperor, whose most intimate councillors are often kept in ignorance of his plans, were in the habit of blabbing them to the press. We cite the paragraph elsewhere, heading it "The Impartial Arbitrator." The gist of it is that Louis Napoleon would like to arbitrate between England and America, but is fully prepared to take part in the former. Now, that France would willingly do so, in the event of war, we have often said; and the same might be said of all the leading powers of continental Europe; but the offer to arbitrate, when such a feeling is notorious, were a little too simple a game to be played by the astute man who thinks, speaks, and acts for France.

Domestic affairs at the moment call for all his statesmanship. The georgeous displays of luxury and splendour with which Paris is continuously dazzled are but a poor safe-guard against financial crisis, if indeed, they do not directly tend that way. Certainly the gambling propensities of the nation have been stimulated by the establishment of the Credit Mobilier; and Paris has learned that one of the Directors and deepest jobbers in this illusory scheme has paid the penalty that, sooner or later, awaits all such commercial dicing. The bankruptcy of M. Place, with liabilities to the tune of 18 millions of francs, is a rude awakening. Fortunately for the Bonapartean dynasty, this loss is divided amongst a small number of high-placed creditors. Fortunately for him also, the peaceful inundations along the Rhone and Loire and other rivers of the South of France, in causing enormous losses, have given his Majesty a legitimate opportunity of culling favour with his least attached subjects. Ten millions of francs bestowed off hand, in relief to the sufferers, and a personal visit to many scenes of these terrific disasters, have gained him popularity even in Lyons.

Arrival of the Atlantic.

(Per Montreal Telegraph Line)

New York, June 23.

The steamer Atlantic arrived about 11 o'clock on Sunday night. She brings 84 passengers, among them Millard Fillmore. In honour of his arrival numerous salutes were fired in this city and Brooklyn during the night. She left Liverpool June 9th.

The English public are still without official notice of Crampton's dismissal, but regarded it as a fixed fact. The positive but unofficial statements of the fact taken out by the Asia created little excitement. London papers all have editorials on the subject, and generally argue the case as a personal one, that there is no occasion to send Dallas away.

The Times continues to exhibit bitterness towards the United States. The News wonders aggressive America should cite the annexation of India as a palliation of her own propensities—India being an entirely exceptional case. The Morning Chronicle thinks it cowardly to make a scapegoat of Crampton. The London Star, organ of the Manchester party, thinks it perfectly absurd to go to war to vindicate the indignity towards Crampton and ridicules the idea.

General news unimportant.

An attempt on the life of the Queen of Spain is reported. A young gentleman presented a pistol at her, but was immediately disarmed.

A new Portuguese cabinet had been formed.

Parliamentary proceedings generally unimportant. The bill altering the Parliamentary oath, so as to admit of Jews taking it, had been passed by the House of Commons.

It is intimated that the inundations of France have rendered 10,000 people houseless, and 100,000 have been thrown out of employment. Notwithstanding the floods it was hoped the crops will not fall much below average.

It is reported in Berlin that Prussia and Sardinia had demanded, to be admitted into the Commission for reorganizing the Danubian Principalities, and that the demand had been acceded to.

It is stated that Austria has resolved to erect the Lombard Venitian Provinces in the kingdom of Upper Italy.

Arabia is still in a state of insurrection, refusing longer to recognise the rule of Turkey.

The Russian Commissioner to settle the affairs of the principalities has been requested to retire from the Commission of Mokalir Pasha, formerly Prince of Stourdza.

Crimean letters mention a report that 70,000 men are to commence rebuilding Sebastopol, after the retirement of the Allies.

The steamship Alma started a second time for New York, but the trouble again occurred in her machinery, and she put back to Southampton. Liverpool cotton market dull and favours buying; sales 14,000 bales up to Tuesday.

Breadstuffs dearer. Wheat 2d a 3d. better per bushel; 6d. a 1s. for flour; and Indian corn 1s. a 1s. 6d. per quarter advance over last week's quotations. Only moderate business done at the advance. Red wheat quoted at 9s. 3d. a 10s. 4d,; white 10s. 6d. a 11s. Western Canal flour 30s. a 34s. Baltimore and Ohio 35s. a 37s.—White corn, 29s. 6.; for New Orleans, 30s. 6d.; for prime northern yellow and mixed, 29s per quarter. Beef and pork dull and unchanged. Bacon in good demand at last quotations. Lard firmer and scarce, at 50s. 6d. for good and 58s. 6d. for refined.

London money market well supplied.—Consols closed at 94 a 94½.

The American Question.

THE DIFFICULTIES BETWEEN ENGLAND AND THE UNITED STATES.

In the House of Lords on the 9th inst.

Lord Clarendon asked whether the government were in possession of any further intelligence as to the state of affairs in the United States.

Lord Granville replied that the government were in possession of no further information on the subject. Letters were, however, expected from Mr. Crampton in the course of the night.

In the House of Commons, on the 9th inst., in reply to Mr. Disraeli —

Lord Palmerston said he had received no further information respecting the reported departure of the British Minister from Washington.

Addresses to the Rejected.

G.B. Mathew, Esq., lately occupying the post of H. B. M. Consul at Philadelphia, sails on Wednesday next on the Arabia, for Liverpool. We have great pleasure in putting it on record that a Farewell complimentary Address, very numerously signed, has been presented to Mr. Mathew, on his leaving the scene of his official duties; and that on Thursday of last week, the Philadelphia Club entertained him at a splendid banquet. Mr. Mathew, in short, however, "unacceptable" to General Pierce and Mr. Cushing, has contrived to enlist amongst his friends a large proportion of the respectability of that city. It seems to us that, somehow, the dismissed Consuls go off with flying colors, whilst the dismissers themselves have just cut a most sorry figure before their own political friends at Cincinnati.

PROBABLE MURDER.—On Sunday morning last, says the Jackson Citizen, the body of a man was found on the railroad track, almost two miles east of the city, horribly mutilated, the midnight train having passed over him. The body was brought to the depot and an inquest was held by Justice Pierce, during which the following facts were elicited: The deceased, whose name was Reuben Ferguson, from Medina, N. Y., came in town on Saturday in the cars; that he was about town all day until night, that he stated he intended to go to Kalamazoo that he was a drinking man and soon found where he could get a taste of "the critter," that he was all day drinking and spending, his time in the low groggeries near the river; that during the day he showed large sums of money to different persons—some $500 or $600 in gold and more in bank notes, that towards night he was seen in the vicinity of the railroad depot, and here all trace of his whereabouts was lost. His rifle and satchel were found in a Dutch grocery near the depot, where he deposited them about 7 o'clock in the evening and went off.—From an examination of the body, several physicians came to the conculsion that he had been murdered, and afterwards placed on the track. This suspicion was confirmed by the fact that when found, his money was all gone except about thirty dollars in bills. One leg was entirely severed by the cars, and still there was but very little blood found either upon his clothing, or upon the track where he lay. Two arrests were made upon suspicion, but after a thorough examination on Monday, the prisoners were released. The affair is one of great mystery, and has caused considerable excitement.—The body was buried, by order of the authorities, on Sunday.—Det. Ad.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY.—On Wednesday of last week, an old gentleman who resides in Oakland Co., left this city with his team for home, with a load of dry stuff, two young men asked him for permission to ride, which was readily given. When between Royal Oak and Birmingham, one of them pretended to discover that the linch pin was out, and all three jumped out, when the two young men collared the old man, robbed him of all his money, and then took to their he ls. At the next toll gate the old man told the keeper of the affair, and gave him a description of the men. Officer Joy heard of the affair, and yesterday arrested two men who answer the description, and who he knows to be suspicious characters. The old man is now wanted to identify them.—Det. Ad.

ADVERTISING.—The Utica Observer has the following about advertising, to which every shrewd business men will assent. The true course in business is to let the people know what you have to offer to their notice, or what you may desire to obtain from them. The system of advertising sets down the condition of existing trade as on a chart, and every one is enabled to guide his proceedings by it. Thus the exchanges of commerce are made with rapidity and satisfaction. There are ten thousand mutual wants in society which go about in search of each other. The advertising columns of the newspaper offer the ready means of bringing together these interests. They are the medium of communication between the seller and the buyer, the source of information mutually advantageous to the business man and the community. The time has passed for people to sit quietly in their stores, and trust to circumstances for customers. The aspect of business is entirely changed—the old landmarks have been removed, and new channels opened. Merchants and mechanics should not now sit quietly and gaze upon the dust gathering around their wares, but with becoming shrewdness place their pens on paper, enumerate their articles, and where they m y be found. Men of small capital long since discovered this road to wealth; and he who does not follow in their wake, will find himself distanced.

The Kingston Whig states that the excitement against the Member for the City of Kingston and the Member for the County of Frontenac, for Voting the Supply for the erection of the Public Buildings at Quebec, as the Seat of Governm ent, reached its climax on Saturday night. The effigies of these gentlemen were dragged at a Cart's Tail through Streets of Kingston, taken to the Commons in rear of the Burial Ground there hanged on Two Gibbets, and afterwards burnt. There was a great crowd but no rioting.

By the latest arrival from England, says the New York Herald, we are informed of the departure of vessels of war from different dockyards bound to the Canadian coast. The Arago brought us the following information:—"A despatch from Plymouth to Liverpool, dated on Monday night, June 3, says the Anchor, 14, screw, Captain Heathcote, has been ordered, by electric message, this evening, to proceed to Halifax with all despatch. It is reported that the Esk, 21, screw, has had her destination (South America,) changed to Halifax."

MISS NIGHTINGALE ON THE BRITISH SOLDIER.—In the House of Commons, on Thursday night, Mr. Stafford read "an extract from a letter written to a member of his family by one who had been called by Lord Ellesmere a "ministering angel." Miss Nightingale thus wrote in the month of March from the hospital over which she presided —"I have never been able to join in the popular cry about the recklessness, sensuality, and helplessness of the soldier. I should say (and perhaps few have seen more of the manufacturing and agricultural classes of England than I have before I came out here), that I have never seen so teachable and helpful a class as the army generally. Give them opportunity promptly and securely to send money home and they will use it. Give them schools and lectures, and they will come to them. Give them books and games amusement, and they will leave off drinking. Give them work and they will do it. Give them suffering, and they will bear it. I would rather have to do with the army than with any other class I have ever attempted to serve; and when I compare them with * * * I am struck with the soldier's superiority as a moral, and even an intellectual being."

GENERAL WASHINGTON'S ESTATE.—The domain which it was the pride and delight of General Washington to cultivate, and on which he had the largest barn and raised some of the finest crops in America, consisted of four contiguous farms, known as Mt. Vernon, Mount Zephyr, Laurel Spring, and Union. The three last contained 1,000 acres of the best land for agricultural purposes, on one of which stood General Washington's famous brick barn, since destroyed. Some years ago, after the farms had fallen into sad decay and were mostly overgrown with bushes, they were purchased by Mr. Aaron Leggett, who intended to add Mt. Vernon to them, and convert the whole into one grand park of 3,000 acres, to be handed down to posterity as a memorial of the father of his country. In the meantime he subjected them to the regenerating power of a Westchester county farmer, with free hands under him, and the cleared portion 500 acres, is in a good state of cultivation. Circumstances, however, have compelled him to relinquish his patriotic plan, and he now offers the 1,600 acres for sale. Is it not sad to think how this noble estate now lies almost valueless under that curse which its illustrious owner so deeply deplored, and strove by his council, his vote and example to remove from the land of his birth? Now, his sentiments on that subject, clothed in his own language can hardly be whispered in safety in the very jungle which has grown up on the fields that once smiled under his beneficient eye.—Boston Chronicle.

Mrs. Child once heard a young girl remark to her mother, I should like of all things to be married, if I could be sure my husband would die in a fortnight; then I should avoid the disgrace of being an old maid, and get rid of the restraint and trouble of a married life.

SIR ASTLEY COOPER'S PILLS.

This most excellent Vegetable Medicine is, (it may be safely said,) in the manner specified, warranted, on oath, to effect a cure.

The fine balsamic and invigorating powers which Sir Astley Cooper's Pills possess are wonderful; a trial of a single dose will carry conviction that they are all that is necessary to invigorate the feeble, restore the invalid to health, and do good in all cases; no fear need be entertained, as they are quite harmless.

The heads of families should always have them in the house, as they may, with the greatest confidence be resorted to at any time, or in any case.

Epsom salts are sometimes had recourse to when a purgative is required. If the true nature of Epsom Salts, Sedelitz Powders, and all saline aperients, were fully understood, they would never be resorted to—they occasion an excessive secretion and discharge of the natural moisture of the stomach and bowels, and this softens the contents of the stomach and bowels, and produces watery emotions—the vessels after this unnatural draining are dried up, and a confined state of the bowels is produced, which, if not carefully attended to, produces costiveness, and all the train of evils; bodes is enabled to guide his proceedings by it. Thus the exchanges of commerce are made with rapidity and satisfaction. There are ten thousand mutual wants in society which go about in search of each other. The advertising columns of the newspaper offer the ready means of bringing together these interests. They are the medium of communication between the seller and the buyer, the source of information mutually advantageous to the business man and the community. The time has passed for people to sit quietly in their stores, and trust to circumstances for customers. The aspect of business is entirely changed—the old landmarks have been removed, and new channels opened. Merchants and mechanics should not now sit quietly and gaze upon the dust gathering around their wares, but with becoming shrewdness place their pens on paper, enumerate their articles, and where they m y be found. Men of small capital long since discovered this road to wealth; and he who does not follow in their wake, will find himself distanced.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—Observe that on the top of each box of the Genuine Pills there is an excellent likeness of Sir Astley Cooper; also the name and the signature of MacPhail and Co, Sole Proprietors, London and New York, on the directions. Without these marks of authenticity, they are certainly spurious and an imposition. Sold at 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1 per box. Full directions are given with each box. There is a great saving by taking the larger sizes.

For sale by Simpson and Dunspaugh, Druggists, Toronto; John M. Thornton, Dundas; Andrew Oliver Galt; A. H. Cook, Brantford, General Agents, by whom Country Merchants and Medicine Venders will be supplied at London and New York prices.

The presence of a large quantity of this important plant food in certain fogs is not difficult to account for. Not only does the gradually increasing quantity of aqueous vapour in the atmosphere before the positive appearance of mist in any locality, collect and condense rare and widely diffused ammoniacal vapours, but the exhalations from the soil produced by decomposing vegetable matter, are arrested and accumulate. The period of the year when fogs rich in ammonia may be expected depends naturally upon the frequency of the fall of rain—upon the moisture of the atmosphere, and upon the winds. In Canada it appears reasonable to suppose that we may expect to find fogs rich in ammonia during the hot months of July and August, when the rain fall is not so great as in September.—During these months mists frequently hang over the fields, particularly in low situations. The exhalation of vapour of water from the leaves of plants being then checked, and their juices partially stagnating in an atmosphere often rich in ammoniacal vapours, all the conditions for the appearance of the fungus called "Rust" on the stems and leaves of the cereals appear to be fulfilled. It is commonly remarked that rust is most prevalent on new land; this perhaps explained by the large amount of vegetable matter thrown into a state of decomposition by means of air and the consequent production of ammonia. There is no doubt that much of the ammonia thus generated would combine with vegetable acids, and be fixed by clay, &c.; but some portion could not fail to combine with carbonic acid and escape into air in the form of the volatile carbonate, as is observed to a greater degree on manure heaps even where gypsum or other soil i fixers of ammonia are employed to avoid it. We must regard new land as a storehouse of ammonia and other plant food, which became liable to volatilize when liberated by too free an exposure to air without proper precautions. If the supposition be correct that 'Rust' is mainly occasioned by the concurrence of mists or fogs in July and August rich in ammonia; and that the action of heat in inducing the sudden appearance of that destructive parasite is really ammonial vapours, we have a remedy at hand which promises, when properly and carefully applied, if not entirely to check, at least to far to arrest the growth of the parasite as to claim a general trial, especially as its effects would probably prove equally availing in arresting mildew and blight.—What we require is an available absorbent of ammonia and its volatile compounds, not an absorbent which will destroy this valuable plant food, but one which possesses the property of inducing it to assume another form, perhaps equally available as a fertilizer, although of much slower action. Recent observations show that powdered charcoal answers these requirements. Charcoal not only absorbs ammonia to a large extent, but it also oxidizes it to nitric acid, and thus renders it temperately inert, but not unavailable to future fertilization. Powdered charcoal is distributed with the utmost ease over large areas. Being an extremely light substance and easily reduced to a state of division, the least breath of air is sufficient to carry it for hundreds of yards. Any one who tries the experiment of gently shaking a muslin bag, containing coarsely powdered charcoal, in a gentle wind, will find that the operation will speedily be over may be literally express it, a ten acre field, would certainly not cost one-tenth part of the labour of sowing the same field, with plaster; and as that operation is not unfrequent in this country, a practical guide is at once furnished of the amount of labour the operation involves. Powdered charcoal thus sown is very uniformly distributed by the least motion of air, and its effects are marvellous. In a stable, for example, strongly smelling of ammonia from fermenting urine, an ounce of powdered charcoal, shaken up in such a muslin bag or any fine network, rapidly and uniformly distributes itself, and instantly absorbs the ammoniacal vapours. A curious instance of the action of this deodorizer occurred at Balaclava during the heat of summer, when the stench was almost intolerable in that painfully celebrated harbour. A ship load of charcoal arrived, packed in bags, and the men who were engaged in transferring the cargo to the shore were covered with the dust, as was every object in the neighborhood—the stench which before prevailed, suddenly and completely disappeared.

Nothing is more simple than the manufacture of charcoal—a few billets of wood are to be piled like cordwood, then well covered with sods, with the exception of two orifices, one to admit a little fire, and the other to allow the smoke to escape, until the heap has well taken, and then to be firmly closed for the purpose of allowing slow combustion to go on in the absence of air.—When cool the charcoal may be crushed in a stout canvass bag by a lever, not by blows, and when sifted furnishes the required material for sowing.

To return to the subject of ammonia, we may examine its relation to the soil, and acknowledging the well known fact of its constant presence in rain water reasonably infer its accumulation in the soil. Professor Way indeed, has arrived at the conclusion that rich loamy land of the Tertiary Drift contains ammonia within available depths for vegetables at the rate of one ton per acre. The form in which ammonia is contained in the soil, renders it in general, useless to vegetables, it may be liberated however by certain processes practicably applicable. Together with potassa, this important plant food is separated by dry rot from the soluble salts, hence from rain-water, however rich in ammonia. This accumulation in a comparatively inert condition if also greatly increased by certain vegetable acids, the result of the partial decomposition of leaves roots, &c.; during the further decomposition of these bodies soluble salts of ammonia are liberated, hence one advantage of ploughing. But if we are permitted to reason respecting the great operations of nature guided by the infinitely smaller but not less characteristic results of chemical analysis in the laboratory, we arrive at properties of clay soil, in connection with other bodies, of singular interest and perhaps of equal importance. Ammonia forms with certain constituents of the soil, chemical compounds very sparingly soluble in water (silicate of alumina and ammonia)—one gallon of water dissolves, when pure, about one grain of this compound.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,
AND JOURNAL OF SUBURBAN ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the United States.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced by the owners of cottages, from designs by eminent and skilful architects. Space is also assigned to the tasteful art of Landscape Gardening, engraved plans of Farms in every style, and adapted to the peculiarities of different orders of architecture, beautifies the work.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and to all who can appreciate the sovereignty of a square rod of tillable earth, "The Illustrated Horticulturist and Journal of Suburban Art" will prove an invaluable companion. The typographical execution of the work is afforded: together with its really superior execution, both in regard to typography and editorial ability; must make it the most popular work of the kind in America.

"The Illustrated Horticulturist" is printed on the finest quality of pearl surfaced paper, manufactured expressly for it, is issued early the first of each month, commencing with July, 1855. The following gentlemen, eminent for their ability in the science of Horticulture, are engaged to conduct the Editorial department: H. P. KNIGHT, JAMES SOWDEN and D. W. RAY.

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by its present proprietor in 1848, and for 8 years well known to the leading farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us. The undersigned have made arrangements with the proprietor to publish it for the next, and probably succeeding volumes, and have resolved to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE
Illustrated with Engravings

Such as Farm Implements, Portraits of Animals, designs of Farm Buildings, New Inventions, &c., &c., interesting to the Farmer, and also portraits of some of the most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM MACDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the practice of Agriculture near this city. The active promoter of the various improvements made in our Agricultural Legislation since 1847, and having also been connected with the Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and writings in behalf of Canadian Agriculture are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to its columns as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to extend the correspondence on subjects of a practical kind.

AYER'S
PILLS
Are curing the Sick to an extent never before known of any Medicine.

INVALIDS, READ AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES.

JULES HAUD, Esq., the well known perfumer, of Chesterfield Street, Philadelphia, says: "My products are found at almost every toilet, says:

"I am happy to say of your CATHARTIC PILLS, that I have found them a better family medicine, for common use, than any others in my large stock. Many of my friends have realized marked benefits from them, and recincle with me in believing they have a permanent curative value in curing out diseases and curing the sick. They virtues for curing out diseases and curing the sick. They are not only effectual, but safe and pleasant to be taken—a qualities which must render them valued by the public when they are known."

The venerable Chancellor WARDLAW writes from Edgetown, 15th April, 1854:

"DR. J. C. AYER.—SIR: I have taken your Pills with great benefit, for the listlessness, languor, loss of appetite, and Bilious headache, which has of late been overdone me in the spring. A few doses of your Pills cured me. I have used your CHERRY PECTORAL many years in my family for coughs and colds with unfailing success. You make medicines which cure, and I feel it a pleasure to commend you for the good you have done and are doing."

JOHN F. BEATTY, Esq., Sec. of the Penn Railroad Co. says:

"SIR: I take pleasure in adding my testimony to the efficacy of your medicines, having derived very materia benefit from the use of both your PECTORAL and CATHARTIC Pills. I can never without them in my family, nor shall I ever consent to be, while my means will procure them.

The widely renowned S. S. STEVENS, M. D., of Wesleyville, N. H., writes:

"Having used your CATHARTIC PILLS in my practice, I certify from experience that they are an invaluable purgative. In the case of disordered functions of the liver, causing headache, indigestion, costiveness, and the worst varieties of disease arising therefrom, they are a surer remedy than any other. In all cases where a purgative medicine is required, I prefer your Pills to the public, as being equally reliable with the best, and in many are superior to any other I have ever found. Their sugar coating makes them pleasant to take, and their qualities which operate on the stomach and bowels prevent their griping. I have make them an invaluable article for public use. I have used for many years Ayer's CHERRY PECTORAL, and believe it the best Cough medicine in the world; and these Pills are in no way inferior to that admirable preparation in the treatment of diseases."

"Acton, Me., Nov. 25, 1853.

"DR. J. C. AYER.—DEAR SIR: I have been afflicted from my youth up with scrofula in its worst form, and for about twenty years' trial, and an untold of amount of suffering, have been completely cured by the use of your Pills and Pectoral. With what feelings of rejoicing I write can only be appreciated by those who have suffered as I have for so long.

"Never until now have I been free from this loathsome disease in some shape. At times it attacked my eyes, and made me almost blind; the sensitiveness remains; at others it settled in the scalp of my head, and destroyed my hair, and has for years; now it is on the back, and sometimes it came out in my face, and kept it for months a raw sore.

"About nine weeks ago I commenced taking your Cathartic Pills, and now am entirely free from the complaint. My eyes are well, my skin is fair, and my hair is coming. I scarcely a healthy growth; all of which makes me feel already a new person.

"Being in the ministry may be the means of conveying information that shall do good to others, I am, with every sentiment of gratitude, Yours, &c., MARIA PARKER."

"I have known the above named Mrs. Parker from her childhood, and her statement is strictly true.

ANDREW J. SERVE,
Overseer of the Portsmouth Manufacturing Co."

CAPT. JOEL FRYE, of the 4th Reg. Militia, writes from Boston, 20th April, 1854:

"Your Pills have cured me from a bilious attack which arose from derangement of the Liver, which had become very serious. I have also used your CHERRY PECTORAL, and from every remedy I could try; but a few doses of your Pills have completely restored me to health. I have given them to my children for worms, with the best of effects. They were promptly cured. I have recommended them to a friend for costiveness, which had troubled him for months; he told me in a few days that he had found one who made his burden easy. I say to you make the best medicine in the world; and I am free to say so."

Read this from the distinguished Solicitor of the Supreme Court, whose brilliant abilities have made him well known, not only in the Courts of law, but in politics:

"New Orleans, 5th April, 1854.

"SIR: I have great satisfaction in assuring you that myself and family have been very much benefited by your medicines. My wife was confined to her bed for a month with a severe and dangerous attack of pleurisy, and since then has enjoyed perfect health. Our children have several times been relieved from attacks of the Influenza and Croup by it. It is an invaluable remedy for these complaints. My daughter, Mrs. Eyre, was entirely cured me from a dyspepsia and costiveness, which has troubled her for some years, by your Pills. No one is much more important, from the fact that I had failed to get relief from the best physicians in the first cities of the country affords, and from any of the numerous remedies I had taken.

"You seem to us, Doctor, like a providential blessing to our family, and you may well suppose we are all in mindful of it.

Yours respectfully,
LEAH P. THAXTER."

"Senate Chamber, Ohio, April 5th, 1854.

"DR. J. C. AYER.—SIR: I take pleasure in saying that the ough trial of the CATHARTIC PILLS, left me by your agent, and have been cured by their use of a severe bilious attack, from which I had been suffering. The first dose to relieved me, and a few subsequent ones left me in better health now than for improved that I had been in for years before, which I attribute entirely to their effects.

LUCIUS B. METCALF."

The above are all from persons well known to us, and whose statements we believe to be entirely reliable.

Moonlight Hours.

We met—'twas on a summer's eve,
When all was calm and still;
The fair young moon her silvery light
Shone far o'er vale and hill.
We wandered by the murmuring stream,
Where the rippling waters glide;
Earth seemed too fair, too beautiful,
For sorrow to betide.

The light-winged, rosy hours flew fast
Along the moon-lit shore;
Soon came the time to say farewell—
Farewell to meet no more.
And sadness wreathed the low-toned words
Of parting by the main;
Yet o'er the heart there stole a hope,
That friends might meet again.

But all is dark and lonely now,
Along the sanded shore;
No more we wander by the waves,
As in the times of yore.
And far away mid sunny scenes,
I rove o'er life's blue sea;
Yet memory turns to moonlight hours,
And all it loved with thee.

To Kate.

BY SAMUEL H. ACHESON.

O, brighter far than the dark blue sea,
Are the eyes that beam with love for me;
O, sweeter far than the wild bird's song,
Is the voice that murmurs "Love stay not long";

O, purer far than earth's purest snows,
Is the bosom with love that for me now glows,
And dearer than all in earth or air
Are the lips that for me now move in prayer.

O, earnest and fond are the thoughts that rise
From her pure soul to heaven's bright skies;
O, soft is the hand as the softest down
Which to mine in love's chain shall soon be bound,
And dear is the heart which to mine shall be clasped,
There to be cherished while life shall last,
And heard shall my voice be early and late,
Asking a blessing on "my own dear Kate."

A Woman that just Wanted to Peep into that Closet.

Youngstown Lodge of I. O. O. F., determined to have their lodge room done up clean and nice, and it was unanimously resolved that a certain Mrs. K. should be employed to do the work.

After the meeting adjourned, the Guardian, who knew the inquisitive character of Mrs. K., procured a billy-goat and placed him in a closet that was kept as a reservoir for the secret things. He then informed the lady of the wishes of the Lodge, and requested her to come early next morning, as he would be then at leisure to show her what was and what was not to be done.

Morning came, and with it came Mrs. K. with her pails, tubs, brooms, brushes, &c., prepared and armed for the job and found the Guardian waiting for her.

"Now madame," said he, "I'll tell you what we want done, and how we came to employ you. The brothers said it was hard to get anybody to do the job and not to be meddling with the secrets in that little closet; we have lost the key and cannot find it to lock the door. I assured them that you could be depended on."

"Depended on!" said she, "I guess I can. My poor dead and gone husband, who belonged to the Free Masons, or Anti-Masons, I don't know which, used to tell me all the secrets of the concern, and when he showed me all the marks the gridiron made when he was initiated, and told me how they fixed poor Morgan, I never told a living soul to this day. If nobody troubles your closets till I do, they'll lay there till they rot—they will."

"I thought so," said the Guardian, "and now I want you to commence in that corner and give the wole room a decent cleaning, and I have pledged my word and honor for the fidelity to your promise. Now, don't go into that closet," said he, and then left the lady to herself.

No sooner had she heard the sound of feet on the last step of the stairs, then she exclaimed, "don't go into that closet! I'll warrant there's a gridiron; or some nonsense, just like the Anti-Masons for all the world, I'll be bound. I will just take one peep, and nobody will be any wiser, as I can keep it to myself."

Suiting the action to the word, she stepped lightly to the forbidden closet, and turned the button, which was no sooner done, than bah! went the billygoat, with a spring to regain his liberty; which came near upsetting her ladyship. Both started for the door, but it was filled with implements for house-cleaning, and all were swept clear from their position to the bottom of the stairs.

The noise and confusion caused by such unceremonious coming down stairs, drew half the town to witness Mrs. K's. efforts to get from under the pile of pails, tubs, brooms, and brushes in the street.

Who should be first to the spot but the rascally Guardian! who, after releasing the goat, which was a cripple for life, and uplifting the rubbish that bound the good woman to the earth, anxiously inquired if she had been taking the degrees.

"Taking the degree!" exclaimed the lady; "if you call tumbling from the top to the bottom of the stairs, with the devil after ye, taking things by degrees, I have them, and if you frighten folks as ye have me, and hurt them to boot, I'll warrant they'll make as much noise as I did."

"I hope you did not open that closet madam," said the Guardian.

"Open! Eve ate the apple she was forbidden. If you want a woman to do anything, tell her not to do it, and she'll do it certain. I could not stand the temptation. The secret was there—I wanted to know it. I opened the door, and out popped the varmint antler into my face. I thought the devil had me, and I broke for the stairs, with the devil butting me at every jump.—I fell over the tub, and we got down stairs as you found us, all in a heap."

"But, madame," said the Guardian, "you are in possession of the great secret of our Order, and must be initiated and sworn, and then go through in the regular way.

"Regular way!" exclaimed the lady, "and do you suppose I am going near the tarnal place again, and ride that ar critter without a bridle or lady's saddle! No never! I don't want to do with the man that rides it. I'd look nice perched on a billygoat, wouldn't I? No, never! I'll never go nigh it again, nor your Hall nuther. If I can prevent it, no lady shall ever join the Odd Fellows. Why, I'd sooner be a Free Mason, and be broiled on a gridiron as long as fire could be kept under it, and pulled from cellar to garret with a halter, in a pair of old breeches and slippers, just as my poor husband was. And he lived over it, but I never could live over such another ride as I took to-day."

How Major Jones Popped the Question.

"Major Jones' Courtship" is the title of a humorous work recently published, the denouement of which we will give our readers. Too bashful to "pop the question" in the usual way, Major Jones persuades his sweetheart to put up a stocking which will hold a couple of bushels, on the night when Santa Claus pays his visits, receiving her promise to keep forever what he gave her. She complies by hanging up the meal bag. Into this the gallant and lovelorn Major contrives to introduce himself at the "witching hour of night." But we shall let Major Jones speak for himself:

"I sot till midnight, and when they was all gone to bed I went softly into the back gate, and went up to the porch, and thar, sure enuff, was a great big meal-bag hanging to the jice. It was monstrous unhandy to get to it, but I was tarmined not to back out. So I sot some chairs on a top of a bench and got hold of a rope, and let myself down into the bag; but jest as I was getting in, the bag swung again the chairs, and down they went with a terrible racket. But nobody didn't wake up but old Miss Stallions's big cur dog, and he run and gin a ripin and tarin through the yard like rath, and round he went tryin to find out what was tha matter. I sot down in the bag and didn't breathe louder nor a kitten, for fear he would find me out, and after a while he quit barkin. The wind begun to blow bomstible cold, and the old bag kept turning round swinging so it made me seasick as the mischief. I was afraid to move for fear the rope would brake and let me fall, and thar I sot with my teeth rattlin like I had a ager. It seemed like it would never come daylight, and I do believe if I didn't love Miss Mary so powerful I would froze to deth; for my heart was the only part that felt warm, and it didn't beat mor'n two licks a minit, only when I thought how she would be sprized in the morning, and can. My poor dead and gone husband, who belonged to the Free Masons, or Anti-Masons, I don't know which, used to tell me all the secrets of the concern, and when he showed me all the marks the gridiron made when he was initiated, and told me how they fixed poor Morgan, I never told a living soul to this day. If nobody troubles your closets till I do, they'll lay there till they rot—they will."

"I thought so," said the Guardian, "and now I want you to commence in that corner and give the wole room a decent cleaning, and I have pledged my word and honor for the fidelity to your promise. Now, don't go into that closet," said he, and then left the lady to herself.

I thought the devil had me, and I broke for the stairs, with the devil butting me at every jump.—I fell over the tub, and we got down stairs as you found us, all in a heap."

"But, madame," said the Guardian, "you are in possession of the great secret of our Order, and must be initiated and sworn, and then go through in the regular way.

"Regular way!" exclaimed the lady, "and do you suppose I am going near the tarnal place again, and ride that ar critter without a bridle or lady's saddle! No never! I don't want to do with the man that rides it. I'd look nice perched on a billygoat, wouldn't I? No, never! I'll never go nigh it again, nor your Hall nuther. If I can prevent it, no lady shall ever join the Odd Fellows. Why, I'd sooner be a Free Mason, and be broiled on a gridiron as long as fire could be kept under it, and pulled from cellar to garret with a halter, in a pair of old breeches and slippers, just as my poor husband was. And he lived over it, but I never could live over such another ride as I took to-day."

How Major Jones Popped the Question.

"Major Jones' Courtship" is the title of a humorous work recently published, the denouement of which we will give our readers. Too bashful to "pop the question" in the usual way, Major Jones persuades his sweetheart to put up a stocking which will hold a couple of bushels, on the night when Santa Claus pays his visits, receiving her promise to keep forever what he gave her. She complies by hanging up the meal bag. Into this the gallant and lovelorn Major contrives to introduce himself at the "witching hour of night." But we shall let Major Jones speak for himself:

"I sot till midnight, and when they was all gone to bed I went softly into the back gate, and went up to the porch, and thar, sure enuff, was a great big meal-bag hanging to the jice. It was monstrous unhandy to get to it, but I was tarmined not to back out. So I sot some chairs on a top of a bench and got hold of a rope, and let myself down into the bag; but jest as I was getting in, the bag swung again the chairs, and down they went with a terrible racket. But nobody didn't wake up but old Miss Stallions's big cur dog, and he run and gin a ripin and tarin through the yard like rath, and round he went tryin to find out what was tha matter. I sot down in the bag and didn't breathe louder nor a kitten, for fear he would find me out, and after a while he quit barkin. The wind begun to blow bomstible cold, and the old bag kept turning round swinging so it made me seasick as the mischief. I was afraid to move for fear the rope would brake and let me fall, and thar I sot with my teeth rattlin like I had a ager. It seemed like it would never come daylight, and I do believe if I didn't love Miss Mary so powerful I would froze to deth; for my heart was the only part that felt warm, and it didn't beat mor'n two licks a minit, only when I thought how she would be sprized in the morning, and how I would look and long husband, who cussed old dog came up on the porch and began to smell about the bag, and then he barked like he thought he'd treed something. "Bow! wow! wow?" ses he. Then he'd smell again, and tried to get up to the bag. "Git out!" ses I very low, for fear they would hear me. "Bow! wow! wow?" ses he.—"Begone you bomnible fool," ses I, and I felt all over in spots, for I spected every minit he'd nip me, and what made it worse I didn't know what abouts he'd take hold. "Bow! wow! wow?" ses he. Then I tried coaxin. "Come here good fellar," ses I, and whistled a little to him, but it wasn't no use. Thar he stood and kep up his eternal whinin and barkin all night. I couldn't tell when daylight was breakin, only by the chickens crowin, and I was monstrous glad to hear 'em, for if I'd had to stay thar one hour more, I don't believe I'd ever got out of that bag alive."

They got him out in the morning covered with meal and almost frozen. But Miss Mary does not refuse his present.—And he says, "I tell you what, it was worth hanging in a meal bag from one Crismus to another to feel as happy as I have ever sence."

Strange if True.

The Boston Times makes itself responsible for this rather steep narration:

"Strange case—a woman with a live Snake in her stomach two years old—its presence disclosed by a spiritual Medium.

We see occasionally, in the papers accounts of persons swallowing living reptile, and subsequently ejecting them; but all such statements have been treated as either entirely groundless or else greatly exaggerated. But we have now a case of this description which admits of no cavil or doubt, but may be wielded upon as wholly, and strictly true. For a period of two years or more, a respectable lady (Mrs. P) residing in Amesbury, has experienced very unusual and, at times distressing feelings in her stomach, the cause of which no one could divine.

"This state of things continued without interruption and resulted in the complete physical prostration of Mrs. P., with unmistakable symptoms of speedy death. Her case had attracted the attention of the neighborhood, and she had called in the best medical assistance at hand, but all to no purpose. Her physicians gave it up as a hopeless case, and acknowledged themselves unable to discover the cause of her sickness. Having thus exhausted all apparent human means for her relief, Mrs. P. (who is a spiritualist and a powerful medium,) resolved to test the power of the spirits in the matter of her ailment. With this object she called on another lady medium, and stated her case, requesting her to invoke the aid of the spirit of Dr. Rush, which she did, and the answer was that Mrs. P. had within her stomach a living reptile, which, if not soon ridden of would be the means of her death?" It also prescribed the course to be adopted, giving the name and quantity of the medicine to be administered. Those directions were immediately followed, and the ejection from the stomach of Mrs. P. of a live snake, of the water adder species, which measured upwards of fourteen inches in length and one and a quarter inches in circumference! The snake was disgorged upon the floor, and was not only alive, but exhibited all the enormous traits of it species, running out its forked tongue and even hissing at those around. This event occurred about 10 days since, and we are happy to add Mrs. P. is fast regaining health and strength. She supposes that she swallowed the reptile two years since while drinking from a spring in Maine."

Important Decision under the Reciprocity Treaty.

From the Chicago Times.

We learn that ever since the Reciprocity Treaty went into operation the Collectors of nearly all the lake ports have admitted Pearl Barley free of duty. Indeed the American Consuls in Canada have so understand, giving it as their opinion that the article was exempt from duty. Upon an arrival of a lot of Pearl Barley in this port, Collector Conley required the payment of duty; which was paid under protest by the importers, and an appeal taken to the Treasury Department. The decision of the Collector of Chicago has been fully sustained by Secretary Guthrie, and henceforth the duty will be exacted upon all imports of pearl barley. The following is a decision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 5th.

SIR—Application has been made to Department by Armstrong Bros. & Co., of Chicago, for return of duty exacted on 100 bbl. "Pearl Barley," contending that the same should have been admitted free, on the ground that "flour manufactured from wheat" is free, under the reciprocity treaty. The reciprocity treaty provides for the admission to free entry of "grain," "flour" and "breadstuffs." By "grain" is understood grain in its natural state, not manufactured; and by "breadstuffs," "flour and meal." "Pearl Barley" is not a grain, understood as such in the treaty; nor is it a "breadstuff" as flour and grain; but is clearly a manufacture from a grain, being "barley deprived of all its investments, and afward rounded and polished in a mill," (see the U. S. Dispensatory, page 390; therefore, in the opinion of this Department, such barley not being considered a grain or a bread-stuff provided for as free by the reciprocity treaty, is liable to duty; consequently the claim of Messrs. Armstrong, Bros. & Co. cannot be allowed.

"Very respectfully, your ob't serv't,

"JAMES GUTHRIE, Sec'ry of the Tres'y.

"P Conley, Esq., Collector of Customs, Chicago, Illinois."

OCCUPATIONS OF THE AMERICANS.—The census returns of the occupations of the people of the United States are curious and instructive. The number of barbers and brokers is about the same, and between the two people get well shaved. There are about eighty professed doctors to one professional undertaker. Only eighty-two people informed the census takers that they were "authors," while no less than two thousand individuals assumed to be "artists." There are one hundred thousand blacksmiths, and the same number of merchants. The lawyers out number the brokers by ten thousand, there being twenty-four thousand of the former, and fourteen thousand of the latter. The hatters and tobacconists are about equal in number. The carpenters number two hundred thousand; the masons sixty thousand; the tailors fifty thousand; the wood-wrights thirty thousand; the saddlers twenty-three thousand. There are more confectioners than watchmakers; more weavers than teachers; more vinegar makers than showmen; and the same number of waggon makers as editors! Strange to relate that, among the returns of the trades, not a politician is enumerated: and the tables of the professions do not include a single patriot.—Chron. and News.

THE UNPLEASANT POSTSCRIPT.—An amusing story is going the round of society in Dublin. A certain Dean, who is desirous of standing well with the Castle and who has frequent interviews with the Lord Lieutenant, gave his excellency a letter to read, which he had just received from a gentleman in the Crimea, formerly his excellency's private secretary. His excellency read with much satisfaction till he came to a postscript, which it seems had escaped the rev. dean's notice, and then his face darkened, and he asked the dean whether he had read the whole letter. 'Yes,' replied the reverence; very amusing, isn't it?' His excellency returned the letter, and the confounded dean then read, 'Can it be true that that old ass, C——, is going to marry Rose——? naming a young lady, one of the belles of Dublin. Whether his excellency in anger, or the dean in distress, disclosed the story, is not known, but it said that the tale is generally credited, and excites unbounded merriment in the gay circles of the Irish capital.

There is no use saying that worth makes the man. A poor acquaintance says that he put on a borrowed suit of broadcloth to accompany his family, to the show, and was surprised to notice how affable his acquaintances all were. The next day he entered town in his overhauls, and was not known, nor could he obtain credit for a mackerel.

DIABOLICAL,—On Wednesday last, a man was caught placing an iron chain across the track of the Galt branch of the Great Western Railway. Happily a train which passed before the discovery, crossed the obstruction in safety, and chase was made after the individual, who was caught and taken before a magistrate, when, after an examination, he was committed to jail, to take his trial at the next Quarter Sessions.—His name is Walter Oliver, a laborer, residing in Dumfries and he is said to be in an unsound state of mind. He stated that he placed the chain on the track "for some fun to himself."—London Prototype.

At a Printers' Festival in Boston, a short time since, the following capital toast was drank:—

THE EDITOR.—The man who is expected to know everything, tell all he knows, and guess at the rest; to make oath to his own good character, establish the reputation of his neighbours, and elect all candidates of office; to blow up everybody, suit everybody, and reform the world; to live for the benefit of others, and have the epitaph on his tombstone, "Here he lies at last;" in short he is a locomotive running on the track of public notoriety; his lever is his pen; his boiler is filled with ink, his tender is his scissors, and his driving wheel is public opinion; whenever he explodes it is caused by nonpayment of subscriptions.

Mr, B——, a well known metropolitan printer, once told us that on one occasion an old woman in the country came into his printing office with an old Bible in her hand.

"I want," she said, "that you should print it over again. It's gettin' leetle blurren sort of, and my eyer isn't what they was How much do you ax?"

"Fifty cents,"

"Can you have it done in half an hour?—wish you would, wan't to be gettin' home—live good ways out o'town."

"Certainly,"

When the old lady went out, he sent round to the office of the American Bible Society, and purchased a copy for fifty cents.

"Lor' sakes-a-massy!" exclaimed the old lady, when she came to look at it, "how good you've fixed!—it's e'en a'most good as new. I never seed nothin' so cur'ous as what printin' is!"

MARSHAL PELLISSIER.—The Marshal has never been a favorite with Napoleon. He has made replies to the Emperor over the telegraph in answer to the Emperor's orders, but on the whole on the Malakoff, which would more than once have cost him his place, had it not been for the decided interference of his friend, Marshal Vaillant, Minister of War. On one occasion, afar the repulse from the Malakoff, the Emperor sent orders which it was impossible to follow, and which irritated Pellissier to the highest degree. Pellissier decided Vaillant to say to his Majesty that he had better occupy himself with his own affairs in the Tuileries; and that he knew his own position best, and what he had to do and how to do it, and that no one in Paris could judge so well as himself what was the nature of the difficulties he had to contend with. The Emperor, on the receipt of this reply, would immediately discharge him from the command; but Marshal Vaillant, insisting that that was the very kind of man he wanted in the Crimea, finally changed his design.

Swift tells a good story of a man who was brought before Jeffries for murder.—"Your name is Dillman," said the Judge, "take away D and your name is ill man; put K to it and it is Kill-man. Commit him, his name ought to be sufficient to hang him."

BULLS.—A friend sends us some bulls that are so old we shall turn them out immediately.

A travelling gentleman, looking for the house of an acquaintance in Dublin, inquired of a native-born Irishman—

'Who lives in that house across the way?

'Johnny O'Brien to be sure,' replied Michael, 'but he don't live there now, for he's dead, he is.

'Ah! how long has he been dead?'

'And yer honour, if he had lived till next Monday he would have been dead a fortnight.'

Our travelling friend pursued his walk and his inquiries, and seeing a very large funeral procession he asked another native whose funeral that was.

'Be gorrah, sir,' said Mike, with a most innocent look, it's myself that cannot say for certain, but I'm after thinking its the man's in the coffin,'

EDUCATION.—I have observed that most ladies who have had what is considered an education, have hidden of an education progressing through life. Having attained a certain measure of accomplishment, knowledge, manners, &c., they consider themselves made up, and so take their station.—They are pictures, which, being quite finished, are now but in a frame.—a gilded one, if possible,—and hung up in permanence of beauty: permanence, that is to say, till old Time, with his rude and dirty fingers, soils the charming colours. A man in Wisconsin, who recently inserted a long advertisement in the papers, referring his farm for sale, closed it in the following sublimely ridiculous style:—'The surrounding country is the most beautiful the God of nature ever made. The scenery is celestial, divine: also two wagons to sell and a yoke of steers.'

DEATH BY DROWNING—On Sunday last a fine intelligent lad, son of Mr. Midleditch of this town, was unfortunately drowned in the Detroit river, at Elliott's point, while bathing. Every effort was made by his companions to rescue him, but without success; the current being very rapid, he was carried out towards the lake, and sank before a boat, which was close at hand, could be got off to him. The body has not yet been found.—Telegraph.

A humorous young man was driving a horse which was in the habit of stopping at every house on the roadside. Passing a country tavern, where were collected together some dozen countrymen, the beast, as usual ran opposite the door, and then stopped in spite of the young man, who applied the whip with all his might to drive the horse on. The men on the porch commenced a hearty laugh, and some of them inquired if he would sell the horse.

'Yes,' replied the young man; 'but I cannot recommend him, as he once belonged to a butcher, and stops whenever he hears the calves bleat.'

The crowd retred to the bar in silence.

A celebrated hangman in England showing the gallows attached to Newgate, observed to the bystanders that he had hung twenty persons on it at one time. Some suggested it was too small.

"Oh, no, bless you," replied the hangman, "twenty-six persons could swing on that very comfortable."

The most cheering accounts of the crops are now daily received from every part of Ireland. Every description of crop exhibits the utmost luxuriance, and the farmers have given up all their recent apprehensions. The potatoes have a most flourishing appearance, and it is stated that even in the heaviest soils the rain has not inflicted any damage. Some cattle were killed by lightning in the county of Limerick on Tuesday last.

Napoleon was an inveterate snuffer, and it is recorded in history that he once left his room for a few moments, and returned to take his snuff from the mantlepiece. He thought the snuff felt strangely and calling to a dog that was laying near him, administered a pinch. The poor animal soon rolled in the agonies of death. Napoleon became more cautious after this, and kept his snuff in his waistcoat pocket, which he had sheathed with tin. This was a remarkable exhibition of a presentiment infuitive idea that was guarding the destinies of this great man and if it had been an occurrence of the present day would be attributed to spiritualism.

A physician passing by a stone-mason's shop bawled out,

"Good morning, E! Hard at work, I see. You finish your grave stones as far as "In memory of," and then wait I suppose to see who wants the monument next."

"Why, yes," said he, "unless somebody's sick, and, you are doctoring him then I keep right on."

PROVINCIAL PARLIAMENT.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

THE SUPPLY BILL.

The Supply Bill from the Lower House was introduced by the hon. the Speaker, and read a first time.

Hon. Mr. ROSS said he had charge of the Supply Bill, and was not prepared to move the second reading till he had an opportunity of reading it over.

Hon. Mr. DeBLAQUIERE did not think the hon. gentleman had the power of holding it over. It contained an item of £50,000 for public buildings at Quebec, and as this house had already resolved that it would make no such grant, they ought to throw it out.

Hon. Mr. ROSS.—I do not intend to move the second reading till Monday.

Hon. Mr. MORRIS.—The Bill is in possession of the house, and it is quite competent for any hon. gentleman to move that the house shall not proceed further with the consideration of it.

Hon. Mr. DeBLAQUIERE said he would take that course. This house had been termed a body of old women, but the country was now obliged to rely on this house of old women to sustain its rights. (Hear, hear.) He defied the Government to carry out such a measure as this, to fix the Seat of Government permanently in Quebec, and thereby to govern Upper Canada in Lower Canada. The opinion of the people of Upper Canada could not be set at nought, and if this measure was pressed down their throats the fate of the Union was sealed. (Hear, hear.) He advocated on the floor of this house the rights and interests of Upper Canada, which were sacrificed by factions and coalitions in the other house.—This Bill might have been met by a refusal to admit it at its first reading. From feelings of courtesy that course had not been taken, but he would now move it.

"Resolved, That this house, not having been consulted on the subject of fixing any place for a permanent Seat of Government of this Province, and the other branch of the Legislature having resolved upon Quebec as such permanent Seat of Government, and having moreover passed a Bill of Supply, making provision for erecting public buildings at Quebec, this house feels itself imperatively called upon to declare that it cannot concur in the said Bill of Supply."

Hon. Mr. FERGUSSON said that this was a critical moment. He had always felt a horror at resisting a Bill of Supply, but he thought they were justified in taking that course in regard to a Bill which had been sent up to be crammed down their throats, notwithstanding the solemn declaration of this house that they would not pass a bill with that item in it. He knew the feelings of the yeomanry of the country, and they would put the saddle on the horse. They would see that the Government had forced them into that course by pressing that abominable item, and they would thank this house for stopping it. (Hear, hear.)

Hon. Mr. BOULTON said, this house had on a former occasion taken the course of representing their views on the Seat of Government by an address, and it had been informed that the popular branch was understood to represent the wish of the people. He believed the only proper course which this house could take was to adopt his hon. friend's resolution, and afterwards to confer with the hon. the Speaker of the lower house. He held that the Seat of Government could not be fixed without the concurrence of all the branches of the Legislature. The Province at large would never concur in its being fixed at Quebec. It might just as well be fixed at Sarnia.—Had it been fixed at Kingston, contentment would have prevailed.

Hon. Mr. FERRIE begged hon. gentlemen to avoid rescinding their previous vote, and referring the question, as recommended by Mr. Ross, to the people. He hoped every hon. gentleman would stand by his previous vote.—(hear, hear)—and let the House of Assembly know that the members of this house were not the significant, trifling creatures they represented them to be.—(Hear, hear.)

Hon. Mr. SEYMOUR said the responsibility of stopping the supplies would no doubt be great, but that responsibility rested with the Government themselves. Had they introduced it as a Supplementary Bill as they were now doing for some other items that stood to the credit of the £50,000, then the matter might have been disposed of without interfering with the Supply Bill.

Hon. Mr. ROSS said his opinion was that by this vote the question would be brought back to the point at which the alternate system was established. And he would pledge himself to oppose any further vote next session, unless the Government gave a pledge to carry out the alternate system.

Hon. Mr. MORRIS thought that his hon friend, Mr. Ross, could not have weighed the matter properly, when he recommended the course he did, after the resolution adopted on the most serious consideration by the house yesterday. If the house took the course recommended by Mr. Ross, they would only stultify themselves before the country. The responsibility thrown on the house in this matter was a very great one. As rights of the people had not been upheld as they ought to have been in the popular branch, and it would be discovered that in this question public opinion was much better represented in this branch. (Hear, hear.) He should give his vote without the least hesitation. Although inconvenience should result to the public service, this house could not be held accountable for it.

Hon. Mr. GOODHUE looked upon this as a question of vast importance to the future destinies of the province. If this £50,000 was voted, every constituency in Upper Canada would insist either on a Dissolution of the Union, or that the vote be rescinded.

Col. TACHE most earnestly and solemnly protested against the course now attempted by a certain number of gentlemen in this house—a course not taken by the House of Lords in England for centuries. When obnoxious items were forced on them, the House of Lords protested, and that was all.

Hon. Mr. DeBLAQUIERE.—No!

Col. TACHE insisted he was correct, and yet this house, which was about to go out of existence, was to do for centuries—stop the Supplies. The house would practically say to the Crown, not—"we are going to run you through with a sword, to stab you"—but "we will starve you, we will stop the public works, we will stop pay of public servants, because an obnoxious item is introduced into the Supply Bill." The putting of the Governor General in Montreal, and the burning of the Parliament House, was nothing to this. It was said, it did not follow that a modification would not be assented to by the other branch. What guarantee had they that the other branch would not treat any such proposition with scorn.

Hon. Mr TACHE.—Then you throw it out altogether, and take the whole responsibility on yourselves, and be assured that, if we are in the minority, we will take care that the responsibility shall rest on your shoulders. How suddenly did not seem to realize the very grave character of the proposition, to deprive the Government for a twelvemonth of any means to carry on the public service. They were on the brink of a precipice, in danger of falling into an abyss. The Legislative Council before the Union drove the people into rebellion and bloodshed, and in Lower Canada were called—"the mischievous old men." The constitution of the house was now to be changed, and if this resolution passed, what appellation would posterity apply to them? It would be said as of the impenitent sinner on his death-bed, just before falling into the abyss—"Tet commencement, tel fin."

Hon. Mr. DeBLAQUIERE, in allusion to the closing remarks of the speaker, said he was how as old as any, and fought to moulder drop into the grave, and if he should be would desire no other epitaph to be engraved on his tomb-stone than that he had done his duty this day to the Province of Canada. (Cheers.) The hon. gentleman went on to comment on the speaker's view of the constitutional bearing of the question, which he did not think he had stated correctly.—Since the Revolution, the constitution of England had been so firmly settled, that never, except, perhaps, on one occasion had the house attempted to interfere with the supplies of the other. He proceed to warn from May, to show that when the Commons tacked any obnoxious enactment in to the Supply Bill, the Lords had vindicated their own rights, by protest, by conference, and by rejection of the Bills." This was a different statement from that of the Speaker, who represented that the Lords had always contented themselves with protesting. (Loud cries of Hear hear.) He maintained that this was one of those matters which the Assembly had no right to touch, and in attaching any item to a Supply Bill. This was a vote of £50,000—in pursuance of a decision of the Legislative Assembly." That expression alone was quite sufficient to have prevented the entrance of the Bill into this house. The hon. speaker predicted disastrous consequences from the step proposed to be taken.

Hon. Mr. BOULTON recalled the house that when Mr. Hincks carried a vote of £60,000 for public buildings at Quebec, he did not introduce it into the Supply Bill, but carried through a special Bill for the purpose, which was sent up to the other house at the same time as this Bill, and that the Government felt they could not carry it at a distinct measure, and therefore tacked it on to the Supply Bill. (Hear, hear.)—Had the Government taken the proper course they would not have been in the embarrassing position they now were.

Hon. Mr. Ross said the reason why a separate measure was introduced in the case referred to, was that £50,000 was taken the University funds, in order to furnish an immediate fund for the growing funds of that institution.

The vote was then taken on Hon. Mr. DeBlaquiere's resolution, which was carried on a division of twelve to nine.

CONTENTS.—Hon. Messrs, DeBlaquiere, Ferrie, Goodhue, Morris, Gordon, Ferguson, Hamilton, Dixon, Hicks, Boulton, Seymour and Matheson.—12.

NON-CONTENTS.—Hon. Messrs. Perry, Ross, Quesnel, Armstrong, Bourret, Panet, Cartier, Belleau, and the Speaker.—9.

Hon. Mr. DeBLAQUIERE, to make sure that the Bill would not again come up for a second reading, moved—

"Resolved,—That, when this house has deliberately expressed its opinion by resolution as to any matter brought under its consideration, the same subject may not be resumed for reconsideration at a future day of the same session."

Hon. Mr. ARMSTRONG objected to the motion being taken up without notice.

Hon. Mr DeBLAQUIERE moved that the rule of the house which would prevent the motion being taken up, be suspended.

Carried by twelve to nine.

The resolution was then agreed to on the same division.

The house then adjourned for a few minutes. When it resumed,

Hon. Mr. Ross moved that one of the Masters in Chancery do go down to the House of Assembly and acquaint it with the resolution passed by this house in reference to the Supply Bill—that the Lower House might ask a conference, or send another Bill.

Hon. Mr. MORRIS thought it would be well to take some time to deliberate as to what was the constitutional course now to be pursued.

Col. TACHE thought the best course was that suggested by Mr. Ross.

Hon. Mr. ARMSTRONG said, the Bill had fallen through, and if the other house was anxious to know how it had been disposed of, they might come and examine the journals of this house.

The Speaker then left the chair for half an hour.

The house again met at half-past three, and adjourned till Monday.

The Banks of Canada.

From a return laid before the Legislative Council, by command of his Excellency, we condense the following facts:—

The average amount of gold and silver in reserve in the Bank of Upper Canada, for the year ending 31st March last, was £81,091, and the average amount of notes in circulation was £769,760.

In the Bank of Montreal, during the same period, the average amount of specie on hand an average amount of £194,536, and the amount of notes in circulation was £1,012,487.

In the year 1855, the Commercial Bank had on hand an average amount of £117,603, and had notes circulated to the amount of £508,225. This Bank held, on the 14th April last, £91,250 c'y in Government debentures.

The Bank of British North America, in the same period, had in circulation notes to the amount of £807,863, for the redemption of which they kept on hand £298,312.

The City Bank of Montreal, for the year ending March 31, had an average circulation of notes to the amount of £236,031, and kept in reserve £42,212 in gold and silver.

The Bank of the People for the year ending March 1, had an average circulation of notes to the amount of £109,695, and specie on hand to the amount of £30,925.

The Queen Bank, in the same period circulated £1,899,328 in notes, and had in the vaults specie amounting to £375,408 in gold and £30,000 in silver.

The Gore Bank, in 1855, had an average circulation of £251,462 in notes, and kept in reserve for their redemption an average amount of £40,000 in specie.

The Niagara District Bank, in 1856, had notes circulating to the average amount of £57,114, and kept in reserve £2,730.

In March last, Molson's Bank had in circulation notes amounting to £55,863—registered bills, £22,376—in all, £78,238; for which it had specie on hand to the amount of £11,116.

The Zimmerman Bank, for the fifteen months ending December 31, 1855, had in circulation notes amounting to $140,000, and had on hand $6,000. E. A. Kenduck, Esq., the Associate Cashier, says—"Our exchanges being settled by sight-drafts in New York, and redemption made in the same manner, renders it unnecessary to keep large amounts of specie in our vaults; our position, also, is such, that we can obtain, at any time, what specie we may require, within twenty four hours, from New York."

MILITIA GENERAL ORDER.

His Excellency the Governor General and Commander in Chief has much pleasure in communicating to the Officers, non commissioned officers and privates of the Militia of the Province, the following Extract from a Despatch addressed to His Excellency by the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

[Extract.]

Downing Street,
2d May, 1856.

"I have had the greatest satisfaction in submitting to her Majesty the accounts which you have transmitted to me of the zeal and energy with which all classes of Her Canadian Subjects have come forward to carry into effect the provisions of the new Militia Act, and I trust that the result will be that this Local Force will specially be placed on a footing of permanent efficiency."

(Signed) H. LABOUCHERE

By Command of His Excellency the Governor General and Commander in Chief.

AMERICAN vs. BRITISH COMMERCE.

One of the chief characteristics of our cousins on the Southern bank of the St. Lawrence, is the egotistical habit in which they all indulge, from the brawling orator at the primary meeting to the Chief Magistrate at Washington. We sober Britons have become so well accustomed to this failing, that every fresh outburst only provokes a smile, just as the casual traveller laughs at the street buffoon; and it is, perhaps a question whether we should on any occasion condescend to notice any of the series of egotistical demonstrations by which they endeavor—like the frog in the fable—to puff themselves into greatness. And, so far as we ourselves are concerned, there could be no necessity for noticing them; we perfectly understand the nation; we can appreciate any good qualities they possess, even although they fail to acknowledge that John Bull is anything but a scoundrel; and we also can see in clearest light the errors into which they fall politically and morally, like every other people. But in other questions where they are not so well known their hyperbolical tales may pass for sober truth. Doubtless, many people on the continent of Europe believe that Canada exists as a British Province merely by sufferance—by virtue of the generous forbearance of omnipotent dollardom—that we are dragging on a miserable existence under the wheels of Monarchy, while across the lines all the inhabitants revel in the luxuries of perfect freedom, although the actual sober truth is, that Monarchy in America represents freedom, and Republicanism represents slavery.

Books, pamphlets and newspapers are thrust into the hands of every emigrant and carried into every nation, containing lying representations of the country, almost invariably accompanied with disparaging remarks concerning Britain. It would be impossible, in one short article, to deal with the so multiform falsehoods as a whole; and in many cases it would be useless as well as endless. It is sufficient to refer them to one count to ensure a doubt of their truthfulness on all others. The United States are justly proud of their commercial greatness, and we do not find fault on that account, but because they seek to elevate themselves by climbing on the shoulders of a neighbor. In all the periodicals and almanacs of the Union, we are told that the commerce of the United States is the largest in the world; they admit, indeed, that Britain stands second—but only second! We propose to examine the figures on both sides, and then draw a sound conclusion—like Paterfamilias, we have full faith in figures. The entire tonnage of the United States, including every description of lake, river and canal craft, is stated to be 5,961,416 tons; but it must be remembered that the American ton is 2,000 pounds. When we apply the British standard of measurement, the actual tonnage is 5,054,862; but even a large proportion of this sum is fictitious, as American vessels are measured in a different manner from British vessels, so that a vessel which would be rated at 5 or 600 tons in a British registry, will pass easily in an American port for 7 or 800 tons; for instance, the magnificent steamship Arabia is registered in the Clyde at 3,100 tons, and the two Michigan Central Railroad boats at Detroit, which have not more than half the capacity of the Arabia are actually rated as being 2,500 tons! or only one-sixth less tonnage than the second steamship in the British Empire!!

We will, however, allow them the full benefit of their own figures, and call their total tonnage 5,054,862, on June 30th, 1854. The tonnage of Britain on January 2d, 1854, exclusive of every kind of inland craft, was 5,043,270 tons. By adding the proportional average increase of former years up to the date of the American report the figures would be 5,203,704, in excess of the American tonnage by their own showing, 148,642 tons; but if measured in the same manner as American vessels the excess would really be over a million of tons; the number of British ships registered on January 5th, 1854, was 35,960; on June 30th, 1854, 36,531. We have not been able to ascertain the number of American vessels at these dates. We will demonstrate, by reference to the import and export trade of both countries, that not only in tonnage are the Americans far behind, but also in the amount of business done. In 1854, 32,928 vessels entered British ports from foreign countries, with a total tonnage of 7,899,742 tons. Of these 17,656 were British, with a tonnage of 4,789,986 tons; in the same year 35,647 vessels, with 7,870,536 tons, cleared for foreign ports from British ports; of these 18,414 were British ships; tonnage, 4,638,654 tons.

During the same period 21,677 vessels entered ports in the United States from foreign countries, of which number 9,955 were American. 21,681 cleared for foreign ports from the United States, of which number 10,001 were American; tonnage not stated.

The official value of exports from Britain for the year ending January 5, 1855, amounted to £243,893,603, of which sum £29,752,-944 was the value of foreign and colonial merchandize re-exported.

The value of imports from the United States for the year ending June 30th, 1854, into the United States, was £55,648,213.

The official value of imports into Britain for the year ending January 5th, 1855, amounted to £124,456,159.

The value of imports for the year ending June 30th, 1854, into the United States, was £61,156,051.

Query, if they have the largest commercial marine, what can they do with it? They can only be carrying ballast, both ways.—It may be said that since the repeal of the British navigation laws, that American ships have become the carriers of British produce; that is not the case, however; in 1854 only 1,536 American ships were engaged in the import trade to Britain, against 17,655 British ships, and in the export trade from Britain during the same year, 1,204 American ships were engaged against 18,414 British ships.

We have no wish whatever to disparage American enterprise and ability. They are like ourselves, Anglo-Saxons; and every triumph they win only adds to the glory of the parent race; but as they seem inclined to consider themselves a separate people, we cannot permit them to glorify themselves by falsifying statements, affecting Britain. We say, go ahead by all means, but don't gibber; and the time may possibly come when you will reach the level of Britain's glory,—although we see little chance at present of doing so. Meantime the figures given above must satisfy every one that in vessels, tonnage and commerce, America is still far behind Britain.

Whether editors in the States are continually telling us how their commercial vessels, when fitted out as privateers, would, in case of a war, sweep the ocean of British ships, but they seem to overlook the fact that Britain has much greater facilities for fitting out privateers, should that mode of warfare be adopted; and we have proved that she could bring out a much greater number of privateers. As to the war vessels, there is of course no comparison. The United States navy comprising only 96 vessels of all kinds, and many of them very inferior; while Britain has over 850 ships, not including transports. British vessels are, moreover, manned with British seamen; the American ships are to a great extent manned with British Seamen also, who would not fight against their own native land.

The comparative state of Britain's commerce with the United States, to the British Colonies, will be the subject of a future article, and we trust to be enabled to show that it would be possible for our glorious empire to exist, although the model republic (?) were swept from the face of the earth.

THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT QUESTION IN THE UPPER HOUSE.

In another column will be found the debate in the Council upon the £50,000 vote, towards erecting buildings for a permanent seat at Quebec. The Upper Province has been completely sold to Lower Canada to purchase the votes of a few members to keep in office a corrupt and dishonest ministry a ministry that would not scruple to sacrifice the best interests of the Province to their own gain. That the attempt to establish Quebec as the seat of Government by the Assembly shows this to be true need not be argued; the first is plain in itself, and would have been the case of much dissatisfaction had not the Legislative Council, in the most independent manner, refused to grant the supply, thereby putting a stop to so unjust an expenditure. Thanks to that branch of the Legislature, that Upper Canada has been saved from the dishonest purpose and designs of certain ministers. The conduct of the Upper House on the occasion was such as to entitle that body to the very best thanks from Upper Canadians; and we have another instance that, instead of being an useless and unimportant branch of the Legislature, that body has been the foremost to stand forth forth for the protection of the people's rights.

On Tuesday last, the first inst, the Provincial Parliament was prorogued by His Excellency the Governor General with the usual formalities. At 3 o'clock a salute of twenty-one guns announced the approach of Her Majesty's representative. On his Excellency's entering the Council Chamber and taking his seat on the throne—the members of the House of Assembly were commanded to attend, when the Royal assent was given to upwards of forty Bills, after which his Excellency was pleased to close the second session of the 5th Parliament with the following speech. There have been about one hundred and forty Bills passed during the present session.

Speech.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,

Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly.

In the present session of Parliament, you have passed an act altering the constitution of the Legislative Council. I sincerely hope that the result of this change will prove the expediency of entrusting to the good sense of our people, the choice of that body whose calm and deliberate judgment must form an important element in the process of successful legislation.

I rejoice that you have done your best to simplify the procedure of the Courts in the Western portion of the Province, and have thus far facilitated the administration of justice.

From the measure of last session abolishing the Seigneurial Tenure, the country expects substantial benefits, and the supplementary act of this session will further easier the attainment of those benefits.

In the same way, I trust that the arrangements which have been made for securing to each Municipality of Upper Canada, the proceeds of its fair share in the Clergy Reserve Funds, will be found satisfactory to the people.

Your Act for establishing Normal Schools and improving superior education in Lower Canada is calculated to increase the number of those who will hereafter be qualified by instruction and training to advance the prosperity of their country.

The liberality of Her Majesty's Government has given over to the Province, the mass of the Ordnance Lands, and has thus placed their proceeds at our disposal, for the purpose of meeting the expenses of that Militia, whose loyalty and zeal have been so graciously acknowledged by the Queen.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly.

In Her Majesty's name I thank you for the supplies you have granted for the public service. I trust that the aid afforded to the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada will be sufficient to secure the completion of that line of communication, which is to the progress and unity, political and commercial, of both sections of the Province.

Hon Gentlemen, and Gentlemen.

At the opening of this Session, I expressed a hope that I might soon have occasion to congratulate you on the conclusion of an honourable peace. By the blessing of God that hope has been fulfilled. Tranquility has been restored to Europe, and I hope that it may bring with it renewed vigor to the interests of trade and productive industry.

I am happy in being able to receive you from the toils of a laborious Session, by the Sovereign of the Parliament of Canada, as I now do.

The Speaker of the Legislative Council then said:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council and of the Legislative Assembly.

It is His Excellency the Governor General's will and pleasure, that this Provincial Parliament be prorogued until Saturday, the ninth day of August next.

Horrible and Fatal Tragedies in New Orleans.

Woman murdered by her husband—another woman mortally wounded—a man killed and another stabbed.

The Fourth District was on Saturday night the scene of two most bloody and terrible tragedies ever enacted in it, totally distinct and disconnected, though occurring with in the distances of each other, and about the same hour of the night.

Michael Higgins, a clerk in a cotton house, came home Saturday night about 11 o'clock intoxicated, and found his wife and infant child in bed; with imprecations he ordered her to get up and get him some water he would kill her. She, also excited, sprang out of bed and out of door. He instantly seized a double barrelled shot gun, which was standing by, loaded, and placing the muzzle against the door, fired. The charge entered the wife's abdomen, and ranging up riddled her intestines in a horrid manner, carrying with it splinters from the door, and even reaching as far as the stomach. The deceased was only 21 years old. Both herself and her husband were born in Ireland. She had been married several years and had several children, the youngest, only about fourteen months old survives. Higgins was arrested and is now in prison.

The other tragedy occurred about the same hour. Edward Wisely had been in the habit of coming to the house of Capt. Joseph Gibson, to see a woman belonging to the latter. Captain Gibson had spoken to him on the subject, and some ill feeling had been engendered between them in consequence. On Saturday evening, Captain Gibson was at the house of N. D. Marvel. Wisely came there. Gibson three times proposed to drop past difficulties, but Wisely refused. Gibson remained so late, that his wife came after him. When they came out Wisely came out too and followed them. Mrs. Gibson observing that he was following them closely, turned and demanded why he did so, and required him to desist. Soon after Mr. Phillips, who came out with Gibson and wife, saw a large bowie knife in the hands of Wisely, and spoke to him.

Before, however, there was time to prevent it, Wisely made a thrust at Gibson and cut him in the arm and as Gibson turned Wisely made another thrust at him and hit his other arm. Mrs. Gibson instantly sprang between her husband and Wisely, when the latter plunged his huge bowie knife into her abdomen, inflicting what is pronounced a mortal wound. Gibson instantly threw a stick and stabbed Wisely to the heart, and he fell a corpse. Wisely was 27 years old, a native of Ireland, and a blacksmith. Gibson offered to give himself up, but nobody was disposed to arrest or accuse him of any crime. Mrs. Gibson was pronounced past recovery yesterday. Wisely had the murderous bowie knife still strongly grasped in his hand, cold and still!—New Orleans Bulletin.

Naval Expedition to America.

The following appears in the naval and military intelligence of the Times on Wednesday, the 11th:—

Her Majesty's ship Nile, 91, (Captain Sandy; Shannon, 51, (new screw frigate), the Pylades, 21, (Captain Dacy Scourfy) and the Cossack, 21, (Captain Lyster) have been telegraphed to "prepare for sea ("foreign service") with all possible despatch. Their destination is believed and currently reported to be North America. The Cossack has had orders for some days, we have been informed, for Halifax, and this we doubt not, is the intended destination of the squadron now so instantaneously ordered to prepare for active service. The Arrogant had received instructions to fit out for the conveyance of the British Ambassador and staff from England to St. Petersburg, but she has now returned the fittings and supplied their places with something more substantial. Last evening, at half-past six, the Arrogant steamed through Spithead and down Channel under sealed orders.

The Shannon is not yet commissioned, but on yesterday put in hand to be prepared for a crew with the utmost despatch and a vast body of artificers were set upon her to expedite her readiness. All the commanders of the gun-boats at Portsmouth were also called to the Port Admiral's yesterday morning—as is rumored, to receive instructions for having their respective vessels ready for active service at telegraphic notice. When these vessels sail there will be upon, or on their way to, the North American and West Indian station the following fleet:—Nile, 91, Captain G. R. Mundy; Shannon, 51, Captain Massie; Barcasena, 70, (flag), Captain Glanville; Innaum, 72, Commander Morrish; Pembroke, 60, Captain Seymour, C. B; Cornwallis, 60, Captain Wemley, C. B; Euryalus, 50, Captain Ramsay, C. B; Amphion, 34, Captain Chads; Vestal, 26, Captain T. P. Thompson; Eurydice, 26, Captain Tarleton, C. B; Termagant, 24, Commodore Kellett, C. B; Cossack, 21, Captain Fanshawe;—Pylades, 21, Captain Dayncourt; Arachne 18, Commander Inglefield; Malacca, 17, Captain Farquhar; Falcon, 17, Commander Cumming; Archer, 15, Captain Heathcote; Mariner, 12, Commander Bate; Espiegle, 12, Commander Lambert; Arab, 12, Commander Pearse; Daring, 12, Commander Napier; Buzzard, 6, Commander Dobbie; Argus, 6, Commander Purvis; Basilisk, 6, Commander Crofton; Scorpion, 6, Master Commander Parsons; Hermes, 6, Commander W. E. Gordon. Only one-third of the above are sailing ships; the steamers, although mounting but few guns, mount the heaviest carried, and good crews. The Nile, Pembroke Cornwallis are screw line of battle ships; Euryalus is the heaviest first class frigate; Termagant, Cossack, Pylades, and Malacca are the heaviest class of corvettes, carrying 68 and 84-pounders. The Vestal and Eurydice are heavily armed "donkey" frigates; the Amphion is a heavily armed frigate. The 12 gun sloops are the newest and most efficient of their class, all carrying long 32's; and the 6 gun steamers are mounted with bow, stern, and broadside guns of the heaviest metal and longest range; and if a flotilla of gunboats be taken into consideration about 80 of the heaviest guns of the heaviest metal and longest range may be added to the computation.

The light squadron of despatch boats and gunboats, under the command of Captain Watson, C. B., in the Imperieuse, of 51 guns, and comprising of the first named class, the Arrogant, the Vesuvius, the Ringdove, the Lapwing, the Pioneer, the Intrepid, and, the second class the Starling, the Janus, the Beaver, and the Drake, all arrived in Falmouth on Sunday, and will fill up with coal and provisions immediately; in consequence of the receipt on that day of an Admiralty telegraphic despatch which was communicated to the Commodore, then off the port, by one of the gunboats. The evolutions of the past week have embraced sailing, steaming, gunnery, and various other exercises, which are now suspended, as it is surmised that these ships will all proceed to the American coast forthwith. The Mohawk and other steamers are expected to join at Falmouth.

The screw corvettes Cossack, 21, and Tartar 21, left Spithead on the afternoon of Wednesday, the 4th inst., for Halifax; and the Pylades, 21, followed the same evening;—the Nile 91, sailed next.

Execution of Wm. Palmer.

(From the Liverpool Times, June 14.)

During the whole of yesterday the railway trains poured in thousands of souls who were this morning to be spectators of the dreadful tragedy, which was at so early an hour to be enacted. They were not to be deterred from witnessing the execution either by wind or weather, and although the rain descended pitilessly the greater part of the day, accompanied by a cutting degree of wind, there was no lack of eagerness displayed to be present on the mournful occasion. The elements lent a melancholy aid to the intended proceedings, and the pelting given was only relieved by the commotion of the vindictive blast were on deavouring to secure favourable spots of observation.

As night came on, all the approaches to the goal became more crowded than during the afternoon, and up to the dawn of this morning there was no abatement of the interest manifested all day. Here they remained in the mud, rain, and in darkness for several hours; once a position taken was retained most obstinately, and by eight o'clock this morning there were not less than 20, 000 persons present, who exhibited the utmost decorum and regularity. Every available inch of ground was occupied in front and around the gaol. Precisely the hour appointed for the execution (eight o'clock) the culprit appeared on the drop. He looked exceedingly well, and had passed an excellent night. It had been announced that he would address the multitude on the scaffold, and considerable anxiety was apparent as to the tenor of his observations. He did not, however, say anything. He was accompanied by the sheriff, chaplain, and the other officials connected with the prison; was dressed in the prison dress—a suit of grey. None of his relatives were present, but many of his friends of the turf were in the crowd. The last spectacle. Upon the unfortunate man's appearance, the rope was placed over his face by Smith, of Dudley, who performed the duties of executioner, and the rope having been adjusted, in an instant the earthly career of the greatest criminal recorded in the annals of history was at an end. He made no confession, even yesterday he desired that the visits of Mr. Wright, the prison philanthropist should be discontinued, it being alleged that he did not desire to be induced to disclose the truth of the circumstances in which he was charged with. As Palmer is now numbered with the dead, his name, as associated with the crime of the deepest dye, will be spoken of and shuddered at for centuries to come.

By Magnetic Telegraph.

SPAIN AND MEXICO.

The Constitutionnel of the 11th inst. has the following: "We were quite justified in expressing a hope that the difference between Spain and Mexico will not be by serious as was supposed. We learn already by letters from Mexico that General Almonte has been appointed Minister Plenipotentiary of that Republic at the Court of Spain.—There can be no doubt that the presence of this personage at Madrid will powerfully contribute to smooth all difficulties that have arisen between the two countries."

FRANCE.

The French Government have resolved on reducing the army by nearly 100,000 men. The discharges are definitive, and none, including even non-commissioned officers, will be allowed to again enter the army except as private soldiers.

The Ministers of the Legislative body are, it is whispered, squabbling amongst themselves as to the amount of money to be given to the victims of the inundations, some proposing a collective sum of 100,000f. (£4000) other 1000f. each, and others, that each member shall give what he pleases. Count de Montalembert and his friends are in favor of giving a collective sum.

The alterations about to be proposed in the French tariff embrace cotton and woollen tissues and merchandise (brandies and vessels for sea service excepted). The project has yet to be submitted to the Council of State.

A letter from Constantinople, of June, 2nd, states that the difference between England and Persia are likely to be settled by the intervention of the Porte. Two conferences have already been held. Lord Stratford conducts the affair.

HOLLAND.

A Ministerial crisis has broken out in Holland. The Premier, M. Van Hall has resigned.

AUSTRIA.

The Breslau Gazette asserts that Austria intends to recall her charge d affaires from Turin, on account of a new note said to have been addressed by the Count Cavour to the Court of St. Petersburg, and containing complaints against Austria, on account of the attitude she has assumed with regard to Sardinia

The Vienna correspondent of the Times writes that one of the steamers of the Austrian Lloyds will leave Trieste weekly for Liverpool, and touch at Ancona and Corfu. They are to take passengers as well as goods —the latter at 27s. to 28s. per ton.

ITALY.

The silk harvest in Italy is a complete failure, but the cereal crops are very abundant.

The Prince Scrfigni, President of the Court-Martial at Parma, has resigned on account of his inability to reconcile his duties as judge with the Austrian military authorities.

Correspondence from Turin represents the Mazzinian party as agitating very actively with a view of compromising Piedmont. The clerical party have beaten the Liberals in the Parliamentary elections at Gand.—An Ecclesiastical Journal also the same party has triumphed.

THE CRIMEA.

MARSEILLES, June 10.—The Mersey has arrived with advices from Constantinople of the 2nd inst. with the dates of Crimea of the 31st ult. She has brought 485 men of the Artillery. The 14th, 21st, 48th, and 57th, Regiments have left by the Clyde, Thames, Etna, and Robert Lowe. The army is healthy. There is a daily ration of fresh meat given to the men. It is said that 70,000 persons are to be under Sebastopol after our departure. The weather is hot and stormy.

THE FRENCH INUNDATION

The Sultan has sent 40,000 francs through the Turkish Ambassador at Paris, for the sufferers by the inundations. Subscriptions for the same object have been opened in every part of Piedmont.

SYMPATY WITH THE FRENCH SUFFERERS.

A highly respectable meeting was held yesterday, under presidency of the Lord Mayor, for the purpose of expressing sympathy with the sufferers by the recent inundations France, and to open subscriptions for their relief. On the platform were Lord Ellesmere, Baron Rothschild, Mr. H. Currie, M. P., Mr. E. Denison, M. P., Mr. T. Baring, M. P., and several other members of Parliament the Governor of the Bank of England, and a number of other influential gentlemen. The subscriptions amounted to nearly £5000.

THE AMERICAN QUESTION.

The "Times" says:—"It is impossible to dispute the fact the dismissal of the Minister and the Consuls is the actual reply to the explanations of our Government, the actual result of the controversy, and the thing which the American Government all along threatened and we deprecated. We are not even allowed to suppose that the American Government has our conciliation very much at heart as a final object. It is a far more natural construction upon its double policy that it wishes to dismiss our representatives, and so take a verdict in its favour without any inconvenient consequences. It would assume the power to boast that it had done to us what we ventured not to do in return. In all this we see nothing at all but a move as in a game of chess, where the player is commit ed to nothing but the move, and every subsequent step in the game is left to his own supreme discretion. The American Government has dismissed our minister and consuls, for a reason which our Government maintains to be no reason. That is the only substantial part of the move.

The logical course is to reply in the very germs of our antagonist's move. He has dismissed our representatives with the utmost possible civility. We can, if we please, do the same. Of course we would very much rather that the controversy advanced step by step nearer to a solution, but it is the American Government that leads it the other way.

FRANCE ON THE AMERICAN DIFFICULTY.

In reference to the differences between England and the United States, the Paris correspondent of the Times, writing on Tuesday evening, says:—"The French government, who are very unwilling that war should break out anywhere, are most anxious for the matter to be arranged and would willingly offer their services if there was a chance of its being accepted. An active correspondence has been going on between the two governments on the subject—with what results remains to be seen. I can assure you that great anxiety, I will not say alarm, prevails among official men on this head."

Excitement in Italy.

Accounts from Lombardy show that faith in the Sardinian Government is on the increase. Every movement is said to prevail throughout the populations—all kinds of marvellous rumors were afloat, and credited where there is no press to correct them but that under that Government, which of course is not believed, because it is under Government. Ominous writings on walls such as "Viva Vittorio Emmanuele!" "Viva! nostro Re!" "Viva Cavour!" "Viva il Ministro Italiano!" have appeared suddenly in Milan and in other towns in Lombardy.—The same symptoms begin to manifest themselves as in 1847 and the commencement of 1848, and the feeling evinced would be seriously alarming were there not hope that recent experience may suffice to prevent any rash or overt proceeding. Field Marshal Radetzki is already drawing together the troops destined to occupy the camp for manœuvres, which in general is not assembled before autumn. The Marshal is at Somma. The disposition of the troops is such that 50,000 men may be concentrated by railway on the Ticino. Austria is disquieted by what is taking place in Piedmont, and will be so to a still greater degree by the military festival in preparation for the reception of General Marmora.

In Piedmont the excitement seems to be as great as in the Italian dominions of Austria. The Chitcolico of Genoa states that a grand banquet of the students, which was held on the occasion of the anniversary of the proclamation of the constitutional statute, a toast to the "Unity of Italy" was drunk with loud applause. On the following morning the same words were raised as a rallying cry among a numerous crowd in the street, and also at the theatre. The Movimento, another Genoa journal, states that the police had torn down from one of the pillars of the Carlo Felice Theatre a placard which contained menaces against the Austrian consul. A letter in the Echo du Mont Blanc, in mentioning the subjects says —Placards containing insults and threats against the Austrian consul have been posted at the corners of several streets, and torn down by the police. In the evening several persons assembled under the windows of the consul, threw stones at the door and at the Austrian arms over it, and uttered cries of "Down with the consul—war against Austria." The walls of Turin are covered with the words "Death to Austria. Long live Victor Emmanuel, King of Italy."

The Debats asserts very positively that a Congress of Italian Sovereigns will be held at Rome to consider of the reforms which it may be pract cable to make in Italy without disturbing order or infringing on the Sovereign rights of the Governme nts. France and Austria, it is said, are to be invited to take part in this meeting of Catholic States. The idea, the Debats says, originated with the Pope when he heard of what had passed in the Congress of Paris, on April 8th.—The entire statement, however, is stoutly denied by persons supposed to know the views of the French Government. There is also a rumor that a diplomatic commission is about to meet at Vienna, under the presidency of M. de Bourqueney, to discuss the affairs of Italy. Perhaps all these rumors may be taken as indications of the general belief that something must now be done to improve the political condition of Italy.

"A meeting of cabin passengers, on board the Steamship North American, having been held on the day of her arrival at Liverpool, an address to Captain William Grange, of which the following is a copy, was unanimously adopted, and presented to the Captain. It was moved by Andrew Maine, Esq., of Ottawa City, and seconded by John M'Call, Esq., of Quebec, that the proceedings be made public by inserting the same in the newspapers.

R. M. S. S. North American, June 5, 1856.

Dear Sir.—The passengers by the North American have unanimously requested us to express to you their entire satisfaction with the manner in which you have conducted the first voyage from Quebec to Liverpool, under the contract between the Canadian Government and the Montreal Ocean Steamship Company. They desire as it is their duty, first to own the kindness of gracious Providence in granting them this pleasant passage. Under Him, they gladly testify that you have done very much to inspire confidence and enjoyment by your personal intelligence, care, and kindness — Your officers and all in the service of the ship have won approbation by their obliging disposition and assiduous discharge of duty. Your ship has proved a pleasant home upon the waters; and, although certain requisites are desired, yet some of us who have crossed the Atlantic in first class ships of various kinds give yours the preference for comfort and steadiness. Under rather unfavourable circumstances the voyage has been accomplished in 11½ days: there is every reason to expect that much quicker passages will be made when you take the shorter route by the Straights of Belle Isle. Travellers seeking a pleasant route to the West cannot fail to appreciate one by which the first land in America is seen one week after the last point of Europe disappears. Men of business must feel the value of a direct communication with the great waters of Canada, which are navigable to the lakes and states of the Far West; and it must be a matter of great satisfaction to every subject of our gracious Sovereign to witness the successful efforts of the provinces of Canada (a colony justly termed one of the brightest jewels of the Crown) in accomplishing a line of steam communication which enables the inhabitants of the colony to reach the parent state in the short period of ten or eleven days, and which will have the tendency more intimately to unite them in the bonds of love and affection which their fellow subjects of that empire of which they are proud to be considered an integral part.

Have the goodness, then, to convey to the owners of the North American this expression of the passengers' satisfaction that they have succeeded in their laudible effort to supply an important public want. Accept, for yourself, our renewed expression of our best wishes, and that, by the favor of Providence, you may enjoy long and successful career.

On behalf, and in the name of, the cabin passengers by the Steamship North American, we beg to subscribe ourselves your obedient servants.—(Signed) W. R. Jarvis Sheriff, County of York, Upper Canada; John Young M. P. P. for the city of Montreal; Gilbert Heron, of Glasgow in Ireland; Woddell, of Kingston, Upper Canada—Committee.

To Captain William Grange,
S. S. North American.

Arrival of the Canada.

HALIFAX, July 11.

The Canada from Liverpool on Saturday 21st ut, arrived here between 9 and 10 o'clock this evening.

The Baltic arrived out at Liverpool on the evening of the 10th.

The Star Indian from Quebec arrived at Liverpool on the 19th.

H. B. M. Screw Steamship Himalaya, from Halifax, arrived at Portsmouth on the 17th of June, in a passage of 8 days, 21-4 hours, the quickest on record.

The Screw Steamer Edinburgh, sailed from the Clyde for New York on the 18th.

The news is generally unimportant.

The excitement consequent on Mr. Crampton's arrival out speedily subsided, and as Mr. Dallas was not to be dismissed.

The recruiting business was regarded as definitely settled, and hopes were freely interchanged that the Central American question would soon be also.

Mr. Buchanan's nomination made but little stir.

Public meetings and friendly addresses to America were abundant.

Mr. Palles' motion in the House of Commons respecting the American difficulties, and which it was supposed that the Palmerston ministry would be defeated.

A rumor that Great Britain would send no Minister to Washington during the administration of President Pierce, was prevalent. It was, however, merely a rumor.

Consols for money were not quoted, but for accounts they closed at 94 1 16@94.

Cotton closed at the rates current on the previous Friday. Sales of the week 60, 000 bales.

Sir Edward Lyons is to be raised to the peerage, for services rendered in the Baltic Sea.

The Queen gave a Grand Ball on the eve of the 18th June. Mr. Dallas was present.

Prince Napoleon is visiting English ports in a beautiful yacht.

The baneful ribbon system is prevailing extensively in the northwestern counties of Ireland, especially Donegal and Sligo, owing to instructions from the government.

The Constabulary are to report the grievances break up the confederacy in Donegal in one day 21 persons were committed for trial.

FRANCE. Louis Napoleon is taking steps to have the Empress appointed Regent for her son.

ITALY. Two or three changes have taken place in the Sardinian ministry. The chief on being the appointment of Gen. Lamarmori to the war department.

The New York Herald says that the late news from England has produced quite a sensation in New York, and that capitalists were seized with gloom at what they supposed to be the prelude to a war. The Herald observes: We learn from undoubted authority—and we believe some of the leading bankers here are aware of the fact—that Mr. Dallas, only many days ago, expressed a opinion that as soon as the dismissal of Mr Crampton and the consuls was known in England, he himself would receive his passports. He expected nothing else. The passengers who came in the "Ericsson"—at least those intelligence—were of the same opinion, and some foreign capitalists sold out their stock immediately on their arrival.—This is what the Candian bankers have been doing, as the readers of the Herald were informed some days ago, and the solid men of New York will begin to look around them as the operation of selling out continues.

The Lancet, or some other equally edifying paper, on the subject of human food, says that large quantities of sausages are made of horse-flesh. A friend of ours says he believes it, as he invariably has the "night-mare" when he has eaten them for supper.

Special Notices.

BENEFACTORS OF MANKIND. It is not he who invented Brussels Carpeting or Cold Brocade, whom the mass es have reason to hold in regard, but he who furnishes something useful to every body. One of our government officials lately returned from his mission in Brazil, tells us an anecdote that among the first inquiries made of him about his acquaintance with our public men, was whether he knew the American Chemist Dr. J. C. AYER, who invented the Cherry Pectoral and Cathartic Pills. As these articles, (more particularly the Cherry Pectoral) are in general use in the cities of South America, they are the most prevalent representati s of American products, and as many thousands there as well as here, owe to them the recovery of their health from malignant diseases, it is not strange they should hold the inventor in esteem, but it is rather simple in them to suppose that the Doctor is the only man of mark we have among our twenty-five million people.—Christian Advocate.

SIR ASTLEY COOPER'S PILLS.

This most excellent Vegetable Medicine is, if taken for the time, and in the manner prescribed, warranted, on oath, to effect a cure.

The fine balsamic and invigorating powers which Sir Astley Cooper's Pills possess, are wonderful; a trial of a single dose will carry conviction that they are all that is necessary to invigorate the feeble, restore the invalid to health, and do good in all cases; no fear be entertained, as they are quite harmless.

The heads of families should always have them in the house, as they may, with the greatest confidence be resorted to at any time, or in any case.

Epsom salts are sometimes had recourse to when a purgative is required. If the true nature of Epsom Salts, Sedaltz Powders, and all saline aperients, were fully understood, they would ne er be resorted to—they occasion an excessive secretion and discharge of the natural moisture of the stomach and bowels, and this softens the contents of the stomach and bowels, and produces watery motions—the vessels after this unnatural draining are dried up, and a confined state of the bowels is produced, which, if not carefully attended to, produces costiveness, and all its train of evils; besides all salts are of a most griping nature, regardless of the danger of mistaking Oxalic Acid for Salts, which mistake has in numerous instances terminated fatally. Sir Astley Cooper's Mild Aperient Anti Bilious Pills are now generally established as the most favorite Family Medicine.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—Observe that on the top of each box of the Genuine Pills there is an excellent likeness of Sir Astley Cooper; also the fac-simile of the signature of Messrs Prout and Co, Sole Proprietors, London and New York, on the directions. Without these marks of authenticity, they are certainly s urious and an imposition. Sold in boxes, 50 cents, and $1 per box. Full directions are given with each box. There is a great saving by taking the larger sizes.

For sale by Simpson and Dunspaugh, Druggists, Toronto; John M. Thurston, Dundas; Andrew Oliver Galt; A. H. Cox, Brantford, General Agent-, by whom Country Druggists and Merchants will be supplied at London and New York prices.

CATHARTIC PILLS

OPERATE by their powerful influence on the of internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, and, by restoring their irregular action to health, correct, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first causes of disease. An extensive trial of their virtues, by Professors, Physicians, and Patients, has shown cures of dangerous diseases almost beyond belief, were they not substantiated by persons of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Their certificates are published in my American Almanac, which the Agents below named are pleased to furnish free to all inquirers.

Annexed we give Directions for their use in the complaints which they have been found to cure.

FOR COSTIVENESS.—Take one or two Pills, or such quantity as to gently move the bowels. Costiveness is frequently the aggravating cause of PILES, and the cure of one complaint is the cure of both. No person can feel well while under a costive habit of body. Hence it should be, as it can be, promptly relieved.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, which is sometimes the cause of Costiveness, and always uncomfortable, take mild doses — from one to four — to stimulate the stomach and liver into healthy action. They will do it, and the heartburn, headpains, and sensations of dyspepsia will rapidly disappear. When it has gone, don't forget what cured you.

For a FOUL STOMACH, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take from four to eight Pills at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until activity and strength is restored to the system.

FOR NEURALGIA, SICK HEADACHE, NAUSEA, Pain in the Stomach, Back, or Side, take from four to eight pills on going to bed. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more the next day until they do. These complaints will be swept out from the system. Don't wear these and their kindred disorders because your stomach is foul.

FOR SCROFULA, ERYSIPELAS, and all Diseases of the Skin, take the Pills freely and frequently, to keep the bowels open. The eruptions will generally soon begin to diminish and disappear. Many dreadful ulcers and sores have been healed up by the purging and purifying effect of these Pills, and some daughter diseases which seemed to saturate the whole system have completely yielded to their influence, leaving the sufferer in perfect health. Patients! your duty to society forbids that you should parade yourself around the world covered with pustules, blotches, ulcers, sores, and all or any of the unclean diseases of the skin, because your system wants cleansing.

TO PURIFY THE BLOOD, they are the best medicine ever discovered. They should be taken freely and frequently, and the impurities which nature throws off in these diseases will be swept out of the system like chaff before the wind. By this property they do as much good in preventing sickness as by the remarkable cures which they are making every where.

LIVER COMPLAINT, JAUNDICE, and all Bilious Affections arise from some derangement—either torpidity, congestion, or obstructions of the Liver. Torpidity and congestion stimulate the bile and render it unfit for digestion. This is disastrous to the health, and the constitution is frequently unfortained by no other cause. Indigestion is the symptom. Obstruction of the duct which empties the bile into the stomach causes the bile to overflow into the blood. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternately costiveness and diarrhœa, prevails. Feverish symptoms, languor, low spirits, weariness, headache, and melancholy, with sometimes inability to sleep, and sometimes great drowsiness; sometimes there is severe pain in the side; the skin and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow; the stomach acid; the bowels sore to the touch; the whole system, with a tendency to fever, in which may turn to bilious fever, bilious colic, bilious diarrhœa, dysentery, &c. A medium dose of three or four Pills taken at night, followed by two or three in the morning, and repeated a few days, will remove the cause of all these troubles. It is vain to suffer such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

RHEUMATISM, GOUT, and all Inflammatory Fevers are rapidly cured by the purifying effects of these Pills upon the blood and the stimulus which they afford to the healthy action of life. For these and all kindred complaints they should be taken in mild doses, to move the bowels gently, but freely.

AS A DINNER PILL, this is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has ever been made more effectual to the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

SUBJECT.—MANURES.—Concluded.

Now, although an acre of wheat exhales, during the period of its growth, upwards of 1,000,000 lbs. of this soluble salt of ammonia, yet it is not to be supposed that the quantity derived from this source would serve the exigencies of the plant or materially facilitate its productiveness—if all were absorbed and assimilated, it would certainly assist in the development of the straw and ensure the growth of twenty five bushels to the acre; but we cannot be permitted to suppose that total absorption, under ordinary circumstances, would take place. Mr. Way, however, has ascertained that water, saturated with carbonic acid, dissolves more than double the quantity of this ammoniacal compound, and further, that the addition of 107 per cent. of common salt to about 1 lbs. of carbonate of soa water, dissolves not less than 23 grains per gallon. There is great difficulty in proving the existence of this compound of flint, alumina and ammonia in soils; there is no difficuly whatever in making it in the laboratory, and as all the materials are at present in the soil, and as common salt acts in an hitherto unexplained manner upon clay, it is at least desirable that this matter should also be experimentally investigated by the agricultural portion of our club, the more especially as I think that a remarkable field for its elucidation lies before us. We know that many fertile soils inCanada have become what is termed exhausted, and yet upon analysis these soils yield a very considerable amount of all the materials which plants require for their growth—but at the same time a marked smallness in the quantity of common salt is to be noticed, a very soluble substance, and one which plays an important part in effecting the solubility of certain varieties of plant food. It appears to be desirable that the exhausted flats of the Thames and other localities which have been cropped for 20 to 40 years without manuring, should be tried with common salt; say a dose of three bushels to the acre. I think we should find upon theoretical grounds, the application of common salt as a solvent, of considerable value to many parts of Canada, especially in those parts of the country which are evidently of fresh water or lacustrine organ, and from which this valuable body has been continually washed during ages of rainfull. •

We may now pass on to the second form in which nitrogen enters into plants, namely, that of nitric acid. The supposition that nitric acid plays as important a part as ammonia in the nutrition of vegetables is fast growing into a firm belief in the minds of many distinguished agricultural chemists.—The theory of the production and preservation of nitric acid is by no means enveloped with so much mystery at that of ammonia. Nitric acid is a constant constituent of the atmosphere, and may be largely produced by electrical agencies, such as flashes of lightning. It is also to a great extent the result of the oxidation of ammonia in various ways. As a general rule it may be stated, that any organic compound containing nitrogen, undergoing the putrefactive fermentation in the absence of lime, potash, &c., gives off its nitrogen in the form of nitric acid. This is merely one of those numerous and most interesting chemical changes which are induced by the influence of presence. Lime, that great antagonist of ammonia, when brought into contact with it, instantly fresh urine, determines the conversion of the whole of the compounds containing nitrogen (urea, uric acid), into nitric acid; but if any decomposition has taken place previous to to the application of the lime, all the ammonia produced (carbonate of ammonia from uria), is driven off.

The formation of nitric acid by the influence of charcoal is well worthy of practical study. If we cover the dead body of a dog, a horse, or any other animal with a layer of roughly crushed charcoal some 2 or 3 inches in thickness, not only will the decomposition of the animal matter take place with remarkable rapidity and without any odour but in the charcoal we shall find the animal constituents in the form of nitric acid, sulphuric acid, and phosphoric acid, the lions alone resisting the rapid process of destruction induced by the charcoal. The nitrogen, the sulphur and the phosphorus of the animal body will be found oridized to their respective acids, and some of them associated with a limited quantity of base.

Having thus briefly adverted to the sources of the most important nitrogen food of plants, ammonia and nitric acid, it only remains to consider the method of their preservation and distribution. It is exceedingly necessary in Canadian husbandry to keep in view the second axiom laid down at the commencement of this paper, that we should be guided by economical considerations, in the preservation and distribution of our plant food,—we may therefore pass over all so called special manures with the exception of common salt, gypsum, and eyent wood ashes, and devote exclusive attention to what every farmer has the opportunity of accumulating and preserving, namely, the valuable portions of Farm Yard Manure.

No single fact in agricultural science has been so conclusively proved as that the urine of animals forms the richest and most valuable portion of their excrements, consequently of farm yard manure. I think that in the present condition of husbandry in this country we are justified in assuming that the forking element of farm-yard manure, such as the nitrogen compounds, are with out any question or comparison by far the most valuable. Our soils still contain abundance of phosphoric acid, sulphuric acid and potash, in a condition capable of being dissolved by water, without any artificial application beyond the mineral constituents of farm yard manure,—and if we look well to that grand element of fertility, and the preservation of its most valuable but volatile constituents, we shall exhibit the truest economy and arrive at the most profitable results.

In preserving and distributing farm-yard manure, we cannot advocate, for obvious reasons, (climate, seeds of weeds, &c.) the immediate ploughing in of the fresh manure, as now so wisely recommended in Europe, because in general, however clearly the advantage of these methods might appear, yet they would scarcely be economically practicable among farmers with us. I think we must look to the application of those substances easily accessible, and involving no money outlay, which possess the property of arresting volatile exhalations, and retaining in a light and available form the element. Two of these are easily procured on every farm, the third is not expensive, when its powerful effects are duly considered. Partially burnt clay and charcoal charcoal furnish us with the materials we are in search of. A manure heap sheltered from the sun and rain, and having its drainings together with those of the stables, cowhouses, &c., well-collected into a simple, inexpensive, but properly closed tank, may remain continually accumulating in quantity, quality, and valuable properties, if time after time thin layers of partially burnt (black burnt) clay and charcoal are stowed over it and in the tank. Partially burnt clay has the property of fixing ammonia to a remarkable extent, and is easily prepared in a manner according to the means at the command of the farmer. A manure heap sheltered from the sun and rain, and having its drainings together with those of the stables, cowhouses, &c., well-collected into a simple, inexpensive, but properly closed tank, may remain continually accumulating in quantity, quality, and valuable properties, if time after time thin layers of partially burnt (black burnt) clay and charcoal are stowed over it and in the tank. Partially burnt clay has the property of fixing ammonia to a remarkable extent, and is easily prepared in a manner according to the means at the command of the farmer. Such substances as gypsum, sulphate of iron, sulphuric acid, &c., so generally and advantageously used in Europe, and to far less extent on this continent, are not specially referred to here, as it seems essential to our farming practice to make the farm produce as much as possible of every item required. The third article to which I am tempted to call your favourable attention, for reasons before mentioned, is common salt. I think that a limited application in the absence on our lacustrine drifts, simultaneously with farm-yard manure would be found eminently servicable, and certainly worthy of trial.

A LESSON FROM THE BIRDS.—A gentleman observed in a thicket of bushes near his dwelling a collection of brown thrushes, who for several days attracted his attention by their loud cries and strange movements. At length curiosity was so much excited that he determined to see if he could ascertain the cause of the excitement among them.

On examining the bushes he found a female thrush, whose wing was caught in a birch in such a way that she could not escape. Near by was her nest, containing several half-grown birds. On retiring a little distance a company of thrushes appeared, with worms and other insects in their mouths, which they gave first to the mother and then to her young ones in the bush, the cheering them in their labor of love with a song of gratitude.

After watching the interesting scene until curiosity was satisfied the gentleman released the poor bird, when she flew to her nest with a grateful song to her deliverer, and her chattering neighbors dispersed to their several abodes, singing as they went a song of joy.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,

AND JOURNAL OF SUBURBAN ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the United States.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced. The growing interest with which the rising generation view the science of Horticulture, renders such a Journal as "The Illustrated Horticulturist" imperatively necessary to the progress of Rural affairs.

Rural Architecture forms one of the principal features; each number contains from two to four engravings of model cottages, from designs by eminent and skilful architects. Space is also assigned to the tasteful art of Landscape Gardening, engraved plans of gardens in every style, and adapted to the peculiarities of different orders of architecture, beautifies the work.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and to all who can boast the sovereignty of a square rod of fillable earth, "The Illustrated Horticulturist and Journal of Suburban Art" will prove an invaluable companion. The extraordinary low price at which it is afforded; together with its really superior execution, both in regard to typography and editorial ability, must make it the most popular work of the kind in America.

☞ The Illustrated Horticulturist" is printed on the finest and purest surfaced paper, manufactured expressly. It is issued regularly the first of each month, commencing with July, 1855. The following gentlemen eminently their ability in the science of Horticulture, are engaged to conduct the Editorial department: H. P. KNIGHT, JAMES SNOWDEN and R. W. RAY.

TERMS.—Two Dollars per annum, payable invariably in advance; a liberal discount to the Trade, Postmasters, and getters-up of Clubs.

The Canadian Agriculturist

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by its present proprietor in 1848, and is now well known to the leading farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us. The undersigned have made arrangements with the proprietor to publish the next, and probably succeeding volumes, and have resolved to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE
Illustrated with Engravings

Such as Farm Implements, Portraits of Animals, designs of Farm Buildings, New Inventions, &c., &c., interesting to the Farmer, and also portraits of some of the most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM MACDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the practice of Agriculture near this city. The active promoter of the various Agricultural Societies of our Agricultural Legislation since 1847, and having also been connected with this Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and writings in behalf of Canadian Agriculture are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to its columns as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS
Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to extend the corres pondence on subjects of a practical kind.

MINUTES OF THE PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

Fourteenth Session of the Municipal Council

OF THE

COUNTY OF ESSEX.

MUNICIPAL COUNCIL CHAMBER, Sandwich, July 1st, 1856.

The Council met pursuant to adjournment.

The roll was called.

Present: S. S. Macdonell, Esq., Warden, and Messrs. Bondy, Brush, Cunningham, Desjardins, Lafferty, Maloney, Malott, Wigle and Woodbridge.

The Warden stated that the first and chief business to be disposed of at this session was the equalization of the Assessment Rolls.

Moved by Mr. Brush, seconded by Mr. Woodbridge, that the Council adjourn until half past one P. M.

Carried.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

The Council met pursuant to adjournment. A quorum being present.

Moved by Mr. Malott, seconded by Mr. Wigle, that the Council go into committee of the whole for the purpose of equalizing the Assessment Rolls for 1856.

Carried.

Mr. Malott in the chair.

Moved by Mr. Macdonell, seconded by Mr. Woodbridge, and

Resolved: That in the absence of better reliable authentic statistical information as to the value of the aggregate assessable property in the several townships and villages of the County of Essex, the returns of the assessors of the several Municipalities for the year 1855 be accepted as the basis of apportioning County Rates for the present year, and that the valuation made by each assessor in each township or village be considered to bear a just relation to the valuation made on all such townships and villages.

Moved in amendment by Mr. Cunningham, seconded by Mr. Maloney, That a palpable injustice would be done to some of the municipalities by accepting the assessors' returns for the year 1855, as a basis of equalization; therefore the Council should exercise their authority and do justice to those municipalities which are imposed upon.

Moved in amendment to the amendment by Mr. Flanagan, seconded by Mr. Patillo, that the equalization of the assessments be postponed until the Assessment Rolls are produced to this Council for the year 1856.

The vote was taken upon the last amendment, which was lost. The vote was then taken upon the second amendment, which was also lost. The original motion was then put and carried.

Moved by Mr. Wigle, seconded by Mr. Brush, that the Council resume.

Carried.

The chairman reports a series of resolutions, which were adopted.

Moved by Mr. Woodbridge, seconded by Mr. Brush, that in the absence of any return from the municipality of Amherstburg for the year 1855, that the aggregate assessment for that municipality be equalized at £105,659 the amount on which they were rated for the year 1853.

Moved in amendment by Mr. Cunningham, seconded by Mr. Malott, that £96,339 be sub-tituted instead of £105,659, as a proper equalization for Amherstburg for this year.

The vote was taken upon the amendment.

The names being called for:

YEAS: Messrs. Cunningham, Malott and Wigle—3

NAYS: Messrs. Bondy, Brush, Desjardins, Flanagan, Maloney, Patillo and Woodbridge—7.

COURTESIES OF BUSINESS LIFE.—Business men who lay in a fair stock of civility, will find it as good an investment to draw, please and retain custom, as they can make The small civilities and courtesies of life are too often neglected by them. We have been taunted as a nation of shopkeepers, who, in our haste to be rich, forget not only proprieties, but moralities; we have been charged with idolatry, worshipping the almighty dollar, and the conduct of some among us has given color to the charge. Let not the reproach longer remain. A nation immersed in trade need not, necessarily, be forgetful of the requirements of honor, uprightness and truth. A man in trade need not be a boor, nor is he, in anywise, exonerated from extending towards his customers the same suavities he would extend to a guest in his house, to a stranger he is introduced to in company. He need not indulge in formal etiquette and pompous civilities for there is no heart in such a manner; but in the easy genial habits which speak a kindly feeling and claim a reciprocating respect.—Hunt's Magazine.

Look not mournfully into the past—it cannot return; wisely improve the present—it is thine; go forth to meet the shadowy future without fear, and with a manly heart.

AN HEROIC MUSICIAN.—Among the wounded at the storming of Sebastopol was a musician who received a ball in his knee, and was under the necessity of having it amputated in consequence. As usual, preparations were made for binding him down in order that he might not be able to move.

'What are you doing, doctor?' enquired the wounded man.

'I must take off your leg, and it is therefore necessary that you should be bound down,' replied the doctor.

'I will never consent to such a proceeding, exclaimed he. "You may tear my heart out of my breast, but I won't consent to be bound down. If you have a violin, bring it to me.'

A violin was brought. After tuning it, the wounded man said.

'Now doctor you may begin.'

The operation, which lasted about thirty minutes, now commenced, and the patient played his violin the whole time without a single false note, or the slightest change in his features.

A GENTLEMAN.—It takes four things to make a thorough gentleman. You must be a gentleman in your manners, a gentleman in your person, a gentleman in conversation, a gentleman in address.

An eminent modern writer beautifully says; "The foundation of domestic happiness is faith in the virtue of woman. The foundations of political happiness, a confidence in the integrity of man. The foundation of all happiness, temporal and eternal—reliance on the goodness of God."

A Western paper advertises thus: "Run Away—A hired man named John; his nose turned up five feet eight inches high, and had on a pair of corduroy pants much worn."

Why are kisses like the creation? Because they are made of nothing and are very good.

The perpetrator of the above was sentenced to kiss fifteen young ladies, as a punishment for his offence. He took the matter very coolly, saying that he considered kissing "capital punishment."

A lady making inquires of a boy about his father, an intemperate man, who had been sick for some time, asked whether he had regained his appetite. "No ma'am," says the boy, "not exactly, his appetite is very poor, but his drink a-bite is as good as ever."

An Act providing for the payment of dividends by Insurance Companies.

An Act to amend an Ordinance of Lower Canada for the Relief of certain Religious Societies.

The North Shore Railroad.--Some Strange Developements.

We refer our readers to the extraordinary disclosures, in relation to this railroad, made by the Hon. Mr. DeBlaquiere in his speech in the Legislative Council on Saturday. It is really impossible to tell for what purpose this most suspicious scheme has been pushed through the Legislature—but is a fact within our own knowledge, that the people who have been its chief advocates were unable to pay the few engineers they employed to make a preliminary survey of the road from Quebec to Montreal. The whole enterprise and public spirit of Mr. Cauchon and his adherents at Quebec were not equal to raising a few hundred pounds to enable the engineers to pay their bare expenses; and Mr. Cauchon and his friends, in the face of this, ask a charter for a road to run many hundreds of miles through a wilderness, much of which is wholly valueless, and of which will be settled in any considerable extent, as long as better parts of America are open for settlement, which will be at last for a century yet to come. For, be it remembered, the vast west and southwest are as yet but mapped out for occupation. All this then, is in the real object of this grant of four millions of acres of U. per Canada land for a mere sham, or what is equally bad, a piece of insanity! The people of Upper Canada may depend on it, there is something at the bottom of this scheme that is not yet understood. At present we can only point out its monstrous absurdity, or its palpable iniquity, for it is assuredly either a cheat or a folly.

It will be seen, that it was passed through the Legislative Council by Col. Tache's casting vote; and we question if a measure of such importance was ever carried in England or in a Colony, but it was thrown on the person chiefly interested in it; for Col. Tache's vote also utely neutralised the entire independence of the Council. We refer our readers to the debate, which is of great interest.—Colonist.

The fine new schooner, Dean Richmond, says, the Chicago Tribune, is chartered to take wheat from the city of Liverpool direct, without transhipment, at 30cts per bushel. This, adds the Tribune is but the commencement of direct exports to Europe from this port. The advantages gained by rapid and uninterrupted communication with the Gulf and markets of the old world, which the St. Lawrence route most unquestionably furnishes, has yet to be fully tested. We are satisfied it will occupy its proper place in the public attention. The Richmond is a clipper built craft, built in Cleveland, and commanded by Captain Pearce. May we have many imitators in this new extension of shipping enterprise.

BEARS KILLED NEAR DURHAM.—Last week, while some people were passing on the road near the village, a Bear and two Cubs was observed proving upon some harmless swine in the woods adjoining the village.—Alarm having been given, the villagers soon made available every gun, musket, or blunderbuss and, very soon, Bruin found himself contending with a "Volunteer Military Demonstration," even more fatal to his life and interests than those who contended with his old friend Nicholas. Two of the cubs were killed the first evening, and an armed party waited in ambush—"His Majesship" the following evening and shot him—a very formidable animal—thereby allaying the fears of timid travellers and saving the rising pork from an ingenious end.—Fergus Freeholder.

GETTING THE START OF A COUNTERFEITER.—The Buffalo Express says a fellow the other day passed upon Mr. Frisbee, the ticket agent of the Great Western Railway Company, on the Canada side Suspension Bridge, a counterfeit note, the character of which was discovered, but too late to arrest the gentleman, who had strolled over the bridge. But Mr. Frisbee was not to be done in this way, and went in pursuit of his man, whom he eventually found, enjoying a nap in a car on this side. Of course he could not be arrested there, so returning on tip-toe and to shield his body, Mr. Frisbee found two or three trackmen to whom he tipped the wink to shove the car across the bridge.—It is said that the surprise of that dishonest youth, on coming to his senses, and finding himself a British prisoner, was something to witness. When he had sufficiently gathered his scattered wits, he attempted to drop a roll of spurious notes, but was detected at this, and finally went to jail miserably Ten years is the least he can expect in Canada.

COUNTERFEITING.—On Last Friday two men came to this town from Port Stanley, having arrived that morning from Cleveland, in the steamer Telegraph. They passed four or five ten dollar bills in different stores here, and then quietly decamped on their way to London. The bills are forged on the Commercial Bank, and very ingeniously executed. The sender in the agency of the Bank of Montreal here, was the first to detect the forgery. A gentleman was depositing money, and the cashier perceived the signature upon one of the Commercial Bank bills to be different from the usual ones, after a minute comparison with other notes. When it was found the "gentry" were gone, constables were sent in pursuit in all directions, but although it was discovered they went on the way to London, no trace further could be found. The forgery is a very complete one, and it requires considerable knowledge of bills to discover it.—Despatch.

A Hit at the Hammer.

One of our Clear Grit conferees raileth after the following fashion:—

"There are nine petitfogers in the present Government, and one auctioneer—What confidence can the country place in such a band of sharpers?"

From the days of Hierocles downwards, it hath been the universal usage to flout at lawyers and tailors. The latter, by prescription, are held as possessing only a fraudulent claim to humanity, while the name o' the former is currently a synonyme of knave.

Such being the case, the probabilities are great, that had our Radical friend limited the word "Sharpers" in the above quotation, to agents of the long robe, we should not have tackled him on the present occasion.

It is impossible however, for Solomon to remain passive when auctioneers are thus handcuffed to black brigadesmen!

The charge is distinct and unqualified.—In the present Government, "there are nine pettifoggers and one auctioneer," and the decade form "a band of sharpers." No attempt is made to show that the hammer-flourisher is a bad example of his tribe, or belonged to the Peter Funk genus. Being an auctioneer he is of necessity a sharper!

Let the Going gones of Canada East and West forthwith convene in indignant conclave, and pass resolutions denouncing the calumniator of their mystery. That calumniator, we may add for their information, is the Weekly Banner.

If after three distinct calls, the Rabshakeh doth not eat his lick, and whimper forth peccavi, let no advertisment of vendue ever again give vitality to his columns. Hungee may, haply, bring the wretch to a sense of his turbinated turpitudinism!—Streetsville Review.

SANDWICH, JULY 11, 1856.

The prospect of a war with the United States, which at one time looked dark, has now happily, though the forbearance of the British Government, become brighter. When the dismissal of Mr. Crampton had become known, it was thought that our Government would have acted in a similar manner, and would have retaliated by the dismissal of Mr. Dallas. But in dismissing that officer, all diplomatic intercourse between the two nations would have ceased, and England would have, as a matter of safety, her possessions on this continent, thoroughly fortified, and be also under the necessity of maintaining a large fleet upon the American coast to watch and protect her interests in this quarter. And until new diplomatic agents were appointed by the two Governments, this system would have only remedied existing difficulties more complicated, the President of the United States having acted in a manner that cannot but be condemned even by his own subjects. The respectable portion of the press have viewed it in its proper light, and feel that they have been placed in an exceedingly unenviable position, and have severely censured the selfish policy that has placed the States within the chances of a war that would be ruinous to their commerce, and from the effects of which it would take years to recover. With the fleet which England could bring into the conflict, the United States would be unable to find a market for their products, while England could be supplied with what now comes through that country from numerous markets that would be opened to her still.

A few rabid prints, in commenting upon the conduct of Great Britain in not dismissing Mr. Dallas, have given as a reason that our Government fears a war with the States. That a war would be of inconceivable injury to one will deny, but it is not fear that directs her in this instance; but the knowledge of her superiority makes her generous. Britain, the mistress of the seas, with a fleet not equalled in the world, and with an army that has never known defeat, can well afford to use forbearance in the present case without sullying her fair fame, in the interests of mankind.

QUARTER SESSIONS.

The Court of General Quarter Sessions for this County sat on Tuesday the 1st July inst, Alexander Chewett, Esquire, presided, assisted by Thomas Woodbridge, Joseph Bratt and Theodore Malott, Esquires, Justices.

GRAND JURY.—Peter White, Foreman, Lewis Arner, Joseph Bennett, Amos C Brush, William Bungey, Patrick Daley, Henry Jones, Jacques Lambombise, Jerome Martin, Malcott Valentine, indicted for stealing three geese. Acquitted.

James G. Barnes was charged with entering the house of Mr. William Mears, and taking money therefrom. Verdict, Not Guilty.

PRESENTMENT.

The Jurors of our Lady the Queen upon their oath present: That they have examined the Gaol, and are satisfied with the order in which it is kept, and as it is about to be condemned they refrain from making any remarks as to ventilation or classification of prisoners, but would recommend that a change of clothes be given to such persons as confined in it as are unable to procure them for themselves.

On Monday last a most melancholy accident happened at Windsor by the falling in of the back wall of the new Town Hall now being built, and which caused the instant death of two men working upon the building, named Thomas Colman and Thomas Mason. Three others were also severely injured at the same time, whose names we have not heard. We give below the verdict of the Coroner's Inquest held upon the bodies of the two unfortunate men that were killed, and from it are inclined to believe that there was either great negligence in bracing the walls, or that they were not built sufficiently thick for their height.

VERDICT.—That Thomas Colman and Thomas Mason were accidentally killed by the falling of the Western Gable of the Town Hall of the Village of Windsor. The Jury are afraid that the gable wall may have been too weak to support the heavy cornice and heavy frameword resting thereon, and they also regret that more attention was not given to staying the rafters and ridge pole, but as the evidence has shewn that the walls were wrought in a workmanlike manner, they for that reason render a verdict of accidental death.

The first number of the "Markham Economist," a neatly got up journal, and to be conducted upon moderate principles, is upon our table. This number, from its size and the choice of reading matter, will be a sufficient recommendation, and will no doubt ensure it a large circulation. Long life to him.

The Cunard Company has offered to the French Government to carry all her trans atlantic mails at a much lower figure than any offered by French steamships; and since the Cunard company is responsible for all its engagements, and has the greatest experience of all companies in transatlantic steam navigation, the proposition has thrown the French Government into confusion.—The late quick trips of the Persia have contributed much to the confusion, for it is believed that the French will be unable to build ships that can successfully compete with the English vessels. The result has been that a violent jealousy has been aroused in France against the Cunard company, and that the opinion prevails in the event that the contract is of no value to France as given as a stimulus to the development of the French marine; that the intention of the contract is specially to encourage the now fast developing marine capabilities of the country; that to give it to an Engli h steamer, it was thought that our Government would have acted in a similar manner, and would have retaliated by the dismissal of Mr. Dallas. But in dismissing that officer, all diplomatic intercourse between the two nations would have ceased, and England would have, as a matter of safety, her possessions on this continent, thoroughly fortified, and be also under the necessity of maintaining a large fleet upon the American coast to watch and protect her interests in this quarter. And until new diplomatic agents were appointed by the two Governments, this system would have only remedied existing difficulties more complicated, the President of the United States having acted in a manner that cannot but be condemned even by his own subjects. The respectable portion of the press have viewed it in its proper light, and feel that they have been placed in an exceedingly unenviable position, and have severely censured the selfish policy that has placed the States within the chances of a war that would be ruinous to their commerce, and from the effects of which it would take years to recover. With the fleet which England could bring into the conflict, the United States would be unable to find a market for their products, while England could be supplied with what now comes through that country from numerous markets that would be opened to her still.

The following cases were tried:

Irwin vs. Geo. Matthews and John Marks —Trespass. No bill.

Dupuis vs. Labouche. Verdict for plaintiff, £11.

Lewis vs. Foster.—Action for loss of a carpet bag, containing valuable clothing, on Fosters Stage between Amherstburg and Sandwich. Verdict for plaintiff, £12 10s.

Malcott Valentine, indicted for stealing three geese. Acquitted.

to citizens or persons found in the Territory to leave the same, or their houses, or any particular locality, are unauthorized by law and highly reprehensible, extending to breach of the peace and violence and disorder.

I further declare that all law-abiding citizens of the Territory, without regard to party, names, or distinctions, must be protected in their persons and property, and that all military organizations are to be in execution of the laws of the Territory, or to disturb the peace thereof, must be dispersed; and all aggressive parties from without the Territory must be repelled.—That the military force placed under the control of the Executive of this Territory is ample sufficient to enforce the laws and to protect the citizens in their rights.

I further declare that in carrying out this Proclamation, no distinction or inquiry is to be made as to party, but all parties are to be treated under like circumstances.

In testimony whereof I have caused the Seal of the Territory to be affixed, this fourth day of June, 1856.

BY THE CANADA.

From the London Correspondent of the Globe

LONDON, Friday, June 20th.

One of the most interesting events that have occurred here since I wrote, on Tuesday evening, was the first display of the Great Fountains at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, in the presence of her Majesty the Queen, Prince Albert, the elect husband of the Princess Royal—the Prince of Prussia—the Regent of Baden, and the Princess Royal herself, with the courtly attendants, on Wednesday afternoon. Many magnificent spectacles have been witnessed at Sydenham since the Palace of Glass was first erected, but this latest fete may be most safely said to have, in many respects, wholly eclipsed all former shows. The Queen rarely allows an opportun ty of seeing a good sight to pass away unimproved; and this fact has been more especially patent during the last few weeks, since the two young Germans, whose names I have just mentioned, have been her guests. Of course, those of us who have the honour of our country and its institutions at heart, and who believe that the people of the continent would be considerably improved by a visit to these shores, at least, of our social habits, are not a little grateful for this. By suitable opportunities being given to foreign visitors to obtain a true insight into English manners and customs, there is some chance of such an impression being made as we desire to consider. I must digress for a single moment—I may say, that according to reports from Berlin, Frederick William of Prussia has already become deeply convinced of the superiority of the free institutions and political freedom of England, over the constraining system which prevails in his own country and in Germany in general. The Prince is said to have communicated his mind pretty freely to his friend in the Prussian capital, on this matter, by copious letters; and it begins to be hoped that if Providence should spare his life, and place him on the throne of the kingdom, reign in person, which thrives so well under his "most religious uncle," will soon be completely abolished. But those who are prepared to entertain such hopeful views, it may, perhaps, be well to remind of the maxim of Solomon, "Put not your trust in princes." Now that may be, I have to speak at present of the Crystal Palace, and its wonderful waterworks. Is id the Queen loves to feast her eyes with a pleasing sight, and certainly the people love to look upon the Queen and seek, at the same time, to please her. Hence, yesterday, the Palace, one and twenty thousand ladies and gentlemen, most expensively and beautifully dressed, found their way to the charming grounds attached to the Sydenham Palace on Wednesday, although none but the holders of two guinea season tickets, except those who chose to pay ten shillings for the single admission, were allowed to be present. Of this latter class alone there were between five and six thousand—a sufficient proof of the deep interest taken in the occurrences of the day.

The Morning Star is learned, and throws a "a travelled air" over its critique:—

"It has been justly said that the entire dependence of yesterday's water displays for this superb and majestic effect of all architectural designs, like those at St. Cloud or Versailles, with its fountains of Niobe and Neptune, is one of the most remarkable novelties of modern times in such a scene. We think it is also one of their greatest triumphs. The whole object of the artificial employment of the water is, in a legitimate sense, to produce a vivid imitation of a great operation of nature, in throwing from their subterranean mass the rivers and streams which she destines for diffusion over every variety of surface on our globe. It is seldom that fountain architecture, even that of the "Fontana di Trives," at Rome answers say good end as a matter of taste and propriety. In the lovely element of water, it is absolutely out of place. Rarely has it been our fortune, in the case of the former, to gaze on anything so appropriate as the group of water nymphs, engaged as it were in the act of collecting the waters, in the beautiful fountains of the Palace de la Concorde at Paris, or the bronze Sea Gods in the serpent fountain group at Trieste—opposite the hotel of the Archduke Charles—who, stepping into the marble basin from the public 'place,' on which the foot he is springing from is made most artistically to rest, gives a life like reality to the whole effect. But sure we are that the incomparable displays at the Crystal Palace, with the noble terraces and edifices, the commanding prospects and beautifully undulated country by which they are every where surrond d, needed no such meretricious aid to enhance their incomparable effect and beauty."

As the Royal party returned by the upper terrace, the sun which had been hitherto partially concealed behind a cloud, broke forth in all his glory. "Thou, indeed," says one critic and most truthfully as well as beautifully—"the display assumed an almost supernatural beauty and magnificence. The air seemed to consist only of rainbows. The atmosphere seemed one mass of the richest pink, green, violet, and crimson tints into which the white masses of water plunged, and, like the dolphins of the fable, died away in a splendour of colours, to portray which description is utterly useless. The richest visions of the Arabian Nights and Persian tales seemed more than realized as one gazed on the gorgeous scene. The fountains continued playing for 72 minutes, during which time nearly 6,000,000 gallons of water had passed thro' the jets."

Is the American Difficulty Over?

From the Morning Chronicle.

The enlistment question is but a small part of the issue between this country and the United States. It is a mere passing symptom of a chronic disease. Her Majesty's Ministers will find themselves compelled, ere long, to deal with this issue on some definite principles. As was very pertinently observed by Mr. Disraeli, a few nights since, they must specially resolve on the course England is hereafter to pursue with regard to Central America. If the people of the United States are determined that no Power but themselves shall hold any influence in the neighborhood of the narrow territory which separates the Atlantic from the Pacific Ocean, and which ought to be a highway free to all nations, there is no course open to England but to fight, or concede, or to negotiate a mutually treaty with the aid of the greatest Powers of Europe.

The protection of our West Indian possessions is a question altogether distinct from our disputed claims to a certain territory in the near vicinity of the seat of Government. WALKER'S buccaneering expedition; but if, by putting forth extravagant and inconvenient pretencions to rights of property which must be useless for any purpose but annoyance, we should render a war between this country and the United States sooner or later inevitable, those West Indian possessions may be seriously endangered, and possibly the prestige of the British name impaired, it is, therefore, all the more necessary that the future course of England on these questions should be clearly defined, and that we should know whether the late dispute with Russia, pursue a foreign policy leading to war, while our domestic relations are based on a belief in the continuance of peace.

The heedless portion of the British public, and they do not constitute the minority, it is to be feared, imagine that all anger on the part of the United States is at an end, because our Government has not retaliated on that of America for the dismissal of Mr. Crampton. The matter in which but gentleman was concerned, however, is but insignificant in comparison with the feeling of the American people. The scheme of policy commonly known as the Monroe doctrine has sunk deep in the national mind of the Union. At the Cincinnati Convention, which decided the next election for the presidency, a manifesto was published containings summary of the opinions entertained by the Democratic party of the States on the subject of foreign policy. The passage in which these views are embodied are sufficiently characteristic and important to merit being reproduced at length. At that Convention among other things it was resolved, that the questions connected with the foreign policy of the country are inferior to no domestic question whatever.—

The time has come for the people of the United States to declare themselves in the favour of free seas and progressive free trade throughout the world, and by solemn manifestations place their moral influence by the side of their successful example."

If the men who framed these resolutions are strong enough to elect a President of the Union, they are powerful enough to impose upon it a policy. How far the policy indicated in this manifesto is compatible with the just pretensions and present proceeding of England, is a question, the solution of which may be temporarily postponed, but which must sooner or later be grappled with fearlessly. Are our statesmen or our people prepared for either discussion or action with respect to that question I—We fear not. Yet this difficulty is one which we must anticipate by yielding magnanimously, or meet by a resolve to struggle to the death, unless a solution can be arrived at similar in principle to that which has displayed by justy and generosity in relation to exclusive sovereignty in the Black Sea.

From the Times, June 19.

It is impossible to forsee the ultimate effects of the Crampton quarrel. No one who is not profoundly ignorant of human nature can suppose that such an act can have no ulterior results beyond the dismissal of one Ambassador and the toleration of another. Although diplomacy may smooth the asperities of the rupture, and policy may dictate acquiescence in an affront, there are consequences which, as neither of the two Governments have considered so neither of them will be able to modify or divert,—that the two Englishmen and Americans men—whether abroad or on British possessions—there will be for some time to come illdisguised consciousness of a triumph on one side and ill smothered sentiments of resentful humiliation on the other. How long feelings of this nature can predominate without leading to some skewed practical development is not for us to say; but it is clear that their long repression during peace must add intensity to the exasperation of any future more open conflict.

Opinions of the Press.

After the decision of Her Majesty's Government had been made known, the Times of the 17th asks:

Could they with propriety send back the American Minister, when the American Government had brought themselves to aver that they had on this point no quarrel with our Government, but only just cause for office with its agent? Could they with propriety suspend diplomatic intercourse with a government which expressed a strong desire to continue it, notwithstanding alleged provocation to the contrary? At all events, could they not, without loss of honour, accept the overtures of peace made to soften a painful but inevitable act of dismissal. Undoubtedly the American Government has carefully so put the matter that our dismissal of its Minister would be more than a retaliation. It would be returning the blow, and giving a deaf ear to the mild intercession that explained it. We were at liberty either to interpret the blow by the voice, or the voice by the hand. Government has taken the former alternative. It is, after all, the safer course. * * * In saying that the United States Government has adopted a half measure, and that our Government has met it more than half way; in admitting that both sides had a right to do what they had done—the one without giving offence, the other without loss or honor—we do not for one moment think the object of the war result; so far, is anything but flattering to the pride of this country. If there are people in the United States capable of gratification at the fact, we certainly have been touched in our honour, we submit with as much grace as we can to what all feel an insult. We have no disposition to make war on the fact, for we are not without hope that the British people will be rather less liable to this species of annoyance for the future.

We do not doubt in the least, Mr. Crampton's faithful devotion to his own government, and good intentions towards the government to which he was sent. But there is such a thing as a careless and undisciplined fidelity, which tells its master, "Oh, trust me; I know what you want, and I'll do it, and I won't be particular either."—There is a fidelity to a master which implies too little self-respect in the servant. Mr Crampton appears to has e wanted self-respect in the kind of persons with whom he connected himself in these transactions, and the style of proceeding he adopted, and to have managed the affair on a five and easy principle, never intending, perhaps, really to offend the United States government or to violate the United States law, but simply thinking that "it didn't signify," that it was of no use sticking at a trifle, and that the United States government would never make a fuss about such a little matter. But this was a line unfortunately most unsuitable for dealing with a jealous and touchish people like our friends across the Atlantic, most tender about their dignity, and on the look out for the slightest indication of a different of behaviour towards themselves and European governments.

Mr. Crampton was certainly not the man to send as Mini ter to the United States.—But the truth is, the United States is not a favorite Embassy, and it is not very easy always to get the man you want for it. You may offer it to the proper man, but the proper man won't take it. He does not like to banish himself from European society, taste and refinement, and to fix himself among a new and rather rude and uncouth people, who cannot abstain from cudgelling each other in their own Se nate-house, and whose ways and habits are very different from ours.

News from China.

TRADE—THE REBELLION—HORRIBLE MASSACRE AND CANNIBALISM.

Advices from Hong Kong are to the 16th of April. At Canton, trade is on the revival, and although there are various rumors of anarchy existing in the surrounding country, it will not probably tend to the interruption of foreign commerce. The main object of certain insurgents is the punishment of the head men and leaders of villages for past cruelties.

The Frahad of China says that the tea exports from Shanghae has fallen off in one year twelve millions of pounds; the exportation having been directed to the port of Fuh-chow-fu. Mr. Shennon editor of the North China Herald is dead.

A letter from Shanghae dated April 3 says;

Rumors and and reports from the north and west continue to be very contradictory, and the true state of things in the central provinces it is impossible for any one at this distance to detail. In many places disorder is the order of the day. We now have reports of sixty thousand men who had risen in rebellion, marching to the Imperial Gerrals to lay down their arms; next we have rumors of their making overtures to join the insurgents; and again, of their taking an independent attitude. All these reports are, perhaps, true in part.

At Nankin and Chin kiang no decisive advantages would seem to have been gained by the Imperor's forces; and great multitudes of the people are distressed alike by both Imperialists and Insurgents. At Sachan some apprehension of disturbance exists.

In and around Shanghae peace and quiet prevail; commerce is reviving, and the prospects of the Insbandmen are very encouraging. Piracies have decreased, but many freebooters are still abroad, every now and then a few of them fall into the hands of the authorities, and are very summarily dealt with. Some of these wretched creatures were marched out of the city last week, and executed on the south side.

From the Maulmain Advertiser of Feb. 28. we take the following brief account of the massacre of part of the crew of a China junk by the Andaman Islanders:

A China junk, named Fai Goon, bound for Pinang with rice from Arakan and Bassein, arrived off town on Tuesday evening with the following melancholy story. She left Pinang on the 2nd January last for the above places, with a crew of thirteen men. Strong currents and contrary winds prevailing, she could not make the Nicobars, and never have known anything of them. When out of the latitude of the Nicobars, she came upon the Little Andaman Islands, where the whole crew attempted to affect a landing for water. Out of the thirteen men, three landed, while the others remained in the boat. The savages, hitherto, had now sprung upon the helpless victims, tore them from limb to limb, and then devoured them. Those in the boat seeing this shoved off to the junk, and set sail direct for this port.

The Emperor of the French has recently recommended twenty millions of dollars for the encouragement of underdrainage—an art which, as the Homestead very justly remarks, "is as much neglected in France as in this country."

Arrival of the Baltic.

New York, July 7.

The steamer Baltic arrived at 10 o'clock on Sunday morning.

She left Liverpool at 1 P. M. on the 26th. Bigler, Athaya & Co., report an advance at Mark Lane Market, June 23, of 2s a 3s per quarter on Wheat, and 1s per barrel on Flour at the Liverpool Market on the 24th. The advance demanded by holders checked business. Sales of Wheat made at an advance of 1d a 2d on the Friday previous.—Red quoted at 9s 10d a 11s; White 10s 6d a 11s 6d. Flour in good demand; Ohio good brands sell at an advance of 6d per barrel; Western Canal 31s a 35s; Ohio 37s a 38s 6d. Indian Corn not much enquiry; Yellow 30s 6d; White 31s a 31 6d per quarter. Large arrivals of Breadstuffs since Friday. Beef very dull. No transactions in Pork. Small business.—Stock accumulating. Lard none offering. Dealers getting 64 a 65 cents. Tallow in good demand; 48s for North American.

Latest.—Liverpool, 1 P. M., June 25.—Wheat and Flour quiet; some enquiry for prime qualities. Flour at full prices.—Indian Corn dull at yesterday's quotations.

London Money Market easier. Consols for accounts 94⅜ a 94⅝.

On July 2d, in latitude 42 30, longitude 49, the Baltic passed the Arago, and also passed 112 miles east of Sandy Hook, the ship Unicorn, bound for Boston, abandoned June 5th.

A London paper thus surmises about American relations: "Judging from the country newspapers we should say the country is delighted with the turn the American question has taken, and it is surprising how much the public has been enlightened on the subject by the cheap press—every paper of that class having devoted itself to a rational exposition of our American difficulties. The country also appears pleased with the nomination of Mr. Buchanan." To this a Liverpool correspondent adds that the feeling on American affairs has now subsided so much as to have no unsettled effect on the market, although several leading papers keep on grumbling.

The Times urges Britain to hurry on the settlement of the Central American question, before Mr. Buchanan is President.

Nothing important in Parliament.

The Parliamentary Committee on the Danish Sound Dues has met.

France continues interested on the subject of the Emperor's marriage.

The Emperor of Russia has constructed a new Cabinet, including Gortschakoff, Lanskor, Osten-Sacken, and Orloff.

Advices from Constantinople confirm the statement, that the Russians had demolished the fortifications, Ottoni and Ismail.

The Turks recall the declaration of Clarendon, that these fortifications should not be injured.

From Berlin, June 21st, it is stated that owing to the mediation of Russia, arrangements have been concluded between the United States and Denmark, in virtue of which a Provincial Toll Convention, until June 1857, and the Sound Dues, will be collected under the Convention, as formerly.

The Paris press mentions the same circumstances.

Interesting Experiment in Steam Navigation.

A trial trip of a steam vessel of an interesting character took place on the river Thames, on the 8th inst. The Hoyer, a paddle steamer, of nearly 190 tons, and drawing only two feet of water, has been constructed to navigate the shallow waters on the west coast of Denmark, between the Islands and the mainland. A reference to the map of Denmark will show the peculiar geographical position of this part of the coast. From the river Eider to the Horns reef, a distance of 80 miles, it is bounded by a number of islands, varying in size, and situated from three to ten miles from the shore. They are rich in cattle and grain, and inhabited by a hardy and industrious race, who, from their peculiar position, enjoy but little communicant on with the mainland; the space between being composed of a long, low flat (partly dry at low water), and numerous small and intricate channels, difficult and tedious to navigate. The communication hitherto could be made only in small boats, and during bad weather the inhabitants have been unable, for weeks together, to communicate with the coast.—The Hoyer (so named after one the towns) has been constructed to remedy this disadvantage, and, in conjunction with the Royal Danish Railway, to place the inhabitants of these hitherto isolated places in daily communication, not only with the coast, but with the whole north of Europe. From her light draught of water, she will pass easily over the flats at tide time, while her size and strength will enable her to navigate the channels, conveying passengers, cattle, and goods with speed and safety. The following are her dimensions:—Length, 120 feet; breadth, 18½ feet; depth, 7½ feet; gross tonnage, 190; horse power, 40; with accommodation for 80 passengers and 100 tons of cargo. On her trial trip, with the wind against her, and with so little hold of the water, she averaged 12 miles an hour, with scarcely any perceptible effort or vibration, and fully realised the expectation of her constructors. She has been built for the Husum and Hoyer Steam-Packet Company, composed of Danish and English proprietors, to ply between those places and the islands, in connection with the Royal Danish Railway, which connects the North Sea with the Baltic. This railway, the result of the skill and enterprise of Sir S. M. Peto and his friends, is now in full operation, and has not only opened a short and expeditious route to the Baltic, but has placed at the disposal of our markets an almost inexhaustible supply of cattle and grain. To the port of Tonning, on the Eider, the North Sea terminus of this railway, a place but little known a few years since, two large steamers, belonging to the North of Europe Steam Navigation Company, ply weekly from London to Hull; whilst on the opposite side, at Flensburg, on the Baltic, a fleet of smaller steamers, belonging to the same company, maintain the communication with Copenhagen, Husum, Aarhuus, Settin, Dantzic, Konigsberg, and St. Petersburg.

The locomotives in Germany are hereafter to be covered with a casing of glass, which will permit the engineers to survey the whole country and at the same time protect them from the wind and cold.

Special Notices.

SIR ASTLEY COOPER'S PILLS.

This most excellent Vegetable Medicine is, if taken for the time, and in the manner specified, warranted, on oath, to effect a cure.

The fine balsamic and invigorating powers which Sir Astley Cooper's Pills possess, so wonderfully relative a single dose will carry conviction that they are all that is necessary to invigorate the feeble, restore the invalid to health, and do good in all cases so far aided be entertained, as they are quite harmless.

The heads of families should always have them in the house, as they may, with the greatest confidence be resorted to at any time, or in any case.

Epsom salts are sometimes had recourse to when a purgative is required. If the true nature of Epsom Salts, Sedeltz Powders, and all saline aperients, were fully understood, they would never be resorted to—they occasion an excessive excretion and discharge of the natural moisture of the stomach and bowels, and this softens the contents of the stomach and bowels, and produces watery emotions—the weeks after this unnatural draining are dried up, and a confined state of the bowels is produced, which, if not carefully attended to, produces costiveness, and all the train of evils; besides all salts are cold and griping, to say nothing of the danger of mistaking Oxalic Acid for Salts, which mistake has in numerous instances terminated fatally. Sir Astley Cooper's Mild Aperient Anti-Bilious Pills are now generally established as the most favorite Family Medicine.

Caution to the Public.—Observe that on the top of each box of the Genuine Pills there is an excellent likeness of Sir Astley Cooper; also the fac-simile of the signature of Mark Plunkett & Co. Sole Proprietors, London and New York, on the directions. Without these marks of authenticity, they are certainly spurious and an imposition. Sold at 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1 per box. Full directions are given with each box. There is a great saving by taking the larger sizes.

For sale by Simpson and Dunspaugh, Druggists, Toronto; John M. Thompson, Dundas; Andrew Oliver Galt; A. H. Cook, Brantford, General Agent., by whom Country Druggists and Merchants will be supplied in London and New York prices.

MARY HALL

Sandwich, 13th May, 1856.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS

OPERATE by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, and, by restoring their irregular action to health, correct, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first causes of disease. An extensive trial of their virtues, by Professors, Physicians, and Patients, has shown cures of dangerous diseases almost beyond belief, cases they not substantiated by persons of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Their certificates are published in my American Almanac, which the Agents below named are pleased to furnish free to all inquiring.

Annexed we give Directions for their use in the complaints which they have been found to cure.

For Costiveness.—Take one or two Pills, or such quantity as to gently move the bowels. Costiveness is frequently the aggravating cause of Piles, and the cure of one complaint is the cure of both. No person can feel well while under a costive habit of body. Hence it should be, as it can be, promptly relieved.

For Dyspepsia, which is sometimes the cause of Costiveness, and always uncomfortable, take mild doses—from one to four—to stimulate the stomach and liver into healthy action. They will do it, and the heartburn, headache, and sinkings of dyspepsia will rapidly disappear. When it has gone, don't forget what cured you.

For a Foul Stomach, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take from four to eight Pills at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until activity and strength is restored to the system.

For Nervousness, Sick Headache, Nausea, Pain in the Stomach, Back, or Side, take from four to eight pills on going to bed. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more the next day until they do. These complaints will be swept out from the system. Don't wear these and their kindred disorders because your stomach is foul.

For Scrofula, Erysipelas, and all Diseases of the Skin, take the Pills freely and frequently, to keep the bowels open. The eruptions will generally soon begin to diminish and disappear. Many dreadful ulcers and sores have been healed up by long-purging and purifying effect of these Pills, and some disgusting diseases which seemed to saturate the whole system have completely yielded to their influence, leaving the sufferer in perfect health. Patients! your duty to society forbids that you should parade yourself around the world covered with pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores, and all or any of the unclean diseases of the skin, because your system wants cleansing.

To Purify the Blood, they are the best medicine ever discovered. They should be taken freely and frequently, and the impurities which sow the seeds of scrutable diseases will be swept out of the system like chaff before the wind. By this property they do as much good in preventing sickness as by the remarkable cures which they are making every where.

Liver Complaint, Jaundice, and all Bilious Affections arise from some derangement—either torpidity, congestion, or obstructions of the Liver. Torpidity and congestion vitiate the bile and render it unfit for digestion. This is disastrous to the health, and the constipation is frequently undermined by no other cause. Indigestion is the symptom. Obstruction of the duct which empties the bile into the stomach causes the bile to overflow into the blood. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternately costiveness and diarrhœa, prevails. Feverish attacks, lingering, low spirits, weariness, restlessness, and melancholy, with sometimes inability to sleep, and sometimes great drowsiness; sometimes there is severe pain in the side; the skin and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow; the stomach acid; the bowels sore to the touch; the whole system irritable, with a tendency to fever, which may turn to bilious fever, bilious colic, bilious diarrhœa, dysentery, &c. A medium dose of three or four Pills taken at night, followed by two or three in the morning, and repeated a few days, will remove the cause of all these troubles. It is wicked to suffer such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

Rheumatism, Gout, and all Inflammatory Fevers are rapidly cured by the purifying effects of these Pills upon the blood and the stimulus which they afford to the vital principle of life. For these and all kindred complaints they should be taken in mild doses, to move the bowels gently, but freely.

As a Dinner Pill, this is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has been made more effectual to the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

Shipment of Stock for Canada.

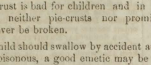
(Abridged from a Dumfries paper by a Correspondent.)

Annan, 24th April, 1856.

There was taken on board the brig James Redding, Captain John Reddick, this afternoon, at Annan, Waterfoot Jetties, to sail to-morrow for Quebec, the following valuable Stock: A splendid dark-gray stallion, three years old, bred by Wm. Byres, Wharton, Cumberland, purchased for £150. A one-year old brown colt, price £50, bred by Mr. John Johnstone, White-Know, Nichol Forest, Cumberland. Five Leicester ewes and two tups, purchased in England, at an average of £7 each. One yearling short horn bull, bred by Mr. Syme, Redkirk, purchased from Mr. Isaac Fankes, Outertown, Warmanble, for £60. The sheep and bull are for W. and R. Armstrong, Markham, Canada West; and the horse belongs for I never meant to tell him
That I loved him—but I did.

A FIGHTING TRUTH.—Woman's partiality for thin shoes is to be accounted for by her insuperable dislike to a thick understanding.

HINTS FOR THE NURSERY.—The treatment of a new born child should be kind but not cordial—and especially not Godfrey's Cordial.



Children should be encouraged to rise with the lark—but the lark should not consist of a bolstering match, or any similar occupation.

Milk is the best food for children but curd should be avoided, nor should the child have its whey.

Pie crust is bad for children and in the nursery neither pie-crusts nor promises should ever be broken.

If a child should swallow by accident anything poisonous, a good emetic may be obtained from the rust of old iron. Perhaps it would be safer to cram down the infant's throat "a wise saw," or a rusty proverb.

THINK OF IT, GIRLS!—Nothing can prevent an increase of bachelorism, save an amendment in the code of educated women. When they learn common sense, instead of broken French; when they learn some useful employment, instead of beating the piano; when they learn to prefer honest industry to silly coxcombry; and when men find woman is a helpmate, instead of a burthen; then, and not till then, may we expect to find fewer bachelors.

The Ungarded Moment.

Yes, my lips to-night have spoken
Words I said they should not speak:
And I would I could recall them—
Would I had not been so weak.
Old that one unguarded moment!
Were it mine to live again,
All the strength of its temptations
Would appeal to me in vain.

True, my lips have only uttered
What is ever in my heart
I am happy when beside him,
Wretched when we are apart,
Though I listen to his praises
Always longer than I should
Yet my heart always bids,
For I never meant to tell him
That I loved him—but I did.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,

AND JOURNAL OF SUBURBAN ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the United States.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced. The growing interest with which the rising generation view the science of Horticulture, renders such a Journal as "The Illustrated Horticulturist" imperatively necessary to the progress of Rural affairs.

Rural Architecture forms one of the principal features; each number contains from two to four engravings of model cottages, from designs by eminent and skilful architects. Space is also assigned to the tasteful art of Landscape Gardening, engraved plans of gardens in every style, and adapted to the peculiarities of different orders of architecture, beautifies the work.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and to all who can boast the sovereignty of a square rod of tillable earth, "The Illustrated Horticulturist and Journal of Suburban Art" will prove an invaluable companion. The extraordinary low price at which it is afforded: together with its really superior execution, both in regard to typography and editorial ability, must make it the most popular work of the kind in America.

"The Illustrated Horticulturist" is printed on the finest quality of pearl surfaced paper, manufactured expressly for it. It is issued regularly the first of each month, commencing with July, 1855. The following gentlemen, eminent for their ability in the science of Horticulture, are employed to conduct the Editorial department: H. P. KNIGHT, JAMES SNOWDEN and D. W. RAY.

TERMS: Two Dollars per annum, payable invariably in advance—a liberal discount to the Trade, Postmasters, and getters-up of Clubs.

Advertisements inserted at the rate of Ten Dollars per page.

N.B.— Newspapers inserting the above prospectus, and drawing attention editorially to the same, will be forwarded the ILLUSTRATED HORTICULTURIST for one year, a copy containing the advertisement should be sent in all cases to ensure attention.

NEW VOLUME OF THE
AGRICULTURIST

SUBSCRIPTION REDUCED FROM
25 TO 50 PER CENT.

The Canadian Agriculturist

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by its present proprietor in 1848, and is too well known to the leading farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us. The undersigned have made arrangements with the proprietor to publish the next, and probably succeeding volumes of the same, and have resolved to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE
Illustrated with Engravings

Such as Farm Implements, Portraits of Animals, designs of Farm Buildings, New Inventions, &c., &c., interesting to the Farmer, and also portraits of some of the most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM McDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the practice of Agriculture near this city. The active promoter of the various improvements made in our Agricultural Societies since their formation, having also been connected with this Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and writings in behalf of Canadian Agriculture are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to its columns as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to extend the correspondence on subjects of a practical kind.

THE AGRICULTURIST IS NOT LIABLE TO POSTAGE.

Select Poetry.

She never will say that she don't!

BY JAMES LYNCHBURG.

She never has said that she loved me,
Yet I often have thought I did spy
Some sweet little dewy emotion
Beam on me from out her bue eye:
But still, if I asked her to marry,
She coquettely says, "Well—I wont!"
And yet if I beg her "be serious,"
She never will say that she don't!

I have thought, too, in some foolish moments,
When my brain and my heart were both out,
That her smile was the least bit the sweeter,
When on me like a sunbeam it shone;
And I've caught her, at least once, I'm certain,
Gaze on me more steadfast than wont,
And yet she wont promise to love me—
But, never will say that she don't.

'Tis a pickle I'm in, now that's certain—
Do I love her? O as if the flower
Which turns to the sunbeam of morning,
Loves warmth in that beauteous hour;
And I pray, as my life-hope is drinking
Its future from love's sawy font,
That my Mary, whenever she answers,
She never will say that she don't?

OUR OPPOSITE NEIGHBORS.

BY MARY A. LOWELL.

For three or four weeks, my maid Felice and myself have been watching the movements of the family who have recently taken the handsome brick house opposite. We saw the arrival, the moving of the furniture, and all the appointments and appendages. They were unexceptionable. When I say that the house is in Roulstone Street, a quarter of the city which is decidedly genteel, being the very centre of wealth, fashion and refinement, the reader will be satisfied that there is nothing further to say.

For myself, I have only to say that I am a single lady of a handsome property, and of considerable personal attractions, although of an age which I do not choose to have stated in the census reports. As I am not writing a history of myself, I feel justified in holding back some particulars which my neighbors sometimes inquire into rather too curiously. Felice is often asked what rouge, hair-dyes, and other toilet appendages I most patronize; and it is but a few days since Mrs. Flimsy, my next door neighbor, above, inquired if I wore a wig. Thanks to Bogle's exquisite skill, she will never find out. Important curiosity!

Well, as I said, our curiosity has been very much excited by the strange demonstration at the opposite house. I am dying to get acquainted with them; but I am mortified to see that they close the blinds, or drop the curtains, whenever Felice and I take our accustomed seats at the front parlor windows, which, being a little higher than theirs, would give us a delightful opportunity of reconnoitering.

For some time, we could not ascertain the name; but at length, a beautiful silver plate was placed on the door, and Felice, prettier than ever, so frightened at a dog, as she was passing the house, ran up the steps, and found it was St. Leon. The handsome gentleman who goes away every morning is of course Mr. St. Leon. He is very graceful and dignified. Mrs. St. Leon, too, is very beautiful; and there is a young lady there with long curls, whom we take to be her sister; and there is a very lovely child, who comes toddling to the door every time the father goes out, and kisses her little fat hand to him as he goes down the steps.—As we cannot ascertain the younger lady's name, Felice and I have concluded to call her Fannie for the present. There has been a very young gentleman walking up and down Roulstone Street, every day since the removal. He comes up on our side, and then on the S. Leon side looking melancholy and mysterious. We fancy him to be a lover of Fannie's. This impression is strengthened by seeing her dart suddenly to the window one day after he had passed, and strain her eyes in the direction in which he vanished.

Within a short time, we have seen a carriage driven to the door, almost immediately on the departure of Mr. St. Leon, and an aged gentleman, closely wrapped up, has been assisted up the long steps. The driver then goes off, but punctually comes back before Mr. St. Leon's hour for returning.—Mrs. St. Leon always comes to the door, and bestows many marks of excessive weeping. Fannie, with her usual aptitude, has given this old man the name of Summer; and to the pale youth, who walks so languishingly, she has given the name of Spring.

For a long time we were unable to connect Mr. Summer with the family; but finally concluded that he must be Mrs. St. Leon's father, and that the match not suiting him, he only comes at such times as he knows her husband is absent. I wonder if we have really hit upon the right interpretation. Without the assistance of Felice, I should never have found out the whole of this little romance; but Felice is a very jewel of servants; and I reward every one of her discoveries with some present which excites her gratitude so much, that she generally tires her ingenuity in a very remarkable manner for the rest of the week.

Monday Feb. 22.—Mr. St. Leon has just gone from dinner. Mrs. St. Leon is looking anxiously from the window. Fannie and the child accompanied Mr. St. Leon to the door, where, Felice thinks, he pressed her hand rather warmly for a wife's sister to permit. Certainly he is fond of her. I wonder that Mrs. St. Leon allows Fannie to go to the door so often with him. A carriage stops. Her father has arrived, but looks very sad and feeble. I should not wonder, if, after all, his poor daughter has made a bad choice of a husband. He is probably a sad rogue. Why does her father permit Fannie to stay with her?

Tuesday.—Yesterday I gave Felice my brown satin. To-day she made a discovery. Mr. Spring as she calls the pale young man, rung at the door opposite, and was admitted by the servant. Felice is certain that Mrs. St. Leon was in the parlor when he went in; and that she rose and threw her arms about his neck and kissed him. Really, I think our opposite neighbors are no better than they should be. I shall certainly never call there; and yet it would be satisfaction to find out what kind of a family they are. Felice was in the post office to-day when the servant carried in a letter to go by mail. She pretended to be looking at an advertisement over the letter-box, and actually she was reading the address. It was written in a very fine hand and directed to St. Leon Kinniard, London. Who can that be?

Evening.—The curtains are up in the opposite parlor. Fannie sits there with Mrs. St. Leon's baby on her lap. Mr. St. Leon is just going up the steps. Good Heavens! He is in the parlor, and positively kissing Fannie! I blush while I write it. Poor Mrs. St. Leon! I pity her, and yet she did so wrong to marry without her father's consent! But she had her retribution.

Sunday.—I intended going to church to-day, but I am so intensely occupied with opposite neighbors, that I must stay at home. Besides I have a cold, and if Rev. Mr. Spriggins calls here to-morrow, of course I shall give one of these reasons.

They are going to ride to church! Here comes Mr. St. Leon. He is waiting on Fannie into the carriage first. Mrs. St. Leon sits on the front seat and the servant girl beside her! Felice says that is probably to keep her in her place; as family secrets might be told out of the house if they were not kind to her. Felice shall get acquainted with the girl.

Monday.—I am about tired of lecturing what that family can mean by their strange and extraordinary conduct. Nothing but the most reckless disregard of the proprieties of life can account for it in the least.—This morning a lady closely veiled entered the house, and we saw her going to the parlor, where she fell into Mr. St. Leon's arms. His wife going in at that moment, she deceitfully turned to her in the same way, but evidently with less cordiality. What can one think of them?

Wednesday.—I find, by Felice, who has been over to call on the servant, that we have gone all wrong in our conjectures.—The very pretty little romance which Felice and I have been three weeks weaving, has turned into a very ordinary, every day affair.

Felice thinks that the girl put on a great deal of mock dignity, when she told her Love she had mistaken the character of the family. It seems that "Fannie," is after all, the true Mrs. St. Leon, and the child is hers, too! The lady whom we called Mrs. St. Leon is sister to the husband, not to the wife; and the old gentleman is Mr. St. Leon's father, instead of hers. "Mr. Spring," as Felice calls, is a brother to the ladies, and he is extremely dissipated. The husband will not receive him at his house, but Mrs. St. Leon disobeys his express commands in this respect, and often sees her brother. In this she is advised and upheld by her husband's father, who believes that he will finally be reformed by kindness. The old gentleman's afternoon visits are with special reference to "Mr. Spring." Finally the lady who entered the house on Monday, was Mr. St. Leon's own sister.

So ends our romance, and I am so angry at finding everything so natural, that I have refused to give Felice the mulberry cloak which she has been teasing me for so long. Heigh ho! I will never undertake to guess histories through the windows again. My "occupation's gone!"

Miscellany.

In Cornwall I heard related an election anecdote. A worthy German, Jacob Otto, attended at the hustings in Stormont to give his vote. He first shook hands with Mr. (now Judge) McLean, and afterwards extended a similar compliment to Philip Vankoughnet. Dr. Blacklock held out his fist, but Mr. Otto turned away from him with a significant shrug of the shoulder. No objections being made to his vote, the usual question was asked, "Who do you vote for?" "For Doctor Blacklock, a plumper," McLean, surprised at the unexpected decision, enquired why Mr. Otto had refused to shake hands with the doctor. "Because," replied Otto, "I can shake hands with Dr. Blacklock any day, but with you other gentlemen I can only shake hands once in four years.—Mackenzie's Message.

SCOTTISH EMIGRATION TO TURKEY.—On the 20th ult., about 25 agricultural laborers, with their wives and families, left the Broomielaw, Glasgow, by the "Beaver," steamer, en route for Liverpool, whence they sail on Saturday for Turkey, by the screw steamer Acadia.—They are under the charge of and accompanied by Mr. Goobie, lately farm overseer to Mr. Dixon, of Govan Iron Works, and are to be employed under him in introducing the Scotch system of farming amongst the Turks and Greeks, upon a beautiful and extensive estate acquired by Thomas Parry, Esq., situated about 12 miles from Constantinople. Mr. Parry has been long domiciled in the dominions of the Sultan; and seeing the slovenly and unproductive mode of agriculture pursued by the natives, he resolved to offer the example of a better system, both for the improvement of his property, and for the benefit of the ignorant Turkish cultivators in general. He accordingly sent a commission to Messrs Edmiston and Mitchell, of Glasgow, to secure a competent overseer and a number of industrious and intelligent Scotch peasants, and to send them along with agricultural implements, &c., to Constantinople. This commission, so far as we learn, has been executed by our townsmen with great success and ability. In addition to the human freight already alluded to, they have sent off agricultural implements of every variety and of very best description, consisting of ploughs, harrows, spades rollers, &c. They have also forwarded a large quantity of the most valuable agricultural seeds. The extent of the consignment of tools and seeds may be understood, when we state that three specious railway waggons were filled by it to the roof. Another detachment of agricultural labourers is soon to follow. We have reason to believe that the consignment of men and material is likely, due course, to be followed by others.—[Glasgow Herald.

The pianos annually manufactured in France are worth 40,000000 francs. "France plays," said Mr. Veron the other day in the Corps Legislatif, "while the rest of Europe dances."

The Sandusky Register states that the common mudtortoise are floating ashore dead, at Sandusky, by thousands. Some of these are very large, but the majority of them are about the size of the crown of a hat. Some suppose that they were too closely confined under the ice during the past winter, and that the want of ventilation caused their death.

VICISSITUDES OF LIFE.—A curious rencontre happened to Douglass Jerrold on the first night of the "Rent Day." When he was a midshipman on board a man of war, and in the same capacity, a lad named Charkson Stanfield. Sixteen years afterwards, these two sailor-boys met on the boards of a London theatre; one the great scene-painter, and the other a successful dramatist.

TRAGIC EVENT IN THE TYROL.—The Revue Franco-Italienne reports a terrible event as having occurred recently at Bolzano, in the Italian Tyrol. A school-boy of the name of Schwarz, a son of a peacock belonging to the masters and killed it. The father of the child, when he heard of the circumstance, came forward voluntarily to pay the value of the bird. But the two masters who were priests, determined that the child must nevertheless, receive exemplary chastisement. At a moment when all the other scholars went out for a walk, the "murderer" of the peacock was detained and beaten till his back was broken. He died on the spot. The father, who was sent for by the people who heard the cries of the child, when he came to the school, and seeing the infant dead, fell upon the priests and killed them by repeated stabs with a knife.

Experiments have recently been made in the presence of the committee of the Ordnance Department, on the Caledonian-road station of the North London Railway, with the steam gun of Mr. Perkins, which has been frequently described, and is familiar to the visitors of the Polytechnic Institution. The result proved the power of working steam at the very high pressure of 1,400 lbs. to the square inch, which pressure is alleged by those who recommend the steam gun for military use to be more effective for the discharge of ball than gunpowder.

A ludicrous incident annoys the Austrian Press beyond description. Lord Normanby, the English Ambassador at Florence, celebrated the birthday of the Queen and the restoration of peace on the same day which was set aside for that purpose at London. Now, the 29th of May happened to be the anniversary of the battle of Curtatone, in which the Tuscan troops distinguished themselves in their heroic defence against the Austrians of Radetzky; in fact, it is a revolutionary anniversary. You can, therefore, easily imagine the excitement created at Florence when in the evening of that day the Sardinian flag, the flag of Italy was suddenly hoisted at the Palace and at the Villa of Lord Normanby, together with the Union Jack and the Tricolor, and the illumination and fire works displayed the initials of Victor Emanuel, together with those of Queen Victoria and the Emperor Napoleon. The crowd seemed to be much irritated by the unexpected sight, and shouted its vivas in a frantic way. The police were furious but could not interfere; still the official Austrian press heaps every abuse on the head of the indiscreet ambassador. Indeed, the trick was thoroughly Palmerstonian, exciting the Italians, though not engaging England in any way.

The English company have taken formal possession of the Stratford and Buffalo railway, and there is every prospect that the line will be finished as far as Stratford by the 1st of December next.

News from Australia.

THE COLONY OF VICTORIA.

The magnificent and favorite clipper Marco Polo being about to sail for England, we have pleasure in despatching by her our usual report upon the state of the colony.

Referring to our subsebeant columns for details, we think it right to mention here briefly that this colony has now arrived at a most important period of her history. In little more than four years she has received within her bounds two hundred and fifty thousand persons, all of whom are peaceably settled, most of them prosperously engaged in active industry, and all of them are provided for. In that period, besides the extraction from the soil and rock of forty millions worth of gold, great cities have been built, extensive tracts have been cultivated, roads have been formed throughout the length and breadth of the land; we have organised systems of education, and of religious instruction, and at last we can also boast of constitutional government. The builders are actively engaged in erecting our Parliament House, and preparations are in progress for the election by the people of their future legislators. In fact, looking abroad upon this country, everywhere is seen the aspect of a peaceful, industrious, civilised society, and everywhere the most satisfactory indications of progress and development.

So far, it will be admitted, all is well.—We have made a good beginning. But, after all, it is only a beginning, and if we were asked whether we shall henceforth proceed as rapidly, or even as prosperously, as hitherto, we should be afraid to answer in the affirmative. No one who has watched the course of events here can fail to have seen that the chief element of our success hitherto has been the rapid influx of population, the abundant supply of labor, and it is also evident to all that this element is now wanting—that there is no longer an influx of population—that the vital stream has nearly ceased to flow. It is our humble opinion the great question of our future progress may be summed up in one word—immigration. We want more men from England, and without more men all our interests must languish. We want to form railways everywhere. We want to raise corn. We want to plant vineyards and orchards. We want to excavate auriferous quartz, and coal, and iron, and tin. We have bounteous resources undeveloped. We have room and need for thousands where we have only tens. We repeat that our progress depends upon immigration, the immigration of sober strong men. To the industrious of both sexes this country proves a paradise, and we earnestly invite them. But all others should stay away.

With these few preliminary remarks we proceed to report upon the various colonial interests in detail.

THE GOLD.

During the present month the escorts and shipments apparently demonstrate a most remarkable increase in the yield of gold in all the mining districts. To a certain extent the increase is attributable to the recent increase in price and it may be proper to explain that the price of gold here depends chiefly upon the course of exchange which again is influenced by the proportion of imports and exports. For a considerable time about the new year, which is our great exporting season, the merchants were enabled to remit in produce, and bankers' bills were not wanted. The bills fell below par, and then there was an inducement to buy them in place of gold. Gold being less in demand fell in price, and the diggers apparently were enabled to hold their gold for a higher price.

PRECIOUS STONES.

We are happy to announce that several specimens of topazes, corundum pyrites, and iserene, have recently been brought to the Museum of Natural History. The pyrites contain nine or ten per cent. of gold, and the discoverer, a Frenchman, who says there are thousands of tons, has asked £1,000 from the Government as a reward, on his pointing out the locality.

A topaz of considerable size was lately found in a reef near the Criterion Hotel, Bendigo.

TRADE AND COMMERCE.

Since the date of our last summary, trade has been active. Beyond the matters which are separately treated elsewhere, there is, however, little to discuss. At the close of the past month, speculation appeared to be rising to an undue extent, but this has been since checked, or at all events brought more nearly within legitimate bounds. The arrivals have been few, and advices from Europe are in favor of holders.

AGRICULTURE.

The principal incident in relation to agriculture since our last summary has been the exhibition of seeds by the Port Phillip Farmers' Society. This was the first exhibition of the kind held in Melbourne, and attracted much attention from the increasing interest attached to agricultural pursuits. His Excellency the Acting Governor visited the exhibition, and intimated that he was much pleased with the superior produce displayed and procured samples of the best descriptions of grain.

The effect of the show was to bring together, as we anticipated, produce from the various districts of the colony, and also from New South Wales and South Australia. The agricultural districts near Melbourne, including Heidelberg, the Kangaroo Ground, and the River Plenty, were well represented, whilst Western Port stood forward as a producing district, and the Pentland Hills—a new, extensive, and fertile agricultural country,—also participated in the competition. The most interesting feature of the exhibition was the opportunity it afforded of comparing the prize wheat of South Australia with the best specimens of our own growth; and there is material for reflection, as well as a provocative to increased exertion on the part of our agriculturists, in the circumstances that the prizes for barley and the second prize for oats were awarded to the produce of New South Wales, and that the quality of the South Australian wheat was pronounced by many to be superior to any produced in this colony.

THE SUPPLY OF LABOR.

The reference made elsewhere to the extensive public works in progress or likely to be soon commenced indicates an extensive demand for labor, and that this demand, instead of diminishing, will steadily increase. Houses of Parliament, piers, railways, markets, and similar works, cannot be completed without the aid of many more stout arms than we have in Victoria. The attractions of the gold-fields are so powerful, and the demands of the farmers for agriculturists are so urgent, that difficulty will be found in obtaining at a reasonable rate of remuneration the men required for the execution of these projects. These works must be accomplished, and that without delay. The labor employed on them must be purchased at the current rates, and if there is not a considerable reinforcement of the number of strong and energetic men, accustomed to the "pick and shovel," the wages of that class must again rise to an exorbitant rate, and the works must be suspended.

It is not skilled labor so much as unskilled that the colony now requires, and will continue to require, we believe, considerably beyond the limit of its probable supply.—When Melbourne was in course of erection, and stores, shops, houses, hotels, and offices were immediately and urgently required, the wages of masons, plasterers, painters, and those also of cabinet makers, upholsterers—of all whose services were indispensable in order to prepare dwellings and fit them for occupancy—rose to a fabulous amount, and it was only by the constant supply of competition which immigration furnished, that labor of that kind was kept at such a price as to be at all accessible. The reports given of the wages received by that class of workmen attracted to Melbourne an amount of skilled labor which ultimately reduced the rates of remuneration, and subsequently upon the urgent demand was supplied. For a short time the reduction of wages which the altered relation of supply and demand indicated as the means of remedying the existing evil, was not at all palatable to the skilled artizans whom the mystic high wages had brought to Victoria, but ultimately they accepted their new position. Some reconciled themselves to working for lower, wages, some went to the gold-fields, and some adopted modes of employment suggested by the state of the market, though different from what their habits best fitted them to undertake.—Along with this relief from the pressure of a super-abundant supply in the market for skilled labor, there has been of late a considerable stimulus to the demand, and a reference to the labor market reports for Melbourne and Geelong, which appear in another column, will show our readers how great the necessity for an augmentation of our supply of labor, and what is the kind of labor most in request. Female servants, agricultural laborers, and lourers on the road are in great demand, although the wages of female servants are £30 to £40 per annum, and laborers on the roads receive from 9s. to 10s. per day. The same reports show that skilled labor is in considerable demand, as the wages of carpenters, masons, &c., are quoted at from 12s. to 17s. per day.

It is much to be regretted that the English newspapers should have given insertion to letters from the colony in which strong and unqualified dissatisfaction has been expressed. Many have come out here with hopes unduly excited, and on finding that their labor was not in demand at once, while their disappointment was fresh and bitter, exaggerated accounts of the difficulties which are here encountered. Workmen in Melbourne can undo stand the gloomy representations, and since we adopted the course publishing some of these "standers," we have received a number of letters from parties from different parts of the United Kingdom, comparing their condition in Victoria with that of the class from which they emigrated, and expressing regret that such one-sided statements as those referred to should find a place in influential English journals.

Person in England do not make due allowance for the feelings of disappointment under which such statements were made, and probably such letters have had considerable effect in lessening the supply of labor to Victoria. During the past month the excess of immigration over emigration has not amounted to 150 persons per week.—The effect of this will be soon and powerfully felt. When the projected public works are initiated, the attractions of the gold-fields and the competition of the farmers, who must have laborers, with the Government, who must have railways, bridges, &c., will unduly raise the price of labor. The artizans and labourers already in Victoria will doubtless reap the advantage of this.—The labor of navvies, farm servants, and others of a similar class, will command a high price; but the real progress of the colony will be retarted, and thousands will remain in England working hard for weekly wages which hardly raise them above semi-starvation, while we long for their services in vain, and would gladly pay them their 9s. or 12s. per day, which their labor is even now worth. The rapid rise in the price of labor is already apparent. The Chairman of the Central Road Board stated a few days ago in the Legislative Council that certain contracts for road-making could have been made 20 per cent. lower if effected a few months before the time at which they were taken.

PUBLIC WORKS.

The necessary arrangements for the transfer to Government of the property of the Melbourne, Mount Alexander, and Murray River Railway Company have been completed, and on the last day of the session of the Legislative Council the Chief Secretary stated, in answer to Mr. Fawkner, that it was the intention of the Government to proceed "as rapidly as possible" with the construction of the Melbourne and Williamstown branch of that railway, and that they would hold themselves responsible to the "next Legislature" for their proceedings.—When this part of the work is completed, ships of very large tonnage will be able to take up their berths alongside the railway pier, the cargoes will be transferred by steam cranes directly from the hold to the railway tracks, and conveyed without delay to the stores of the Melbourne merchants.

The works of the new Houses of Parliament are rapidly advancing. Tenders for the completion of the first House and for laying the foundation of the second, made by Messrs. C. Cornish and Co., have been accepted. The amount of the tenders is £28,980. The total amount expended will be upwards of £100,000.

The Corporation are prosecuting their efforts for the improvement of the city with some energy. The lighting of the streets with gas is postponed in consequence of the want of the necessary materials, but the difficulty will not long exist. The planting of the parks and of some of the roads leading into the city with ornamental trees and shrubs will be proceeded with without delay, and by that means the beauty of the city and the comfort of its residents will be much enhanced. Building operations are now again carried on in Melbourne with great vigor. The new buildings will comprise some very extensive merchants' stores and several magnificent banks.

Her Majesty's State Ball.

The Queen gave a State Ball, on Tuesday evening, 17th inst, at Buckingham Palace, to a very numerous party, comprising the Royal family, Royal foreign visitors, the whole of the diplomatic corps, the Ministers and officers of State, the Ladies and Gentlemen of the Royal Household, foreigners of distinction now in this country, and a large party of the nobility and gentry. About 2000 invitations were issued. Her Majesty wore a dress of Indian muslin embroidered in gold sprigs, and a broad gold border in bouquets, trimmed with bunches of red cactus, and green leaves ornamented with diamonds. The Queen's headdress was formed of red cactus, green leaves and diamonds. The Princess Royal wore a rich blue glauce dress covered with blue and white net, trimmed with bunches of cherry blossom. The body and sleeves were trimmed to correspond. Her Royal Highness's headdress was composed of cherry blossom. The Duchess of Cambridge wore a dress of whith silk, with a triple flounce of pointd'Alencon, each flounce edged with satin ribond and white marabont fringe. The corsage was trimmed to correspond, and the stomacher covered with large sapphires and diamonds. Her headdress was formed of a pearl tiara and lilac feathers. The Princess Mary of Cambridge wore a white tulle dress with graduated bouffants from the the top to the bottom, over a rich white glance petticoat, trimmed all over with bunches of corn flowers; the corsage and sleeves trimmed to match, with bouquets, and diamond ornaments; the stomacher and neklace diamonds. The Princess's headdress was composed of corn flowers and diamonds. Major-General Sir William Fenwick Williams had the honor of being presented to her Majesty by the Earl of Clarendon at the ball. The Queen was conducted by Earl Spencer, the Lord Steward, at a quarter past 12 o'clock, to the banqueting-room, where a state supper was served. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness the Consort, with the Royal visitors, afterwards returned to the ball and concert-room where the Queen remained until two o'clock.

Investiture with Order of the Bath.

The Queen appointed an investiture of the Order of the Bath to take place at Buckingham Palace on Saturday afternoon, for the purpose of investing Sir Charles Wood, General Sir William Maynard Gomm, George Brown, and other officers of distinction with the insignia of that order. A number of knights of the first class of the Bath were summond to take part in the interesting ceremony, and arrived in their different naval and military uniforms. Admiral Sir Edmund Lyons, General Sir James Simpson, General Sir John Campbell, and Sir John Burgoyne were among the early arrivals at the palace. Lord Palmerston and Lord Panmure attended as civil knights grand cross of the Bath. The Duke of Cambridge arrived from his residence in St. James's Palace. The royal duke, being a knight of the order, wore the handsome crimson satin mantle of his dignity. Sir Charles Wood arrived, habited in the official court dress, dark blue, richly embroidered with gold.—Sir William Williams was dressed in the new regulation uniform of a general officer, wearing the gold sash. Sir George Brown appeared in a general's uniform—The Foot Guards were on duty at the grand entrance of the palace, and the band played the National Anthem on the arrival of the Duke of Cambridge. The band also performed "The return of the Guards," and other compositions during the afternoon. The Yeomen of the Guard also marched into the palace from their guard-room in St. James's, while the Gentlemen at Arms, in their handsome uniforms, assembled to form the state guard at the solemnity. The Duchess of Wellington and other ladies of the court, and a number of officers of the royal household (the latter all appearing either in official or military uniforms,) attended her Majesty upon this occasion. The Queen invested the different officers with the ensigns of their respective dignities, in the order commencing with the knight of the first class, comprising Sir Charles Wood and Sir George Brown, and afterwards with Sir William Williams (the gallant defender of Kars), and his companions in arms, Colonel Lake and Colonel Teesdale. At the conclusion of the ceremony the court broke up, the ladies in waiting, the ministers, officers of state, the newly made knight of the Bath, and the officers of the royal household, taking their departure, while the Coldstreams, with their band, and the Yeomen of the Guard marched out of the palace.—Observer.

Court Etiquette and American Notions.

From the London Times, June 26.

When will Americans learn manners? Who will teach our transatlantic cousins how to behave? Here is is one of them who tried yesterday, in defiance even of an etiquette modified to suit his countrymen, to parade his republican person before the Queen, at her levee, in a frock coat, black neckcloth, and yellow waistcoat. The thing itself was trivial, but the object was most distakable. He wished to have it to boast that he compelled the Queen to forego the usages of her court in his especial behoof. He tried to accomplish this national feat under the wing of Mr. Dallas, who when repulsed by supporters of his country, at once left the palace in a pet. Well! after all, we suppose that her Majesty will continue to hold levees in spite of Mr. Dallas's displeasure. It is scarcely worth while to contute the absurd pretensions of people which, with the most irritable touchiness as regards themselves, combine the greatest disregard of all decorum towards others. The Queen of England says to her subjects and to strangers who visits her in her own home, "I am happy to see you all on State occasions, but if you come you will find me gorgeously arrayed, and you honor me without the compliment, then, and come in your best." She tells her guests, in fact, as hundreds of ladies and gentlemen in this country are in the habit of telling their friends, "This a full dress party," implying that all who do not choose to observe the rule better stay away. What should we think of a fellow in private life who, after accepting an invitation to a set dinner, at which every body else wore full dress, presented himself in a shooting jacket and shepherd's plaid trousers? In all probability, should such portent appear on the horizon of a gentleman's hall, it would never rise to the upper regions of the drawing room, for the butler would infallibly show him to the door.—Now, this is what the Queen's Master of the Ceremonies very properly did in the case of an American who, in a frock coat, yellow vest, and black neckcloth, chose to present himself at her Majesty's levee yesterday. He broke no usage of law, but he preferred to withhold from the Queen and her augst company that compliment which every gentleman would have rendered. Our American cousins must really learn the good old proverb about "doing at Rome as they do at Rome," and, though they live at home in the enjoyment of all liberty or license of dress or undress, they must, when they visit these communities, either disguise themselves and their republican prejudices in decent attire on occasions of State solemnity, or forego the greatest delight on which a true republican can feast his eager eyes—the sight of a live Queen on her throne.

Movements of Troops.

The Quebec Colonist says:—In the newspapers received by the Canada, we find statements to the effect that large reinforcements to the army in Canada, were preparing to embark; but these reports may or may not be true. There is no doubt that a week prior to the sailing of the Canada, the war office was busy making preparations with a view to probable difficulties with the United States; but now that the British Government have determined to conciliate, it is hoped, to have no need to preserve peace at any price—we think it altogether unlikely that these troops will be sent out to Canada, to be constructed by Mr. Marcy into a menace of invasion of the territory of the United States. The regiments mentioned below were possibly ordered to be in readiness; but from the studied t ne of the English press, we expect that these orders, if they were ever issued, will be countermanded,—and the next mail will bring such intelligence.

HOUSEHOLD TROOPS FOR FOREIGN SERVICE.—It is understood by the Government to send out 2 battalions of the Household Infantry, which troops are in a high state of discipline, to Canada, and orders of readiness for embarkation are expected to be received from the War Department, at their respective head quarters, hourly. It is believed that the 1st battalion of the Grenadiers, and the 2nd battalion of the Coldstreams will be destined for the service.

THE LAND TRANSPORT AND MEDICAL STAFF CORPS.—A detachment consisting of 300 artificers and 200 drivers of the Land Transport Corps, and 120 orderlies, with the requisite number of subordinate officers belonging to the Medical Staff Corps, are placed under orders for immediate embarkation. Their intended destination is understood to be Canada.

SHIPMENT OF WARLIKE AND COMMISSARIAT STORES FOR CANADA.—This morning (the greatest activity prevailed in the Ordnance Store keeper's Department, Tower, in consequence of orders having been received for the immediate dispatch of large quantities of military and commissariat stores; and a number of extra laborers were employed to expedite the shipment. During the morning upwards of 5,000 stand complete of Minie and other rifles and Victoria carbines, with accoutrements, were shipped on board lighters for Deptford and Woolwich, at which places they will be transhipped for conveyance to Montreal and Halifax. The commissariat stores consist of blankets, great coats, and winter clothing.

Arrival of the George Sand.

The steamer George Sand, from Aspinwall, having left there on the 5th, arrived early this morning, bringing California mails of the 20th and $700,000 in specie and 400 passengers. The George Sand connected at the Isthmus with the steamer Sonora, two million one hundred and forty-three thousand dollars.

The Sonora spoke the steamer John L. Stephens, on the 23th, bound up all well. The N. Y. mails and passengers of 20th June, left Panama on the first of July in the steamer Golden Age. The George Law passed the Illinois on the 10th. The Nicaragua steamer Sierra Nevada left San Francisco on the 20th, with 800 passengers and $128,000 in specie. She took 200 recruits and seven tons of provisions for Gen. Walker.

The Sloop of War Decatur, from Mogels Sound, arrived at San Francisco on the 12th.

The only news of interest at San Francisco relates to the Vigilance Committee.—At last accounts they were still in session. Their force consists of 4,000 infantry, 500 cavalry and 5 companies of artillery with 35 pieces of ordinance. Their troops are drilled in several armories in different parts of the city, and occasionally appear in the streets for regimental drill.

Gen. Wool had refused to send the gov ernment arms and amunition, on the ground that he was not authorized to act in the premises excepting on the order of the President of the United States. The committee have thrown up breastworks of sand bags in front of their building, and guarded all approach with cannon. Brass field pieces are mounted on the roof ready for instant action day and night. Several additional Criminals, committed before the Revolutionary Tribunal of ballot box stuffing, had been banished from the State and sent to sea on foreign bound ships.

The following persons were notified to leave before the 20th: John Crow, J. W. Bagler, James Hennessy, Wm. Hamilton, Wm. Maguire, James Kessock, Terence Kelley, John Lowly.

The following have been committed and are awaiting trial: Thos. B. Cunningham, one of the murderers of Col. Weymouth of New Orleans, Thos. Malone, highway man, Bill Mulligan, Robt. Lipsey and Philander Brace, murderers. All arrests have been made without bloodshed and chiefly without violence.

The Vigilance Committee police numbers some 1000 with revolvers.

An immense mass meeting was held in the city on the 16th by the friends of the Committee. Speeches were made by Hon. Wm. Duree and others, fully endorsing the acts of the Committee.

Terrence Kelley one of the men ordered to leave refused, and was taken into custody.

There was a rumor at Costa Rica that Prest. Moras would be shot by the insurgents.

Gen. Sherman has resigned his commission as Major-General of the State troops of California, in consequence of the refusal of Gen. Wool to furnish them with arms and ammunition. Governor Johnson was highly incensed at the action of Wool.

The State militia encamped near San Francisco are said to number but a few hundreds, and but little is entertained of a collision.

Miners are said to be doing a fine business in all quarters.

Mr. North, Marshal of San Francisco, had resigned his office.

A report is current in New Orleans, from Oregon, that Captain Smith's Camp had been attacked by Indians and a large number killed and wounded, but is not credited in Jacksonville. News however, had arrived of the attack on Col. Might's command at Natchez River by the Yakina Indians, in which the commander was killed and one-third of his force killed and wounded, his command numbering between 700 and 800 men.

Particulars of the dispersion of the Topeka Legislature—A Michigan man in Kansas.

Correspondence of the Detroit Daily Tribune.

LECOMPTON, K. T., July 5, 1856.

EDITORS DETROIT TRIBUNE: Presuming that your readers may wish to hear from the Topeka Legislature in further detail than the telegraph conveyed, I hasten to give you the matter as it was, knowing as I do that many manufacture news down the river by mere heresay. On the morning of the 3rd inst., many of the members of the Topeka Legislature were at Topeka and held a kind of council together with friends present, and resolved that, if Col. Sumner should issue the expected proclamation forbidding the meeting of the Legislature, they would not meet. In the meantime, rumor had agitated the Missouri border with the report that Col. Lane would be there with a large force to resist any and all oppostion. An effort was made to march 4000 Missourians of the baser sort to Topeka, but the 3rd passed off with no other result than a few individuals, and the Legislature, they resolved to meet on the 4th. At 9 o'clock A. M. the Hall was crowded, and by half past 10 the members concluded to commence. Just about this time the Topeka Guards were parading in a kind of 4th of July way in front of the Hall, and were just about to be presented with a banner from the ladies as Col. Sumners men rode up and dispersed them, and formed in front of the House. Inside a member moved a call of the House when Marshal Donaldson arose and announced three proclamations—one each from Gov. Shannon, Secretary Woodson, and Col. Sumner, which he commenced to read in a confused tone, and soon finding himself unable to read them, he handed them to a gentleman, said to be Judge Elmore, who read them. The substance of one was an order for the body to disperse or rather to not organize. But the calling of the House was commenced and completed only 17 members answering to the call, though many others were present, and they say that they considered the resolution of the evening of the 3d as forbidding them to answer, while some say that they feared an arrest. Now Col. Sumner appeared and was received with cheerful smiles and give a seat where the Speaker should sit, and some one moved that Col. Sumner be made Speaker pro tem, which the Col. seemed to take as a pleasant joke and laughed with the crowd, but immediately arose and stated that he had a painful duty to perform, but that his orders were imperative; and that they [the Legislature] must disperse. He was then asked if they could organize and adjourn, to which he replied, no. He was then asked if they should consider the dispersal as forcible if they now quit.

He replied that they might consider it as at the point of the bayonet, as his force were ready to execute forcibly if need be. They then gave three cheers for Col. Sumner, three cheers for Robinson, three cheers for the Union, three cheers for Liberty, and three groans for Pierce and Donaldson and dispersed. Col. Sumner mounted his horse to ride, was then seen to speak to him and he dismounted, was then seated and proceeded to the Senate chamber and dispersed the Senate in a like manner.

After this all parties joined in a boisterous celebration of the 4th, Col. Sumner having proffered the use of his cannon and guns to make noise for them and the day passed off with much good cheer. A few men from Lecompton and some 50 from Missouri were the only ones who seemed annoyed by the proceedings of the day. One man was shot on his way home by a Buffalo from Lecompton.

The prisoners are still in charge of U. S. soldiers, near this place.

I hasten to get this off by the hands of a friend, and will in a day or two give some further account of Kansas. VIATOR.

SANDWICH, JULY 18, 1856.

THE SOUTHERN RAILWAY.

The affairs of this company have at length assumed what may be called a business-like appearance. The first charter requiring an amount of stock to be subscribed before the company could be organized—which it was found impossible at this time to obtain, from the scarcity of money—a bill was introduced during the last session in which the amount was reduced to £250,000, which amount having been subscribed, it was determined to organize at once and commence operations. And on the 7th of August a meeting will be held for the purpose of electing directors. The County of Essex is more interested in this great undertaking than any other county through which it will pass, from the fact that its terminus will be within it, bringing an amount of capital to be expended within its limits, and opening up the interior of the county and placing lands in market which heretofore have been altogether shut out the number of settlers that will be induced to make this their home, encouraged to do so by the facilities that will then be afforded for their easy access to market and the prospect of a tremendous increase in the value of property. The demand which will then be made for manufactories of all kinds will induce capitalists to take advantage of the splendid sites for the erection of factories upon our great water frontage upon the River Detroit, better positions than which cannot be obtained upon the continent. With the great advantages which we possess in this county, it is only reasonable to suppose that the benefits which the completion of this line of railway will give us, will not be of small extent, and will place us among the foremost in the country as regards wealth and advancement—having, as she has been long for some railway communicating within her borders doing an immense business; for if we may judge by the traffic upon the Great Western Railway, of what will be that upon the Southern, it cannot but do an immense trade. The far West, pouring out her treasures, will give them constant employment, and which is increasing so rapidly, that even at present means of transportation are found quite inadequate to their wants.

As a paying speculation, it will no doubt prove (as the Great Western has done) one of the best investments in the country, and it will have advantages over that company being a great deal shorter, and will be built at less than three-fourths of the cost of the Great Western—having a more level country to pass through, and avoiding the swamps along the shore of Lake St. Clair.

Taking the line known as the "Johnson's Survey," the distance will be much shorter—and we think there can be no doubt that one will be adopted, being the most direct, and passing through a country which is almost perfectly level, will offer inducements which no other line can.

As to the terminus of this road, we must inquire which point upon the Detroit river offers itself as the most convenient, and where there are facilities for connecting with the railways with which it forms a great chain in the State of Michigan, and without which this one would be quite useless, for in reality it is only one link in the great chain which reaches from the far West to the far East. A consideration of great importance to be looked into is the possibility of making a safe and regular winter crossing, without which this line would also be useless, as the great traffic will be done in that season of the year. Now, our opinion, and we have the opinion of one of the best engineers of the age, Col. Johnson, who surveyed the line from the Niagara river to the River Detroit, that the best and only safe crossing can be made at Sandwich. This, coming from so good an authority is sufficient in itself without further proof that Sandwich is the place, and can only be the terminus of the Southern Railway, being almost directly opposite the city of Detroit, where the Michigan railways all centre. The Southern Michigan having purchased ground for their depot just below the Central depot and directly opposite to Sandwich, at which it is intended that this one shall connect. We may therefore reasonably look forward to the permanent establishment of the Great Southern Railway depot at Sandwich, for there can be no doubt that it is the fittest place upon the Detroit frontier.

Destructive Fire in Toronto.

On Wednesday last, the Cabinet Factory of Jacques and Hay was destroyed by fire, and unfortunately there were seven lives lost and a number injured. The fire broke out while the men were at their work, and so rapidly did the flames spread that many were unable to leave the building, except by a fearful leap of fifty feet, from the top of the building. Every effort of the firemen to subdue the flames proved fruitless. The loss is estimated at thirty-five thousand pounds.

We find it announced in a supplement to the Canada Gazette, that Her Majesty has given the royal assent to the act to change the constitution of the Legislative Council, by rendering the same elective.

The July number of the Canadian Agriculturist has been received, and as usual contains a full supply of interesting and useful information to the farmer.

The "ST. LAWRENCE AND THE SAGUENAY" is the title of a new book of poems, by C. Sangster, Kingston.

The author has written a long and beautiful poem upon the two noble rivers from which the book takes its name. There could not be found a better subject upon which to write than these two noble and beautiful rivers, possessing, as they do, any variety of scenery both romantic and grand; and Mr. Sangster has certainly handled the subject in a manner that is creditable to himself and will delight those who are fond of poetry. The other poems are written with great taste. For sale at Mr. Joseph Miller's store, Sandwich.

Again we find upon our table that grateful little monthly, "The Canadian Naturalist and Geologist," by E. Billings, Esq., Ottawa, C.W., containing, as usual, a plentiful supply of useful and interesting knowledge.

H. Rowsell, of Toronto, is agent for Canada West.

Marine Disasters.

June 18.—The tug propeller Dorr, built for the Chicago Insurance Companies, while on her way from Detroit to Chicago, came in contact with the British propeller Oliver Cromwell on Saginaw Bay, and was so injured as to sink in thirty minutes. The crew were all saved and brought to Detroit by the Cromwell. She was a new tug and had been out but a short time. She had eight steam pumps on board.

June 26.—The propeller Potomac arrived at Detroit in tow of the propeller Edith, having broken one of her engines in Lake Huron. She was to be repaired, however, and proceed on her way to Buffalo.

June 22.—The schooner Arkansas, which went ashore at Muskegon last fall, and laid there all winter, was hauled off and while on her way to Chicago, was run into by some vessel, unknown, and badly damaged. Nearly the whole of her boatside was carried away, but she succeeded in getting into port.

June 22—The bark Great West got aground on the St. Clair Flats. There was a perfect jam of vessels on the flats, but the Great West is the only one that has not passed safely over.

June 28.—The steamer Sultana towed into Detroit. The Sultana had two or three holes in her bottom, so large that it took three steam pumps to pump her out. She goes into Clark's dry dock for repairs. Her owner is nearly all there is to be found of that she will be obliged to have an engine nearly, if not altogether, new.

Supposed Murder.

Edward Adolphus Longwood, has been arrested under the following circumstances: About a week ago the Chief of Police received a letter stating, that the prisoner had committed a murder in Ireland, some years ago on the Dublin and Kingston road. The murdered man's name was not known; but he was mentioned as having been a magistrate. On this information, the prisoner was arrested on Saturday and was brought up for examination before the Police Magistrate. He stated to his worship that it was his brother-in-law that wrote the letter to the Chief of Police—that he did it out of spite and that he showed the letter to him 24 hours before he sent it to the Chief. To corroborate this statement, he repeated the contents of the letter which was found to be correct. The prisoner further stated to his Worship that he was two years out from the old country where he served in the constabulary. He was in the Montreal Police, up to two months ago, when he came to Toronto. He had frequently been taunted with the crime he was now accused of, but being innocent he did not way any attention to it. His Worship said that he did not see any reason for keeping him in custody any longer, especially as his accuser was in fact anonymous. The Chief of Police suggested that constable Butler should be sent for, as he came out from the old country in the same vessel as the prisoner. On being examined, Butler deposed that he sailed in the same ship as the prisoner on the 13th June 1854. He did not see the prisoner or his companion until two days after the vessel put to sea. The prisoner admitted to him that he was a deserter.—Heard some talk about the murder then.—When the vessel arrived at her destination, the prisoner and his companion were put ashore in the night by the sailors. Hearing this testimony, his Worship considered the evidence was such as to warrant him in committing the prisoner for trial.

Important Arrest.

On Friday last the quiet of our Town was somewhat disturbed by the arrival of two officers from the United States, Joseph Brown, D'y city marshal of Cincinnati, and Mr. Hundley, gentleman deputised by the State of Mississippi, to apply to the Canadian Government for delivery of the person of Richard Standford Graves, alias Rich'd Metcalf House, on a charge of embezzling from the said State of Mississippi $250,000, in the year 1841, in money and State bonds. Mr. House has resided here for over ten years, and for the past three years filled the office of Justice of the Peace, and the visit of the above parties on such a mission occasioned a considerable excitement. Application was made to Wm. Davis D. C. L. through Messrs. Wilson & Osborne Solicitors for the commonwealth of the State of Mississippi in that behalf for the immediate arrest of Mr. H. and a warrant granted by William Salmon, Esq., J. P. Chairman of Quarter Sessions, and placed in the hands of Constable Pegg with the whole constabulary force—proceeded to the residence of Mr. House in the town, on making application at the door, his family denied his being at home, the officers remained around the premises during the night and at six in the morning again made application, when Mrs. H. stated that he was not from home, the officers proceeded to search the house, a trap door was found in the parlor covered with straw and overlaid with a carpet, and in the celler Mr. House was hidden, he was then arrested, and at 9 a. m. in a preliminary examination was put before Wm. Salmon Esq., and a bench of eight Magistrates; Messrs. Wilson & Osborne appeared on behalf of the State of M., Messrs. Foley & VanNorman for the Prisoner—after considerable argument holding the Ashburton treaty, abrogated our provincial statu s and the offence the prisoner was charged did not come within the meaning of the treaty.

Messrs. Bruen & Hundley in company with Wm. M. Wilson Esq., proceeded to Toronto and the matter was laid before Chief Justice Draper who at the prisoner was discharged, the C. J. at once issued a new warrant for the peremptory arrest of Mr. House, it arrived in town on Tuesday, and placed in the hands of constable Pegg, who with his usual activity and promptness singly arrested Mr. House a second time, at 8 o'clock the prisoner was removed from town in charge of two constables, and taken direct to Toronto, to Osgood Hall, the case came up for argument before Chief Justice Draper,—and so the matter rests.

P. S.—Since the foregoing was in t, pe, we are informed that owing to the Ashburton treaty not having the Provincial Statute, the Prisoner was discharged. — Conservative Standard.

Height of Meanness.

Among the many disgraceful acts which our pessent government have perpetrated, no one exceeds in abominable meanness the grant of $2,000 to its premier. It will be recollected that this gentleman (!) was appointed principal Commissioner to superintend the expenditure of £10,000 at the Great Exhibition. The sum was by no means too large. The want was a rare one.—It brought Canada out; and the comparatively young but sturdy colony exhibited manufactured articles and agricultural products which excelled those of the oldest nations of Europe. How did Tache perform this duty, we all know. How he expended the Provincial money, but few know. Indolent, incompetent—totally unfit for the position which he aspired to fill —instead of Canada being honored by his selection, it was disgraced. When appointed the Government stated that the Hon. Col. Tache required no payment for the services which he had volunteered to perform. He was independent—he was a gentleman—the descendant of a race famed for its love of chivalry, and possessing a mine, been sense of honor! Pooh! On his return, a large sum was paid him for what was termed expenses; and he accepted it. But still the chivalrous gentleman may not be content. A little before the adjournment, the government annexed to the Public Accounts an item of $2,000 for his services—the corrupt Administration was sufficiently degraded to place the gift in the estimates, and the high-souled, high-minded, and Hon. Col. Tache was sufficiently mean to take it.—Sentinel.

Arrival of the Canadian.

Quebec, July 15.

The screw steamer Canadian, from Liverpool, arrived here this forenoon with 180 passengers.

The Niagara arrived at Liverpool on the 29th of June.

Liverpool Cotton Market—A fair amount of business done at an an advance of 1-16d a 3d. No rates current at last reports.—Sales for 3 days 23,000 bales.

Breadstuff, Market—The weather continued highly favorable for agricultural labor, and the market consequently exhibited a dull tone and declining tendency. Wheat 24 a 3d lower than advices by the Africa, red being quoted by Richardson, Spence & Co. at 9s 6d; a 10s 6d; white 10s a 11s; flour declined 1s per bbl.—selling at 33s a 33s 9d for western canal; 35s 6d a 37s for Ohio; 34s a 35s for Philadelphia; 34s 6d a 35s 6d for Baltimore. Corn 1s per quarter lower. Quotations for all kinds 28s 6d.—Pork dull. Lard firm and sevree at 68s.

General News unimportant. There had been an outbreak at Badajoz, but quiet was restored.

In France the harvest is splendid, and has dissipated all fears of scarcity.

The Russians were fitting out an emigrant fleet at Cronstadt for the River Amoor

A letter from Athens says: During the present month a conference of disaffected powers will be held at London to settle the affairs of Greece.

FRANCE.—The only subject of interest is the protest of the Orleans Princess.

GREAT BRITAIN.—The American question had been before Parliament.

Mr. Moore moved in the House of Commons that the conduct of Her Majesty's government, and difficulties between them and United States on the question of enlistment, have not been entitled to the approbation of the House.

Brown and Hewitt, of Liverpool, and Chatham and Spooner, appealed to Mr. Moore to postpone his motion, whereupon the debate proceeded.

The Attorney General defended the government and said the United States despatches had not been such as might have been expected from a nation desirous of preserving friendly relations with England.

Mr. W. Phinney supported the motion, and contended that the British agents had deeply violated laws of the U. S. and of nations, Mr. Bulite declared England was dishonored by her attempts to seduce U. S. citizens from their allegiance. Sir Geo. Grey said the Government they could condemn the government after they had stopped the enlistment, even on British grounds, rather than give offence to the U. S. Sir J. Walsh thought by not dismissing Mr. Dallas the British government confessed they had done wrong.

Mr. Milner Gibson complained that Lord Clarendon's conduct was insulting towards the people of the United States, and that the people of America should be made aware that the British people did not support their minister therein. Mr. Gladstone contended that the good will of the United States and England was with the whole country. Solicitor General attacked Mr. Gladstone, and that the United States Government ought to have arrived at a different conclusion than what they did. Sir J. Packington eulogized Mr. Gladstone, and said the House dare not shrink from the discussion of this crisis of ordinary magnitude. Lord Palmerston replied at length, defending his conduct and denying that deception had been practised towards the United States or that their laws had been violated. The House then divided on the motion for censure and the government was sustained by a majority of 194.

The Steamship Indian, from Quebec arrived at Liverpool on the 2nd of July.

NEW YORK, July 15th.—Mr. Dayton's letter accepting the nomination for the Republican Vice Presidency is published.—He endorses the platform, and blames the South for the sectional issues that have been raised.

The U. S. frigate Potomac, Com. Paulding, from Key West July 6th arrived here to day.

Advices from Havana, July 8th, state that the flag ship of the Spanish war squadron had returned to Havana from Vera Cruz.—Senor Alvarez, the new minister from Spain, had met Comonfort and they held a friendly exan ination of the schedule of debts and credits said to exist between the two countries.—Comonfort agreed to pay the balance claimed after all the spoils and fraud claims of Santa Anna's officials were exchanged.—Peace is thus secured.

The sloop-of-war Saratoga was spoken July 5th off Portugal, bound for the Carribean Sea, all well.

WASHINGTON, July 15.—The Senate did nothing this morning.

In the House the Keith and Edmondson matter was discussed.

The jury in Herberts case are disagreed and were discontinued and a new trial commences to-morrow.

We learn from our late British papers that a testimonial has just been presented to that indefatigable Arctic navigator, Captain Sir Robert M'Clure, late of Her Majesty's discovery ship Investigator, by a number of officers of the royal navy, several among them the most distinguished in their profession, in admiration of his intrepidity and perseverance in penetrating through the Polar Ocean in search of Sir John Franklin. The testimonial consists of a winged figure of Victory standing upon a globe on the part of a globe representing the Polar Seas, and in the act of blowing a trumpet. It is carved in frosted silver, and stands on an ebony pedestal which bears an appropriate inscription commemorating the services of the gallant officer who was the object of the motives in which the testimonial originated.

MILITARY COLONISATION—PRINCE OF WALES RENFREWSHIRE REGIMENT OF MILITIA.—The petition to Her Majesty's Ministers adopted by the soldiers of this Regiment who wish to go to Canada, is now in course of signature. It is to be sent to Lord Elgin, late Governor General of Canada, to be presented. The petitioners say that they may be eligible for free passage to Australia, under the regulations of Her Majesty's Australian Government, in the same e as any other, of Her Majesty's subjects who are not liable to the exclusion and restrictions imposed by those regulations; but the petitioners have no desire to become grubbers of gold or herders of sheep or cattle in Australia. Their eyes are fixed on Canada. There they wish to become the tillers of the forest, the reclaimers of its soil, and, if necessary, the fighters of its foes, the protectors of its rights and liberties, the upholders of British sovereignty, and the repellers of aggression, from whatever quarter it may come."

WARLIKE PREPARATIONS AT WOOLWICH.—Orders are at present in circulation to enter an additional supply of good landing hands for the shipwright's department of Woolwich dockyard. The docks and basin occupied in fitting out the war vessels, which are of the most raised and formidable description, are in an unusually crowded state. The number of hands employed in completing the "Thunderbolt" amounts to 300. In fact, great activity is visible on board the whole of the gun and mortar boats, the number of hands engaged varying according to the amount of labor requisite.

ST. ANDREWS AND QUEBEC RAILROAD.—The projectors of this undertaking are making great exertions to prosecute the work with vigor during the summer. A communication from Julius Thompson, Esq., the Manager, in the last Provincialist, contains the following extract from a letter received from the Secretary of the company in England:

"We are progressing very favourably with the formation of our new Company, and I have the pleasure to inform you, that I have succeeded in obtaining the co-operation of Mr. Crawshay, Baily and Mr. Marshall, of Leeds. They have become Directors of the new Company, so that we have now in the Direction one of the greatest Irons masters, and one of the richest Commoners in England. Messrs. Baxter, Rose and Norton, have also consented to be the Solicitors."—New Brunswicker.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.—You can start from Brockville at noon, and in four hours you reach Montreal. The train leaves Montreal at five afternoon, and at ten, same night you are in Quebec. Or you may leave Brockville at eight, morning, and get to Montreal by two p. m. Twelve dollars between Quebec and Montreal was the fare in 1820, and the Frontenac charged $12 between Kingston and Toronto, slow work, too, it was, very.

MURDER AND ASSASSINATION.—The Port Huron Commercial says that on Friday, of week before last the body of a man was found in the St. Clair River, just above St. Clair village. The body appeared to have been in the water 6 or 8 days, and on the head marks of violence were discovered. From papers found in his pocket it was supposed that his name was Thomas Marshall.

From certain circumstances it was supposed by persons in this village that the body was that of Thomas Atkinson, a resident of Port Huron. He hah been missing since the preceeding Sunday, and was known to have had a memorandum book which had belonged to Marshall in his pocket. A number of his relatives and friends went to St. Clair on Tuesday last, had the body disinterred, and on examination satisfied themselves that it was the corpse of Atkinson. He was known to have a sum of money in his possession on the Sunday mentioned, for the purpose of making a payment on a piece of land, only three shillings cash was found on his person when taken from the river, which fact, in connection with bruises upon the head, leaves doubt that he was murdered.

Advices have been received at Washington from Texas, of the massacre of the mail drivers between Fort McKavitt and Fort Chadbourne, somewhere about the 1st of June. On Saturday the 8th, a party of Camanches went in Fort Chadbourne, when Captain Eastman, in command there, suspecting them to be the same party that killed the mail-riders, attacked them, killed 7 of them instantly, wounded several mortally, and some half a dozen escaped.

The Boston Journal says:—There are some few uneasy spirits who will regret, but the great body of the intelligent people of this country will rejoice, that Great Britain has been slow to take offence at the cavalier treatment which it has received at the hands of the American administration. The British ministry has exercised more forbearance than could have been reasonably anticipated in deciding not to dismiss Mr. Dallas, and now that we shall continue to have a representative at the Court of St. James, we may reasonably hope that pending difficulties which threaten the peace of the two nations will be happily adjusted. We have never anticipated a war with Great Britain as the result of existing differences, although in the delicate state of relations of the two governments we could not anticipate what a day might bring forth. The recent news from England will go far to relieve that uneasy feeling among the commercial classes which always attend a disturbance of friendly relations with a foreign nation, if it does not entirely re-establish confidence.

Arrival of the Niagara.

NEW YORK, July 15.

Four days later from Europe.
Political news unimportant.
Decline in Breadstuffs, &c.

The steamer Niagara from Liverpool the 15th inst; arrived at Halifax at 7. 3m this P. M.

In the Liverpool cotton market the sales of the week amounted to 80,000 bales, including 15,000 to speculators, and 13,000 to exporters.

BREADSTUFFS.—Prices were a shade lower. There was only a small speculative inquiry.

The weather continued favorable for harvesting

The decline of the week on wheat is 2d per bush.; on flour 1s per bbl. chiefly on lower grades; and on corn 1s per quarter.

Beef dull. Pork dull. Bacon firm and active. Holders of lard were demanding a further advance asking 67s.

Money market unchanged. Consols closed 96⅝ @ 95⅞. American securities generally were rather higher.

Further by the Niagara.

The London papers contain the following paragraph.

"Negotiations between England and the U. S. in regard to existing difficulties, were resumed on the 30th, under circumstances which justified the belief that matters are already in a fair condition towards the amicable adjustment of the points at issue."

It is believed Parliament prorogued on the 31st inst., and that no further party motions will be made this session.

The following is the only reference that has been made to America since the sailing of the Fulton. Mr Bailie asked Palmerston whether Mr Dallas, as representative to her Majesty's gov't. had free power to settle the Central American dispute, or whether he had any other powers than those of Mr. Buchanan. Palmerston said it was understood that Mr. Dallas had full power to discuss Central American affairs and Mr. Buchanan had none at all.

A bill has been introduced into the Commons to permit distilling from Rice.

The weather continued magnificent for harvest and another fortnight would secure farmers from any change in their prospects.

FRANCE.—Reports have been for some time current, that an unpleasantness existed between the Courts of France and Russia, and that Count Morris's departure for St. Petersburg was delayed in consequence.—The difficulty is probably arranged. A report of the corps Legislatif refusing to accord to the Emperor the power of granting pensions is published, it is respectful, but firm, and is considered the severest check Napoleon has met from his government.

The bill granting pensions to the Orleans princes was voted unanimously, although Count Montalsburt wrote a strong letter against it and the Duchess of Saxe Coburg indignantly refuses the money.

The Juvenile Count of Paris has written a letter repudiating the fusion.

The letters had created considerable sensation in Orleans circle.

The projected meeting between the Emperor of Austria and France is confirmed.

Accounts of the weather and crops thro'out the country even in the lately inundated districts are favorable. Harvesting had commenced in the South. The vineyards also look well.

ITALY.—Affairs in Parma, were becoming worse and an insurrection was feared.—The Clerical Journals of Turin say that France had addressed a note to Sardinia counselling moderation on the Italian question.

☞ The Steamer Northern Indiana, was burned yesterday on Lake Erie, and forty lives are reported to have been lost.

We stop the press to insert the above, nearly half being worked off.

Special Notices.

BILIOUS DISORDERS AND THEIR CURE.

There is nothing can form so useful and efficient an aperient as the Bile itself, which has been admirably adapted by nature to supply the bowels in a state of health with the requisite stimulus; but when this has from disease become either deficient in quantity, or deteriorated in quality, medicines are justly entitled to consideration as the most effectual means of restoring a healthy secretion. Sir Astley Cooper's Anti-Bilious and Family Aperient Pills are all powerful in removing the distressing symptoms attendant upon Bilious obstructions, disordered state of the stomach and bowels—such as pains in the head, dimness of sight, sickness, oppression of the chest, lowness of spirits, with great apprehension of imaginary danger, and fear of sudden death, disinclination for active employment, and various other symptoms, at all times troublesome, and not unfrequently dangerous. By taking two or three of Sir Astley Cooper's Pills, the symptoms above described are speedily removed, an unusual degree of serenity pervades the mind, the stomach and bowels are restored to their natural functions, and returning vigor is the result; by taking one, two or three pills at bedtime, and repeated as occasion may render necessary, they operate pleasantly, without producing that irritation common to most advertised and powerful medicines, which too often augment the maladies they were intended to remove.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—Be sure to ask for the Genuine Sir Astley Cooper's Pills, prepared in London and New York, by McPhail and Co., and see that their signature is on each box and on the directions. Without this mark of authenticity they are certainly spurious and an imposition.

Sold at 25 and 50 cents per box, and in Family boxes at $1 each. There is a great saving by purchasing the larger sizes.

For sale by Simpson and Dunspaugh, Druggists, Toronto; John M. Thornton, Dundas; Andrew Oliver Galt; A. H. Cook, Brantford, General Agents, by whom Country Druggists and Merchants will be supplied at London and New York prices.

MISSISSIPPI,

S. G. LANGLEY, Commander.

Leaves Buffalo, Wednesdays and Saturdays
" Detroit Tuesdays and Fridays.

These steamers are all new, of the largest class, being about two thousand tons each, commanded and officered throughout by men of large experience and capability, and fitted up and furnished for the convenience of passengers in a style of comfort and luxury, entirely unequalled, and are in all respects considered the most desirable steamers that float upon the waters of the United States.

For the transportation of freight, the line will surpass anything ever before offered to the public, having arrangements with parties between New York and Boston, and all points west of Buffalo to St. Louis, which will enable them to forward merchandise with greater despatch than has ever yet been attained.

Shippers of merchandise from the East, should mark packages to the care of C. L. SEYMOUR, Buffalo; merchandize from the West should be to the care of JOHN HOSMER, agent, Detroit.

CATHARTIC PILLS

OPERATE by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, and, by restoring their irregular action to health, correct, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first causes of disease. An extensive trial of their virtues, by Professors, Physicians, and Patients, has shown cures of dangerous diseases almost beyond belief, were they not substantiated by persons of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Their certificates are published in my American Almanac, which the Agents below named are pleased to furnish free to all inquiring.

Annexed we give Directions for their use in the complaints which they have been found to cure.

FOR COSTIVENESS.—Take one or two Pills, or such quantity as to gently move the bowels. Costiveness is frequently the aggravating cause of PILES, and the cure of one complaint is the cure of both. No person can feel well while under a costive habit of body. Hence it should be, as it can be, promptly relieved.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, which is sometimes the cause of Costiveness, and always uncomfortable, take mild doses—from one to four—to stimulate the stomach and liver into healthy action. They will do it, and the heartburn, bodyburn, and soulburn of dyspepsia will rapidly disappear. When it has gone, don't forget what cured you.

For a FOUL STOMACH, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take from four to eight Pills at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until activity and strength is restored to the system.

FOR NERVOUSNESS, SICK HEADACHE, NAUSEA, Pain in the Stomach, Back, or Side, take from four to eight pills on going to bed. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more the next day until they do. These complaints will be swept out from the system. Don't wear these and their kindred disorders because your stomach is foul.

FOR SCROFULA, ERYSIPELAS, and all Diseases of the Skin, take the Pills freely and frequently, to keep the bowels open. The eruptions will generally soon begin to diminish and disappear. Many dreadful ulcers and sores have been healed up by the purging and purifying effect of these Pills, and some disgusting diseases which seemed to saturate the whole system have completely yielded to their influence, leaving the sufferer in perfect health. Patients! your duty to society forbids that you should parade yourself around the world covered with pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores, and all or any of the unclean diseases of the skin, because your system wants cleansing.

To PURIFY THE BLOOD, they are the best medicine ever discovered. They should be taken freely and frequently, and the impurities which sow the seeds of incurable diseases will be swept out of the system like chaff before the wind. By this property they do as much good in preventing sickness as by the remarkable cures which they are making every where.

LIVER COMPLAINT, JAUNDICE, and all Bilious Affections arise from some derangement—either torpidity, congestion, or obstructions of the Liver. Torpidity and congestion vitiate the bile and render it unfit for digestion. This is disastrous to the health, and the constitution is frequently undermined by no other cause. Indigestion is the symptom. Obstruction of the duct which empties the bile into the stomach causes the bile to overflow into the blood. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternately costiveness and diarrhœa, prevails. Feverish symptoms, languor, low spirits, weariness, restlessness, and melancholy, with sometimes inability to sleep, and sometimes great drowsiness; sometimes there is severe pain in the side; the skin and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow; the stomach acid; the bowels sore to the touch; the whole system irritable, with a tendency to fever, which may turn to bilious fever, bilious colic, bilious diarrhœa, dysentery, &c. A medium dose of three or four Pills taken at night, followed by two or three in the morning, and repeated a few days, will remove the cause of all these troubles. It is wicked to suffer such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

RHEUMATISM, GOUT, and all Inflammatory Fevers are rapidly cured by the purifying effects of these Pills upon the blood and the stimulus which they afford to the vital principle of Life. For these and all kindred complaints they should be taken in mild doses, to move the bowels gently, but freely.

As a DINNER PILL, this is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has been made more effectual to the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

Care of Honeysuckles.

Mildew and blight come from the east, therefore honeysuckles should be sheltered from that aspect—for, as they rise and spread widely, they are not so manageable as a rosebush. A mass of luxuriant honeysuckles is beautiful to the eye and delicious in fragrance; but covered with mildew, it is a blackened and miserable object. Mildew fortunately don't make its appearance every spring; but once in four or five years, as a plague, to desolate the garden. A good deal may be raked away if taken off as soon as it spreads its cobwebs over these lovely flowers, but it should be done without delay; or its ravages will have become so great as to render any preventive operation almost useless.

To Preserve Herbs.—All kinds of herbs should be gathered on a dry day, just before or while in blossom—Tie them in bundles, and suspend them in a dry airy place with the blossoms down wards. When perfectly dry, wrap the medicinal ones in paper, and keep them from the air. Pick off the leaves of those which are to be used in cooking, pound and sift them fine, and keep the powder in bottles corked up tight.

White Cup-Cake.—Take 4 cups of flour 2 of sugar, 1 of butter, 1 of sour cream or milk nutmeg, cinnamon or lemon, with five beaten eggs, a teaspoonful of saleratus; bake in cups or tins twenty five minutes.

A small piece of paper or linen moistened with spirits of turpentine, and put into a bureau or wardrobe for a single day, two or three times a year, is sufficient preventative against moths.

Carpets last longest by being often shaken, preventing the dirt under and in them from grinding out the texture; and by being swept too frequently.

Currant Dumplings.—Pick and wash a pound or currants, dry them, and lay them on a plate before the fire. Chop a pound of suet very small and put it into eight spoonfuls of flour, with two teaspoonfuls of salt and three of ginger; now add the currants, and mix all well to gether; then beat up four eggs with a pint of milk, add this by degrees to the other ingredients, and make it into a light paste; roll it up into balls as large as a turkey's egg, with a little flour; flatten them a little and put them into boiling water; move them gently, that they may not stick together. Half an hour will boil them.—Germantown Telegraph.

Soil for Fruit Trees.—Fine fruit can only be grown upon soil naturally or artificially dry and firm. A wet soil, or a very peaty one never produces fine fruit. Sandy soils, gravelly soils, or clayey soils, as well as what are called loamy soils, can all be made to grow fine fruit, if properly cultivated, provided the subsoil is porous enough to permit the water to escape rapidly downward a sufficient depth to allow the roots of trees at least three feet of soil which is never filled with stagnant moisture—and the greater the depth of perfectly drained soil, the greater the certainty of success.

To cultivate the sensibilities much, and a taste for romance, at an early age, to the neglect of more solid acquirements, is about as wise as to sow arable ground with poppies. In spring it will be prematurely beautiful; in autumn everything bleak and bare; and there will be but a drossy residum in place of beautiful and useful ment, to be reaped from the fruit of the soil.

To render one happy, a clear conscience, a cheerful disposition and a kind, loving merciful spirit, are worth more than all things else, and yet the the majority of men and women are daily sacrificing all these jewels in pursuit of some glittering toy—some false light, which shines only to bewilder, and dazzles to blind!

A dying Irishman was asked by his confessor if he was ready to renounce the devil and all his works. "Oh, your honor," said Pat—don't ask me that; I'm going into a strange country, and I don't want to make myself enemies.

Colored Eloquence.—"My bradders" said a waggish colored man to a crowd, "in all dese yere hard-ship and troubles, dar is one place you can always find sympathy.—" Whar! whar!" shouted several. "In de dictionary," he replied, rolling his eyes skyward.

The editor of an exchange paper says, he never saw but one ghost, and that was the ghost of a sinner who died without paying for his paper. "'Twas terrible to look upon!—the ghost in Hamlet was not a circumstance!"

The Cleveland Herald says that counters feit 10's on the Commercial Bank, Midland District, Canada, are in circulation here.—They may be described as being darker than the genuine; vignette, winged figure of Mercury scattering coin from a Cornucopia; figure 10 on either side in a scroll; shield in a circle on right lower corner; rose, shamrock and thistle on left end, with figure 10 enwreathed; signitures good.

The following are the dimensions of some of the largest steamers in the world:—The Great Western 236 feet long, 25 broad; Great Britain 322 feet long, 51 feet broad; Himalaya, 350 feet long, 43 broad; the Persia, 370 feet long, 45 broad; the Adriatic 355 feet long, 50 feet broad; the Vanderbilt, 355 feet long, 45 feet broad. The Great Eastern is more than twice the size of the largest of these.

Iowa.—There must be "tall living" in Iowa. A friend writes from there, that going out a few days since a short distance from home, he found a six barrelled revolver, a hunting knife, a pair of boots, and the bodies of eight wolves laying beside them, indicating that some person had shot six with his revolver, destroyed two with his knife, and then became a victim to the remainder.

Straw matting should be cleaned with a large coarse cloth, dipped in salt and water and carefully wiped dry. This salt prevents the matting from turning yellow.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,
AND JOURNAL OF SUBURBAN ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the United States.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced. The growing interest with which the visiting generation view the science of Horticulture, renders such a Journal as "The Illustrated Horticulturist" imperatively necessary to the progress of Rural affairs.

Rural Architecture forms one of the principal features; each number contains from two to four engravings of model cottages, from designs furnished by skilful architects. Space is also assigned to the tasteful art of Landscape Gardening, engraved plans of gardens in every style, and adapted to the peculiarities of different orders of architecture, beautifies the work.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and to all who can boast the sovereignty of a square rood of tillable earth, "The Illustrated Horticulturist and Journal of Suburban Art" will prove an invaluable companion. The extraordinary low price at which it is afforded, together with its really superior execution, both in regard to typography and editorial ability, must make it the most popular work of the kind in America.

"The Illustrated Horticulturist" is printed on the finest quality of pearl surfaced paper, manufactured expressly. It is issued regularly the first of each month, commencing with July, 1855. The following gentlemen, eminent for their ability in the science of Horticulture, are engaged to conduct the Editorial department: H. P. KNIGHT, JAMES SCOWDEN and D. W. RAY.

TERMS: Two Dollars per annum, payable invariably in advance; a liberal discount to the Trade, Postmasters, and getters-up of Clubs.

Advertisements inserted at the rate of Ten Dollars per page.

N.B.—Newspapers inserting the above prospectus, and drawing attention editorially to the same, will be forwarded the ILLUSTRATED HORTICULTURIST for one year, a copy containing the advertisement should be sent in all cases to ensure attention.

NEW VOLUME OF THE
AGRICULTURIST

SUBSCRIPTION REDUCED FROM 25 TO 50 PER CENT.

The Canadian Agriculturist

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by its present proprietor in 1848, and is now well known to the leading farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us. The undersigned have made arrangements with the proprietor to publish the next, and probably succeeding volumes, and have resolved to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE
Illustrated with Engravings

Such as Farm Implements, Portraits of Animals, designs of Farm Buildings, New Inventions, &c., &c., interesting to the Farmer, and also portraits of some of the Most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM MACDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the practice of Agriculture near this city. The active promoter of the various improvements made in our Agricultural Exhibitions since 1847, and having also been connected with this Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and writings in behalf of Canadian Agriculture are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to the columns as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to extend the correspondence on subjects of a practical kind.

THE AGRICULTURIST IS NOT LIABLE TO CUSTOM DUTY.

Memories of the Heart.

BY WINNY WOODBINE.

I sit in the deepening twilight,
While the stars twinkle faint in the sky,
And sadly repeat thy name over,
When I think that none others are nigh.
Then memory with magical power,
Brings back to my weary-worn heart;
Those eyes when so strangely we met,
So happily met—but to part.

Dost remember the clasp of the hands,
That spoke in a language so sweet;
And the glances that thrilled our hearts through,
When our eyes in confusion would meet?
And the low-breathed tones of thy voice,
As it whispered sweet words in mine ear—
'Tis brought by bright memory all,
Till again its soft music I hear.

'Tis many long days since we parted,
And blossoms have faded and died;
Now Spring, with her birds and her flowers,
Is roaming again the hill-side.
When the Summer in all its bright beauty,
And its soft, dreamy hours, shall come,
We will meet 'neath the blue-beaming skies,
And ne'er again far shall thou roam.

Doing a Dandy.

As the cars were about leaving a village in the interior of Massachusetts, not a long time since, a rather gawkey specimen of humanity in the form of a Yorsonter, was seen making big tracks for the depot, which he reached just in time to jump aboard the train as it departed. After for a moment drawing breath which he had lost in the race, Jonathan walked boldly into one of the cars, containing some twenty or thirty passengers, and pushing on with long, unginny strides, seated himself by the stove, and after taking a long stare at the passengers around, commenced warming himself.

In the same car was a young man belonging to that class generally known as 'city dandies.' His person was small and thin, yet he was dressed in the extreme of fashion; his upper lip, as well as a portion of his face, was covered with sandy colored hair, while a stiff starched collar reached nearly to the top of his head. Indeed he had a most excruciating air, and whenever he spoke, his words were peculiarly mincing.

The dandy sat looking listlessly out at the window, as Jonathan entered the cars. Turning around and observing the character of the intruder, he seemed convinced that there was a rare opportunity for fun, which he determined not to let pass, and accordingly, Jonathan found himself the subject of the dandy's wit. But he calmly bore the taunts and jeers of the dandy, and seemed in fact unconscious of what was going on, until the latter nearly exhausted his fountain of blackguardism, when Jonathan for the first time, looked towards the seat occupied by the dandy. As his eye fell on that personage, he looked surprised—his face grew radiant, and relaxing his bronze features into a sort of grin, he rose and strode across the car towards him.

"Wall, I swow!" commenced the Vermonter, as he grasped the dandy's skinny hand within his own, and gave it a tremendous squeeze, "who'd a thought it! didn't hardly know you at first, I say, old feller, how d'ye do? I'm really glad to see ye."

Here a shriek from the dandy, followed by a volley of curses, as he drew his almost crushed hand from the grasp, caused Jonathan to halt suddenly in his exclamation, and commenced apologizing for his rudeness:

"I swow, I didn't mean to hurt your hand, but it does seem good to meet old acquaintances, specially among strangers: p'raps though, you don't remember me, but I do you, and that's jist as well."

"What do you mean you impudent pup?" exclaimed the dandy, his sallow face crimsoned with anger.

"Oh, Mister, there's no use in flashing up, you can't deny it.'

"Deny what? demanded the dandy emphatically.

"I say Mister, continued Jonathan, not heeding the interruption, and with a knowing wink of the eye, 'how long since you got out?'

"Do you mean to insult a gentleman?" shouted the dandy, springing from his seat.

"Be quiet friend," said Jonathan, and then continued, 'didn't they use you well there—give you good fodder, eh? or was it your cage large enough?'

"Begone, you scoundrel!" shouted the dandy huskily.

"I say, Mister, have you got that ring off your neck yet?" continued Jonathan, seizing hold of the stiffly starched collar of the other with such force as to start it from its foundation, and cause it to hang by one corner down the dandy's back.

This was too much, the dandy could not endure it. Pale and trembling with anger, he attempted to speak, but words failed him.

"Look 'ere friends," said Jonathan, addressing the amazed passengers, while he took the dandy by the arm and turned him round two or three times, so as to expose him to their view, 'p'raps you don't know it, but this is the very Qurang Outang that was exhibited at the managerie that came up to Vermont a month ago."

The roars of laughter that rang through the cars at this announcement were really alarming; every one was seized with consternation, and the conductor came into the car to see what was the matter. At the next station the dandy left the train, with bitter curses falling from his lips.

Relaxations of Great Men.

It is interesting to note the amusements of learned and great men of present and past times. Their predilections, their private tastes, their amusements, their domestic habits, their relaxations—in a word all that satisfies them, amuses them—are capable of furnishing useful lessons to our race; for a man's manners and habits help us to a knowledge of him, and are the best evidence of his real character.

Many great men have delighted in passing the hours of relaxation in the company of children. This betokens a pure and loving nature. Richter says the man is to be shunned who does not love the society of children. Henry IV. was passionately fond of them, and delighted in their gambols and little caprices. One day, when crawling round his room on all fours, on his hands and knees, with the Dauphin on his back, and the other children around him urging the King to gallop in imitation of a horse, an ambassador suddenly entered and surprised the royal family in the midst of their fun. Henry, without rising to his feet, asked,

"Have you any children, Mr. Ambassador?"

'Yes, sir.'

'In this case I proceed with the sport,' replied the king.

Duke of Wellington was extremely fond of children, and was a general favorite with them. He enjoyed their gambols, took part in them, and was constantly presenting them with little keepsakes and presents.

Leibnitz used to pass months together in his study, engaged with his laborious investigations. At such times his only relaxation consisted in collecting about him in his study children of both sexes, whom he watched, and sometimes he took part in their frolics. Seated in his easy chair, he delighted to observe their lively movements, to listen to their conversation, and to observe their several dispositions; and when his soul had sufficiently enjoyed the innocent spectacle, he would dismiss the children with sweetmeats, and return to his studies with renewed energy.

Louis Racine says of his father that he took part in all the children's sports. I remember a procession we once had,' says he in his memoirs, 'in which my sisters played the part of the clergy, I was the curate, and the author of Athalie, singing in chorus with us, carried the cross.'

Napoleon like Wellington, was fond of children. He used to take the infant King of Rome in his arms, and standing in front of a mirror with him, there made the oddest grimaces in the glass. At breakfast he would take the child upon his knee, dip his finger in the sauce, and daub his face with it; the child's goodness scolded, the Emperor laughed, and the child almost always pleased, appeared to delight in the rough caresses of his father. Those who on such occasions had a favor to solicit from the Emperor, were almost sure to be favourably received.

Eighteen Things.

In which young people render themselves very impolite.

1. Loud laughter.
2. Reading when others are talking.
3. Cutting finger nails in company.
4. Leaving meeting before it is closed.
5. Whispering in meeting.
6. Gazing at strangers.
7. Leaving a stranger without a seat.
8. A want of experience for superiors.
9. Reading aloud in company without being asked.
10. Receiving a present without some manifestation of gratitude.
11. Making yourself the topic of conversation.
12. Laug'ing at the mistakes of others.
13. Joking in company.
14. Correcting older persons than yourself, especially parents.
15. To commence talking before others are through.
16. Answering questions when put to others
17. Commencing to eat as soon as you get to the table. And—
18. In not listening to what one is saying in company—unless you desire to show open contempt for the speaker. A well bred person will not make one observation whilst another of the company is addressing himself to it.

Miscellany.

PRIZE CANADIAN BLANKETS.—We were yesterday shewn some blankets and cloths, manufactured at the Wentworth Woollen Works, Dundas, for the purpose of being sent to the Sydenham Crystal Palace, for permanent exhibition. These goods, in consequence of the prize medal having been obtained at the World's Exhibition for similar samples, were made expressly to the order of the Canadian Commissioner Mr. Perry, of Montreal, and are now on their way to England. The goods are not only of a superior description, but will cast into the shade all other goods of the kind to be exhibited. We are informed by competent judges, that the blankets are, if anything, superior to the celebrated sample which carried off the prize in 1851. Canada and especially this section of it, may justly feel proud of the honor conferred by the exhibition of the goods manufactured at the Wentworth Woollen Works. The establishment is now in the hands of an enterprising and energetic Company, and the improvements recently effected by them, must contribute materially to the facilities for carrying on this important branch of mechanical industry. We feel assured that the goods now forwarded for permanent exhibition will tend greatly to enhance the estimate of the people of England with regard to the manufactures, resources, and capabilities of Canada.—Hamilton Spectator.

ONE OR THE OTHER.—A stout bustling little woman came into the vestry of a church to see the clergyman, one morning, after the reading of the prayers. She held in her arms a sturdy specimen of manhood in embryo, who was crying lustily.

"Please, sir," said she with a courtsey, "will you be so kind as to tell me whether this child is a seraphim or cherubim?"

"Young woman" said the learned divine, "why do you joke with the authorised prayer of your church?"

"Please, sir, I ain't joking—only I want to know whether my son Augustus is a seraphim or a cherubim."

"Neither, woman—neither! How can you ask?"

Oh! but I know he is one or the other," said she, "because you said this morning the cherubim and seraphim 'continually do cry,' and my son is always at it."

A MAN HANGING HIMSELF IN HIS SLEEP.—Last night, after all the good people of the city and the "rest of mankind" had retired to rest, a German by the name of George Haynes, on Morgan county, stopping at Walter's Hotel, on Marietta street, rose from his couch and attempted to crawl out of a second story window in which he succeeded admirably—having got himself entirely through, and was about to fall to the hard pavement where his brains would have been dashed out, his foot accidentally caught between the window sash and casing thus waking him. With one foot and one hand he hung suspended until, by his cries, he brought assistance. Mr. H. weighs over two hundred pounds and consequently would have made quite an impression on the brick pavement, had he succeeded in this somambulistic enterprise.—Zanesville Aurora.

The Boston Chronicle is informed by a gentleman of high respectability and intelligence who has resided for several years in Missouri, that when Thompson delivered to the Border Ruffians 300 muskets and two brass cannon from the United States Arsenal at Liberty, our informant asked him if he was not afraid he would get into difficulty with the government at Washington. He replied, no; he had telegraphed to Pierce and it was all right.—Tribune.

THE FATE OF SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.—The Gazette contains an Admiralty notice declaring Dr. Jas. Rae and his companions entitled to the reward of £10,000 offered to those who should first ascertain the fate of the expedition under Sir John Franklin.

During a recent thunder storm at Dayton, Ohio, the lightning "dropped off" from the telegraph wires at two different points, making a report like the explosion of a Chinese cracker and sending off a shower of sparks.

Empty brandy barrels, bearing a good brand every high in the New York market even fetching $8 and $10 a piece. And no wonder. For poor whiskey when carefully doctored and packed in a branded barrel, sells readily at the prices of the best Cognac. Old judges of liquor smack their chops over it, look wise, and declare that nothing purer ever came out of France.—Montreal paper.

THE GERMAN LEGION FOR CANADA.—On Saturday morning, an interesting scene took place on the arrival and embarkation of as portion of the German Legion, 3rd Jagars or rifles, who have volunteer d their services for Canada. It may be premised that the men are young, able-looking, and of a touter build than the general run of Germans whom we see passing through the port on their way to America. The draft of men in question arrived (from Devonport) at Linestreet station, by the mail train, at four o'clock. It consisted of 250 men, the officers in command being Major Francis Weiss, Captain Carstenson, and Lieutenant Rohrer. Captain Addison is in charge of the expedition on the part of the government.—Liverpool Times.

The city of Paris has been paying for three years an indemnity to the bakers in order to keep the price of bread at a certain fixed rate. The amount thus paid by the city to bakers during this period is 31,000,000 francs—a little more than ten millions of dollars. Thus the poor have been kept from grumbling.

A CROWD OF CASUALTIES.—These few days past have been fruitful of casualties.—On Thursday, a colored child of two years of age, whose parents resided on Bell's property, near the depot, at some unobserved moment, fell into a well and was drowned. Another child, son of William Hilts, who is absent at Owen Sound, fell from a high fence, headforemost, and was so much hurt as to be for some time supposed dead. A man in the Caledonia settlement was struck with coup de soleil on Wednesday, and died very shortly after. Another, a far more serious casualty, occurred in the death of a woman who expired suddenly. From the absence of the Coroner we were not able to obtain particulars of the inquest when we went to press.

ACCIDENT TO THE PRINCESS ROYAL.—We are sorry to hear that the Princess Royal has sustained some injury from an accident which occurred to her Royal Highness on Tuesday last. The Princess was engaged about midday in the boudoir, and was in the act of lighting a wax taper when a spark ignited the sleeve of a gauze dress worn by her Royal Highness. The flame spread rapidly, and in an instant the whole sleeve from the wrist to the shoulder was in a blaze. Her Royal Highness manifested remarkable presence of mind under the trying circumstances, and succeeded in extinguishing the flames before they had communicated with the body of the dress. The Princess's arm was much burnt, and Her Royal Highness has since been confined to the Palace, and was prevented by the circumstances from accompanying the Queen to Grosvernor-house on Thursday evening.

ANOTHER COLLISION.—Propeller Nile and Schoone Sardis Burchard came in collision, between here and Point Abino on Tuesday night. The Schooner had her head gear carried away, but sustained no serious damage. The Propeller, which was bound for Chicago, proceeded on her voyage, and probably received but slight damage. The Burchard was bound in with a cargo of lumber.—Buffalo Express.

POLICE AT SUSPENSION BRIDGE.—The Great Western Railway Company have taken hold of Police matters at the Niagara Suspension Bridge, and are determined to put a stop to pocket-picking and swindling at that point. They have employed two Detroit policeman to remain at the Bridge and look after the rogues who post themselves there to plunder travellers.

PEDESTRIANISM EXTRAORDINARY.—In a late number of Bell's Life in London, Richard Manks, of Warwickshire, offers to run any man in the world 30 miles or upwards for £25 a side, or he will run or walk any man ten miles, each at one start, for £25 a side, or will take £50 to £25 that he runs eleven miles in one hour, or twenty-one miles in two hours, and thirty miles in three hours; either of these matches to come off on a turnpike road or an enclosed ground. Or Manks will take £100 to £50 that he will run 100 miles in thirteen hours, or £110 to £50 the goes 1000 miles on foot in eight days and nights.

RATS.—A good rat trap may be made by filling a smooth kettle to within six inches of the top with water, and covering the surface with chaff. The first chap who gets in makes a stir because he cannot get out; and the rest coming to see what the matter is, share the same fate.

A lamb of the law, in passing a chap engaged in posting bills, addressed him thus: "Here you William." "My name is not William!" Ah, I thought your name was William, as I have heard them call you Bill Sticker.

The Whig states that the Kingston City Council has voted £750 in aid of the Building Fund of the Local Committee of the Provincial Shows. It was carried by a majority of one. The Citizens of Kingston will now possess a Glass Building that will be both a credit and an ornament to the City; for the property will be vested in the Frontenac Agricultural Society, the Subscribers to that Society are mostly citizens of Kingston. The same paper adds that the Leeds Agricultural Society at their last meeting, voted the sum of three hundred dollars in aid of the Glass Building on the Show Grounds. It is expected that other Agricultural Societies in the vicinity will follow the same laudable example.

There was a great boat race at Halifax, N. S., on Thursday the 10th ult, at which the greatest speed on record was made by a Halifax row-boat owned by James Pryor, which made five mile in twenty-eight minutes, beating the St. John boat ten lengths. Col. E. J. Young, who laid a wager $500 that he could row a boat from Philadelphia to Cape May and back, within four days accomplished the distance (200 miles) in one hour and forty-nine minutes less than the required time.—Niagara Mail.

"The people of Eaton Rapids," says the Detroit Advertiser, "have experienced much annyance for some days past, to cause pieces of the fish dying in the river.—On Monday and Tuesday, as many as twenty barrels of dead fish, which were creating an intolerable nuisance, were removed, but the steam filled up with them nearly as fast as they were taken off. Below the dam, the river was so clogged up by them, that it was difficult to push a canoe through them. The mortality reached everything living in the water, such as lizards, frogs, crawfish, &c. We have heard no rational account of this circumstance, though it is perfectly well known.

Habit in a child is at first like a spider's web—if neglected, it becomes a thread or twine; next a cord or rope; finally a cable, and who can break it!

A JUVENILE HERO.—Some few days ago as a gentleman in a buggy was coming over the Cataraqui Bridge, he took up a small boy, belonging to the Ninth Regiment, it raining heavily at the time Seeing a medal on the boy's breast, al most as big as the lad himself, he asked him where and how he got it. "At the taking of Sebastopol," was the ready answer; and I mean to get its fellow soon." "Indeed," said the gentleman. "Yes indeed," rejoined the boy, "we are sure to have a war with the Yankees, and the way I'll walk into those fellows will soon get me another medal." "Did you ever see a Yankee?—he's a tall chap, seven feet high, able to eat you up, and jump over you into the bargain; what could you do with him?" "Couldn't I eat at him as he came down!" replied the small warrior. So putting the boy down at the barrack gate, the gentleman drove away, well satisfied that British supremacy in Canada was safe for the period of the young soldier's servitude.—Kingston Whig.

"Pat you have dated your letter a week ahead—it is not so late in the month by a week." "Och, boy and indade it is me that is wanting sweet Kathleen to get it in advance of the male: sure, I'll not care if she gets it three days before it is written."

We believe ourselves authorised in stating that whenever the separation of the county of Victoria from that of Peterborough shall be completed, Mr. Vankoughnet will be a candidate for its due representation in Parliament.—Coburg Star.

AN ORIGINAL PLAN TO OBTAIN SUSCRIBERS.—By the last number of the Reformer, published at Napanee, C. W., we learn that the proprietor, for the purpose, of increasing the circulation of his paper, has made arrangements with a Daguerrean artist in that town, to take a spendid portrait, in a case, of every one of his subscribers who pays the sum of $2 in advance. This plan is certainly original, and we imagine that if the people in that neighborhood are fond of "seeing themselves as others see them," that the artist will have enough work to do for some time to come.

An address has been presented to the Hon. G. S. Boulton, of Cobourg, by a public meeting for his opposition in the Legislative Council to the £50,000 Quebec grant.

PERFORATED OR SOLID BRICK.—Some experiments have lately been made on the comparative sustaining strength of patent perforated bricks of the ordinary kind.—In each case, a pier of four courses of bricks to be tested, were built in Roman cement, on the table of a powerful hydraulic press, and allowed at least twenty four hours to set. A light scale board was suspended to the safety valve lever of the press, on which there were placed successive weights until the pier of bricks on the table of the press was crushed. The number of weights was increased a quarter of a pound at a time—being equivalent to an increasement of ten tons, upon the press—commencing at thirty tons this starting point being effected to the united weights of the lever and scale board.—The pumps were working very slowly to eliminate the concussion produced otherwise by the rush of the water. The first experiment was made with good ordinary brick in a pier of 18 inches square built in four courses. This showed symptoms of failing with 110 tons and was crushed with 150.. A pier of the same dimensions of perforated bricks began to crack with 270 tons, and was crushed with 350.

A countryman being a witness in a court of justice, was asked if he was born in wedlock, to which he replied, "Noa, zur, I was born in Devonshire."

BATES' THRASH AU SORT.—We understand that the fortunate drawer of the first prize is Mr James Sharing, Grocer, of Montreal. Mr David Donnell, Oswego, drew the second prize. The drawer of the third prize is not yet known. Mr James Campbell, of Angusta, drew the fourth prize. Mr Bates, we understand, purchased the Grist Mill from Mr Shaw, Jun. His friend will be glad to hear of this arrangement.—Brockville Recorder.

RECOVERY OF PERSONS APPARENTLY DROWNED.—Often when persons are apparently drowned the vital spark has not really fled, and by judicious management they may be recovered. At this season of the year, when many lives are lost while bathing, the means of restoring persons apparently drowned, should be known by every one. The following are the principal directions, published under the authority of the Massachusetts humane Society:

"Convey the body to the nearest house with raised head. Strip and rub dry. Wrap in blankets. To inflate the lungs by closing the nostrils with thumb and finger, blowing into the mouth forcibly; then pressing with the hand on the chest. Again blow in the mouth and press on the chest, and so on ten minutes, or until he breathes. Keep the body warm, extremities also. Continue rubbing—do not give up so long as there is any chance of success."

AFFECTING CASE.—The Dayton Gazette tells an affecting story of a farmer who, while selling a load of wheat at a dollar a bushal in that city, burst into tears. The owner of the mill was touched, and kindly inquired the cause of his grief. "Sympathy" was too much for him, and bursting into a tremendous "boo hoo," he replied: "My son John could have got a dollar and seventy five cents a bushel for this very wheat two months ago!"

Mortality in War.

The following statistics of the losses of the British army during the Crimean and Peninsular Wars are copied from the United Service Gazette. The improvements in firearms do not appear to have occasioned the destruction that was anticipated, the casualties being nearly balanced. There is, however, a marked increase in the average of a number of officers killed in the Crimean war, though not in the men.

The numbers of non-commissioned and commissioned officers to each 1,000 rank and file in the British army may be estimated at 72 and 40 respectively. The proportion of the wounded officers who die from the injuries they have received is considerably less than that which obtains among the private men; for out of 1,973 officers (more than two-fifths of the total number wounded from 1793 to 1815,) only 164 died, being very nearly one in 12. The difference in favor of the officers is, no doubt, due to the greater amount of comfort and attention which they are generally able to secure.

At the siege of Gibraltar only one officer died out of 25 wounded, and out of 117 wounded at the battle of Toulouse only 3 died. In both these cases the wounded were able to find better accommodation than can be the case after a battle fought in an ordinary campaign.

At Gibraltar the proportion of deaths among the private men was reduced from 1 in 8 to 1 in 10. 101 having died out of 1,083 wounded.

It may be estimated that from 1793 to 1815, the number of recruits raised for British regiments was 519,040, the militia and colonial regiments 198,810, making a total of 717,670, besides 30,000 foreign troops temporarily employed,—to those being added the effective force on the 1st of January 1793, 45,440 men, the total number employed during these years will be 793,110. Of these 193,166 died, 229,141 were discharged, 20,000 taken prisoners, and 113,273 deserted, leaving an effective force of 211,276 on the 31st of December, 1816.

From a comparison of the mortality of the Army and Navy during war, it appears that the man who entered the army, from 1793 to 1815, ran between three and four times, if an officer, the risk of injury in battle that was encountered by one who entered the navy, and that the general chance of death in action to the one was double that of the other. When the soldier was ordered on service abroad, the risk became three times as great to the private, and nearly four times as great to the officers —while to those engaged in actual hostilities, it was respectively 17 and 12 times that of the sailor, the whole navy being considered on active service in time of war.

These ratios, however, would be greatly lessened if we were to include in our estimate the danger from shipwreck, which made the seaman's risk of death from the casualties of the service three times that of death in battle.

A fleet of 20 sail of the line may be considered as equivalent to an army of 120,000 men; and a single battle on land has been more destructive to life than 20 years of combat at sea.

During the Peninsular war, from 1808 to 1813, the average number of sick in each 1,000 was 209 in the British army; in the French army of Spain, 180; and in the French army of Portugal, 145.

It appears that on the 30th of October, 1854, there were 6,776 sick and wounded out of 34,642, which is at the rate of 185 in 1,000. Of these 328 only were with the army, and deducting these and the 1,539 who were wounded at the Alma, we have 4,910 sick at Varna; and the total strength was about 34,000, we have 140 out of 1,000 in hospital before active hostilities took place.

During the time from the landing in Turkey to the 6th of September, 1854, the mortality, which arose from disease alone, was at the annual rate of 77 per 1,000 during the five months from the 6th of September, 1854, to the 15th of February, 1855, it was equivalent to an annual mortality of 198 per 1,000 from casualties in action, and 369 per 1,000 from disease, making a total mortality of 499 per 1,000 per annum.

Of 1,000 deaths in the hospital at Scutari, 575 were caused by diarrhœa and dysentery, 173 by fever, and 55 by wounds; in the Peninsular the respective proportions were 20, 60, and 201.

Of 19 great battles of which details had been produced, only 4 were fought by British armies unassisted by allies of other nations, so that it is necessary to state separately the losses sustained by the British only and by the British and Allies together.

It appears that in these 19 battles an aggregate British force of 438,205 officers and men were engaged; that of these 49,281 were either killed or wounded, and that of these again 14,217 (nearly 30 per cent) died of the injuries they received—so that the casualties averaged 114 and the mortality 33 for every 1,000 men engaged.

The lowest ratio of casualties in these 19 battles is that of the battle of Busaco, 22 per 1,000; the highest loss for the whole force is at New Orleans, where the loss in killed and wounded on the side of the British was 317 in 1,000.

At Albuera, though the casualties of the British and their allies were only 376 per 1,000, those of the British alone amounted to 395 per 1,000.

A subject to which hardly sufficient attention appears to have been paid is the relative efficiency of different weapons.

It appears from a return furnished by the surgeons of the Scotch Fusilier Guards, that of that regiment wounded at the battle of Inkerman, 7 were wounded by the bayonet and 79 by gunshot.

Now it has been confidently and repeatedly asserted that this battle was won by the bayonet; and in the Russian official account of the battle it is called an embittered bayonet contest, and it is stated that their troops had challenged and routed the well fed powerful British troops with what the latter considered their own peculiar weapon. Yet the Brigade of Guards was more constantly and closely engaged in this action than any other portion of the army; for, out of 2,382 casualties suffered by 26 battalions, 504 were borne by the three battalions of Guards, so that it is not probable that the proportion of bayonet wounds was greater in any other regiment than that mentioned above,—viz., 7 in 140, —about 58 in 1,000.

Again, at the battle of Balaklava the heavy brigade was opposed by cavalry, and therefore, most of the wounds which they received were made by lances and sabres. Of 106 casualties among them 9 were fatal; whereas of the 281 among the light brigade, who suffered from artillery as well as from hand-to-hand fighting, 160 were fatal, or more than half the ordinary proportion being 1 death in 5 casualties.

The total amount of killed and wounded of the British forces in the Crimea, from the 10th of September, 1854, to the 8th of September, 1855 was 13,880, of which 4,569 arose from siege duties, 4,490 from assaults, and 4,919 from battles.

The ratios of death among the wounded officers appears to have been nearly the same in 1793-1815 and in the Crimean campaign; but the proportion returned has declined very considerably, being 164 officers killed to 836 wounded in the former period, and 233 to 797 in the latter.

The proportion of killed among the private men was nearly the same in both wars being 102 in 1,000 in the former and 190 to 1,000 in the latter.

The loss sustained by the Russians during the siege is not known to us; but it appears that on the 17th and 18th of June, and from the 17th of August to the 8th of September 1855, inclusively, their loss was 27,852.

As the total loss of the English, in killed and wounded, in the siege and assaults was 8,961, we shall have, taking the loss of the allies at double that of the English, a total loss of about 27,000 so that the besieged lost as many in the 25 most sanguinary days of the siege as the besiegers did during all the 328 days during which it lasted.

The French garrison of Badajoz in 1812, consisting of 4,890 men, inflicted 4,824 casualties on their assailants in 21 days, with a loss of 4,000 only of their own men, including deaths from sickness.

In the same year the garrison of Burgoes 2,000 strong, repulsed their opponents with a loss of 2,064 killed and wounded; in 32 days—their own loss being 639."

Manslaughter.

An inquest was held on the 8th July inst., before Dr. Hamilton, Coroner, at the "Elkin Inn," Village of Manchester in Wawanosh, upon the body of Thomas M'Guire who died on the 7th inst. from the effects of wounds received on the 28th ult., at the hands of James Thompson. From the testimony of the witnesses then brought forward, it appears that the deceased had made claims for renumeration for some work which he had performed, but which claims were disclaimed by Thompson. Angry words had, on former occasions passed between them. Henry Farrow, in company with another witness named Lawler, were standing in front of Thompson's house in the first concession Wawanosh, where M'Guire has just gone in—while there, Thompson came out and taking up a stick went again into the house.—Thompson was then heard to order M'Guire out of the house, and directly afterwards M'Guire called out as if he had received a blow. Thompson came to the door and threw out the stick. After waiting about 5 minutes Farrow went in and found M'Guire sitting on the hearth and leaning his back against the fire jamb.—The witness Farrow then asked what was the matter. Thompson stated that he had a mare in the house and could not get him out. Farrow then went and told Thompson that he had put him, past coming out of it. McGuire stated to Farrow and Lawler, that Thompson struck him with a stick while he was stooping down at the fire to light his pipe. He said he was badly cut and asked them to look at it. The deceased laid deceased in the floor and washed his head and having led him out into the road, left him in charge of William Clark, who came up at the time. These witnesses observed a cut on the ear of deceased, but no other wound on the head; there was a mark of blood on the wall, deceased assigned no reason for Thompson striking him—but had received blows on the head, side and wrist, the last sustained in striving to protect the head. The testimony of the medical men who were examined, proved that concussion of the brain was the immediate cause of the death of deceased.

The Coroner's jury brought in a verdict of Manslaughter against Thompson.

Progress of the Railway Works.

It is satisfactory to note that the Railway works in our Town and vicinity, and, indeed all along the line between Sarnia and Komoka, are progressing favorably. The excavation along the bank of the river, and onwards, is going on rapidly, and will soon be completed to the limits of the town; while at the same time the erection of the Depot buildings is also being proceeded with. The foundation of the Passenger Depot, which is of substantial stone masonry, is already completed, and the brick superstruction which is to be thereon erected, is begun, the intention being to have the whole finished this fall. A great portion of the line is graded, and the whole will soon be ready for the ties and rails; and we understand it is the intention of the contractors to have the road in running order immediately after the advent of A.D 1857. The transition to us Lambtonians, from our comparatively isolated position will be a great one world, except by the circuitous route of Detroit, Windsor, and London,—to that of being within two hours travel of London, will certainly be very satisfactory. And there can be no doubt, moreover, that many of our neighbors in the middle and back country, will also avail themselves of this short route to the east, instead of going round by Detroit, and thence eastward along the G. W. R. R., as at present,—the saving of distance from this point to London branch, being about 110 miles,—and of time, nearly a day; not to speak of the saving of expense, which also must be considerable. Altogether we feel as if we were near the commencement of a new era in our history, which will only be the more marked, when our neighbors get their line completed between Port Huron & Corunna or Owasso, where it is proposed to connect it with the Detroit and Milwaukee road. Then the eastern travel of Northern Wisconsin will also add to the traffic, so that there is little reason to doubt that ultimately a profitable and stirring business will be done on the London and Sarnia branch of the G. W. Railway.—London Observer.

A Murderess Sent to State Prison for Life.

The Eaton (Mich.) Republican states that Mrs. Brooks, of Kalamazoo, was convicted of the murder of her husband, after two days' trial and an absence of half an hour on the part of the jury. The prisoner, on being asked if she had anything to say why sentence of the law should not be pronounced upon her, she arose and calmly stated that she had something to say, but wished to say it in the presence of her friends her father's family. The family were then sent for. Several of her brothers and sisters appeared, but her father and mother, who had been present during the trial, did not come in. The prisoner took the testations of innocence; wished to have her friends come to themselves with the belief, whenever they thought of her during her long absence, that she had a clear conscience. She briefly narrated her married life; declared that no husband ever had lived happily together; narrated the circumstances of his first, and the commencement of his last sickness, but left all the strong points of the testimony against her without comment or explanation. In expressing her regret that her father and mother were not present, and her hope that she would be permitted to see them before she went to Jackson, she was so overcome with grief that she could not proceed. She leaned upon the Judge's desk bowed her head and wept for a few moments, and then stating that though she had much to say she could not utter, she took her seat.

After a few remarks from the Court, stern and severe in their extent and meaning, but delivered with signs of deep emotion, the following sentence was pronounced:—That sentence of the Court, therefore is, that you be confined at hard labor, in solitary confinement in the State Prison at Jackson, during the term of your natural life."—The prisoner heard the sentence with the same remarkable calmness which she had manifested during the trial.

The Maple Leaf,

SANDWICH, JULY 25, 1856.

The Bill altering the constitution of the Legislative Council, and making the same elective, having become a law of the land, and the Western Division, composed of the Counties of Essex and Kent, for the purpose of electing a member to that house, is entitled, under lot cast in terms of the Act, to the privilege of electing one member to the Council. We are therefore on the eve of an election, which will take place most probably during the month of October next.

We have always been opposed to rendering the Upper Chamber elective; yet now that it has become so, it is our duty to abide by it, and endeavor, in our choice of representatives, to make that branch of the Legislature as competent as possible, by electing such men only as are fit for and worthy of the position that they will be placed in.

In exercising our privilege of electing a Legislative Councilor, we should guard against any thing that will tend to produce a sectional feeling between the two counties. There is no reason why those men only should who will endeavor to raise the sectional cry and strive to make the election turn upon the candidate's residence in either one county or the other, quite irrespective of ability or fitness for the office. Such men will be found in all communities, but we trust that should such be found in ours, that the electors will shun them altogether. We want a man to represent this constituency who has ability, and will guard over our interests with credit to himself and the electors; and let that be the test when our votes are recorded.

We hope a fair understanding will be come to between the two counties before the election, and that steps will be taken to secure the appointment of delegates from each section, who will have the power to decide upon the parties who should be put in nomination and supported, the delegates to meet and choose the candidate during the month of August next. This course would have the effect of preventing any sectional party feeling which might have been raised, and will render the election almost certain of the party who shall be chosen by them. It will also create a friendly understanding between the two parts of the constituency, and will thereby be enabled to elect a person who is competent to represent us in that chamber.

ELECTIVE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL BILL.

An Act to change the Constitution of the Legislative Council by rendering the same elective. Reserved for signification of Her Majesty's pleasure 15th May, 1856.—The Royal Assent given Her Majesty in Council on the 24th June, 1856 and Proclamation made thereof by His Excellency Sir Edmund Walker Head, Governor General, in the Canada Gazette of the 11th July, 1856.

Whereas by an act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed in the seventeenth and eighteenth years of the Reign of Her most Gracious Majesty, chaptered one hundred and eighteenth " to empower the " Legislature of Canada to alter the Constitution of the Legislative Council for that " Province, and for other purposes," it is enacted, That the Legislature of that Province may change the Constitution of the Legislative Council of the said Province, and make other provisions relative to the same subject and to other subjects therein mentioned:—Therefore, Her Majesty by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of Canada, enacts as follows:

I. The Legislative Council shall hereafter be composed of the present Members thereof and of forty-eight Members to be elected, in the proportion and at the times and in the manner hereafter provided; and to this end the Province shall be divided into forty-eight Electoral Divisions, twenty-four in Upper Canada and twenty-four in Lower Canada, in the manner set forth in Schedule A.

II. The present Councillors shall continue to hold their seats as heretofore, subject to the conditions contained in the Imperial Act of the third and fourth Victoria, chapter thirty-five, "to re-unite the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada and for the Government of Canada."

III. The Elective Members shall be elected for eight years.

IV. No person shall be eligible or shall sit or vote as a Legislative Councillor unless he be a British Subject by birth or naturalization, resident in Canada, of the full age of thirty years, and be legally or equitably seized of freehold, for his own use and benefit, of lands or tenements held in fief, franc alen or roture in his Province, of the value of two thousand pounds currency over and above all debts, charges and dues, nor unless his real estate or his lands or tenements aforesaid to the value aforesaid be within the limits of the Electoral Division for which he shall seek to be, or shall have been, elected.

V. No person shall be elected a Legislative Councillor who is a public defaulter, or shall have been convicted of felony, or of any infamous crime.

VI. No Member of one House shall be elected a member of the other.

VII. The seat of an Elective Legislative Councillor shall be forfeited in any of the following cases:—if he be a public defaulter, or become a bankrupt, or insolvent, or take the benefit of any law whatsoever in relation to insolvent debtors; or shall cease to hold a property qualification required by the fourth clause.

VIII. Upon or before the first day of September next following the day on which this Act shall receive the Royal assent, the Governor shall issue Writs for the election of twelve Legislative Councillors to represent the twelve Electoral Divisions first entitled to return members to the Legislative Council as hereinafter provided; and the said Writs shall be transmitted to the Returning Officers by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and be returnable on the first Tuesday of November following: and in every second year thereafter Writs for the periodical elections shall be issued on or before the first day of September, and returnable the first Tuesday in November.

IX. The writs of election shall be in the form of schedule B.

X. The Governor shall appoint the Returning Officers for the electoral divisions, from among those persons who might by law be Returning Officers at elections of members of the Legislative Assembly for places within the limits of such divisions.

XI. The Returning Officer for any electoral divisions shall fix a place as nearly as may be in the centre of such division, for the nomination of candidates, and the proclamation of the candidate elected.

XII. The electors of Legislative Councillors shall, as regards their qualification, be the same as those of members of the Legislative Assembly, and shall vote at the places at which they would vote for a member of the latter: The boundaries and extent of electoral divisions are defined by schedule A.

XIII. The laws relating to the election of Members of the Legislative Assembly, as regards the qualification of Electors,—the issue and return of Writs of Election,—Returning Officers,—the power and duties of Returning Officers and of Deputy Returning Officers, and of Election and Poll Clerks —the prevention or punishment of offences committed at elections or with regard to the registration of voters, and of election, or by an elector, or by the Returning Officer, make in person a written declaration in the form of Schedule C; and the provisions of the election laws which prior to the passing of this Act related to the declaration of qualification of candidates for election to the Legislative Assembly, shall, with the exception of the amount of property qualification, apply in a precisely similar manner to the declaration of qualification of the candidate for election to the Legislative Council.

XV. The period for which the Legislative Councillors shall serve shall commence on the day of the return of the return of the writs, and shall end upon the day next preceding the return day of the writs for the election of their successors.

XVI. Every Legislative Councillor shall, before taking his seat, take the oath in the schedule C. before the Clerk of the said Council.

XVII. The order in which the electoral divisions shall be entitled to return members to the Legislative Council shall be determined by lot, as soon as possible after the commencement of this act, in the manner provided in the schedule E., and shall forthwith be made known by proclamation.

XVIII. For the purpose of such determination by lot, the electoral divisions shall be united in groups of four each, as in schedule F.

XIX. Periodical elections of the Legislative Councillors to present the several electoral divisions shall take place in the order determined by lot and made known by proclamation as aforesaid; the twelve electoral divisions named in the list of the "First Drawing" being those first entitled to return members to the said Council, those named in the List of the "Second Drawing" being those next entitled to return members to the said Council, and so on.

XX An Elective Councillor may resign his seat in the same manner and under the same circumstances as a member of the Legislative Assembly; and he may hold his seat until the day next preceding that of the return of the writ of election of his successor. In case of his resigning or going out at the expiration of the period for which he is elected, he may be re-elected subject to the conditions contained in this act.

XXI. Elective Legislative Councillors shall, under the same circumstances as members of the Legislative Assembly, be subject to the laws for securing the independence of the Legislative Assembly of this Province.

XXII. The acceptance by a Councillor of the office of the Speaker of the Legislative Council, shall not, however, vacate his seat.

XXIII. In cases of accidental vacancy produced by Sections twenty and twenty one the Speaker of the Legislative Council, the Legislative Council and the several members thereof, shall have the same powers and duties as the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, the Legislative Assembly and the several members thereof and the Writs shall be returnable within fifty days at furthest from the issue thereof.

XXIV. An accidental vacancy of the seat for any Electoral Division happening within the three months next before the regular periodical vacancy of such seat, shall not be filled until the time appointed for filling such periodical vacancy.

XXV. In case of any accidental vacancy of the seat for any electoral division, not provided for by the next preceding section, the period of service of the Councillor elected to fill such vacancy shall be that at which his predecessor would regularly have gone out.

XXVI. The Speaker of the Legislative Council shall as heretofore, be appointed by the Governor, and shall be selected from amongst the Members of the said Council.

XXVII. The Councillor who shall be Speaker at the time of the passing of this Act shall continue to be so until he be removed by another.

XXVIII. Each General Election of Members of the Legislative Assembly shall make a new Parliament, as heretofore.

A requisition to Colonel Prince, we are informed, will be presented to him during this week from both counties, to allow him self to be put in nomination as a candidate for the election of Legislative Councillors. We are also informed that the requisition to him from Kent is most numerously and respectably signed, as well as that from Essex. He will, no doubt, allow himself to be put in nomination and with a good chance of success. We have not the least fear for the result, and we will no doubt have a majority in both counties.

In our next issue the requisition will appear.

The Detroit Tribune, in speaking of the Southern Railway Terminus being permanently located at Sandwich, appears to treat the matter as an impassibility, yet without giving the least reason why it should not be so. Had a good and sound one, or even any reason whatever been stated, people might then form a judgment as to its not being practicable; but in the absence of that we must take it for granted that he has none, or has no knowledge whatever of the relative positions of the two places. Had the editor only inspected the ground he would have found that it would be much more sensible than he at first supposed, while laboring under a state of blissful ignorance upon that subject. Now it would have been much better, Mr. Tribune, had you informed yourself upon the subject before making so positive an assertion.

For the last month this neighborhood has been infested with a set of thieves, who have broken into a number of dwellings and committed many thefts. These thieves have been before our officers of justice more than once, but until Wednesday last, when Messrs Samuel Port, Philip Knight and John Rian suspected certain parties, and entered the house kept by a fellow named Williams, at Windsor, and finding a number of articles that had been stolen from different persons, arrested three negro men and two white women, who are suspected as be thieves.

They will be brought before the Magistrates Court to-day, and will most likely be committed for trial at the Autumn Assizes. The names of the prisoners are Wm. Wilkes, Gant and Wells, Mrs. Gant and Caroline.

We would suggest that the officers who arrested this gang should receive some reward from the public for their activity in securing these pests to society, and that steps be taken to raise a subscription for that purpose without delay.

Dissolution of the American Union.

The Charlestown S. C Standard, contains the following observations on the present crisis of the United States:

We are of those who believe that a dissolution of the Union is necessary to the preservation of representative liberty in this country. We have not urged its immediate consummation—we have been willing to await the more favorable development of the slave idea, that the Southern republic should start upon its career of international intercourse, with a proclamation of its rights, as well to the foreigner as the domestic slave trade; but if the alternative is presented of an immediate dissolution or a war upon our whole extended frontier to no other object than a dissolution in the end, we would urge upon the Southern States at once to meet the crisis, and to adopt industriously the measures necessary to the peace and progress of the country. It may be urged that a war is a necessary step to this result, but we cannot think so. We believe if the public mind of the South were made to realize that a dissolution of the Union is necessary to their peace and tranquillity, the measure without the stimulant of fear, would be carried; we said that such realization can only come with the state of actual war, but we can hardly believe that there are any men of intelligence who sternly look upon the subject, and do not see that there is a political connection with no union,—we do not see how we can defend against the fetters,—who see that the extension of the one is inconsistent with the extension of the other, that each requires a sphere of movement upon which the other is a check; they are more dissimilar in nature than any two nations upon earth can be sides,—the one the purest type of a mixed, the other the purest type of an unmixed, society,—but who must come to the inevitable conclusion that each has the elements of a distinct nationality—that distinct existence they must be distinct in political action, and that there can be no hope of a common movement during an extended period except upon an extinction of every vital principle in one or other of the parties.

The educated mind of this State concurs with us in the conviction that the dissolution must come at no distant period. It may be necessary that more blood shall be shed to put the other Southern States in action, but without we are soon aroused to decisive council, it will flow fast enough.—The North will support their men in Kansas; of this there is at least, the indication. They will give funds, at least, and there are men enough to fight for money. The South will not give up the contest. Our friends are there, and we must support them and we will support them, and either the North must draw off and leave that land to slavery, or the flames of war now kindled, will spread along the border; they will sweep around the pillars of the capitol, and the cankering and mercenary hypocrites of Yankeedom. This war will enable us to get rid of them, or turn the tables upon them, and render them a source of profit, instead of expense. It will enable us to regain our own—pilfered from us by many a sharp transaction. It will enable us to build up our country by the recapture of ten millions of which we have been plundered. It will enable us to get rid of Yankee Presidents, and to preserve Anglo-Saxon freedom, by reviving the old connection with mother country. Who would not rather be ruled over by a lady, like Queen Victoria, than by any nasal-twanged gentlemen that Yankeeland can produce?) It will enable us, with the United States S uth on one side, in close alliance with England and Canada on the other very speedily to bring these long protracted negotiations to a close, by confining them to the starving soil on which they were born and to the thin air around them."

The Custom Question and that Yellow Waistcoat Marcy's Victory over Victoria.

[From the New York Herald.]

It must be especially gratifying to our indomitable Premier, Marcy, that notwithstanding all the ridicule, mockery and contempt with which his official circulars on diplomatic costume have been treated at home and abroad, at last he has achieved a victory over upon this initial point in his foreign policy. This victory is over Victor is herself, and in the person of that mysterious West Point professor in the frock coat, black cravat and yellow waistcoat. Strangely enough, the breeches are not mentioned, the very last of the highest diplomatic interest to our Premier. Perhaps they were blue, perhaps they were black, and perhaps, in havin a fifty cent patch or two, they have come up fully to the regulation of the State Department.

We must say however, that under this direction of Messrs. Pierce and Marcy, our diplomats have not in the aggregate left a very favorable impression on the public mind abroad. There has been a great deal of folly and nonsense among our negations in Europe upon this very thing of court customes. Then, again, while some of our diplomatic attaches have run into extravagances from which they had to run away, and have used the facilities of the official position in behalf of birds of passage of doubtful plumage, others of our ministerial families—or outsiders admitted to their confidence—have made the most of this or that legation in the circulation of revolutionary documents on the continent. All these malapropos transactions, however, are over, are overshadowed in that crowning enormity, the Ostend Conference and Ostend manifesto. A set of diplomates distributed throughout Europe as the agents of English socialists, French refugees, Austrian Jews, Irish filibusters, American adventurers, and what not, might be tolerated, with all their follies upon diplomatic coats and breeches, and with all their other revolutionary sympathies and proceedings; but that Ostend manifesto was too much. Hence the barbarian ideas since so prevalent in Europe of the American national character—ideas, too which will not lose anything of their influence from this little affair of the yellow waistcoat.

This is a fitting occasion to remark upon the folly and mean ambition of too many of the American travellers abroad, whose first object on reaching London or Paris is to be presented. That is the purgatory of the Minister, the worry of the Lord Chamberlain, but the greatest of events to Yankee Doodle. Now it is not so difficult to encounter royalty—in London quite so; therefore the greater triumph for an American snob. No matter how fortune has come to him—whether in the shape of codfish or cotton, of pork or pickles, or patent rights, or short patterns of poor cloth—a resentation at court gilds the coin afresh, and makes it current and a legal tender everywhere.

Say what we please, we have among us the greatest turf hunters and toadies in the world. Nothing can be done to penetrate the soul of the most independent free and born American humbug. Our greatest heiresses give away all they possess to win titled husbands; in short, our rad Pot, unappeasable in ignotion—such a fine staple in the newspapers, at public meetings, in barrooms, even before a lord will penetrate—is often cooled down in the twinkling of an eye by the very first sprinkle of condescension from the foreign nobility.

Thus some of our countrymen make the veriest fools of themselves abroad by their absurd conduct and their ridiculous—upended democrats in words, but petty aristocrats in reality. A rebuff once in a while will do no harm to these illustrious Jonathans while on their wonderful travels by sea and by land. How Mr. Dallas came to make such a blunder as to attempt to introduce the West Pointer in military undress—for it was nothing more—we are unable to conceive. He had experience of courts, and should have known better. Without a dress sword and a regulation chapeau, the attache would not be en regle, even here much less in the drawing room. He was treated as he deserved, and he has now something to lecture about. We presume there will be no war: we hope not, for the sake of the bulls in Wall street, whose horns have lately been quite exalted—more for the sake of Pierce and Marcy, particularly the latter, whose eminent career has been endangered three several times by a succession of sartorial events: First, the patch on the breeches; second, the new black coats of our foreign ministry; third, and most dangerous of all, by yellow waistcoats and black neck ties.

Are Radicals in favor of Democracy.

In the Colonist of the 7th, we find the following:

"The issues, which are likely to divide parties hereafter, and give them a distinctive character, are a written constitution, heads of departments out of the Legislature, and an elective Governor, against responsible Government. In short, the American system against the British. These are the issues which leading politicians and thinkers are now preparing to discuss; and which, before two years will have passed, will mark parties just as unmistakeably as the Clergy Reserves ever did."

It used to be the fatal reproach (in most cases undeserved however) against the Reform party of Canada, that they were revolutionary at bottom, and their demands for Reform and Responsible Government, were only preludes to more "ulterior designs" of upsetting British free constitutional government and establishing American Democratic institutions in its place. This charge was false against the mass of the Reform party; but there always was a section, and there is yet a section of so called reformers against whom this grave accusation justly lay. In former times however they denied the impeachment. Now on the contrary they display their cloven heel without much compunction—and what might naturally be expected, those few journals which a few years ago were the most strenuous project of annexation then got up, do now preach up their dogma of an "elective governor, elective judges, elective magistrates, and all the rest of it," and this they do, because they consider these things as but one step removed from annexing, and its necessary pre-requisite. The papers favouring these projects are the crazy Hamilton Banner. Mackenzie's Message, Brantford Examiner, and two or three other small fry who are unnamable. This small party shows that with good backing from the Globe and other schemers there is a chance for a noise to be made in this subject. When we asserted two years ago, that the demand for an elective council was sure to lead to that of an elective government which is in fact to cut the only constitutional link that binds the Province to Britain. The assertion was treated as an affront almost by the Clear Grits, our words are now coming true. Still we have no fear for the result. The honest reform press which fought to establish free constitutional government in Canada, is ready to fight to defend it. It struggled to establish free British principles in our government and will keep them there. It were well for those crazy pates like the Hamilton Banner to impress that fact well on their minds. It will take something harder than any metal they possess to sink responsible Gov't. We quite agree with the Brantford Courier on this matter, which says:

"The old test question having already been disposed of, politicians must have new capital. They must have new rallying cries The present Opposition have evidently decided in favor of the advocacy of the American system against the British. They are welcome. They will be met. In this there is no mistake. Let the "Globe," "Mackenzie's Message," et hoc genus, draw upon their side and fire away. Let them pretend to loyalty, whilst attempting to subvert British institutions and British connexion in Canada. Our word,—it, they want. Let us all their own way, and we are anxious to see them table their arguments in favor of "the American system" against the British."—Mail.

Frightful Railroad Collision near Philadelphia.

FORTY PERSONS KILLED AND EIGHTY HORRIBLY MANGLED.

(From the Philadelphia Bulletin, July 17)

About nine o'clock this morning, the appalling intelligence reached the city, that a collision had occurred upon the North Pennsylvania Railroad, between the regular morning train from Gwynedd, and an excursion train that left the city at five o'clock this morning, filled with a large party of school children, with their teachers &c. The particulars, so far as we have been able to glean them from respectable sources, are as follows:—

At five o'clock this morning, a special train of ten cars left the Master street depot with the schools of St. Michael's Roman Catholic church, in Kensington. The excursion party consisted of between five and six hundred persons, the great majority of whom were children. They intended proceeding to Fort Washington, fourteen and a half miles from the city, where they were to enjoy a pic nic. Owing to the number of cars and the weight of the train, there was some delay, and the conductor, Mr. Alfred F. Hoppel, finding himself behind time, pushed forward with great rapidity when towards the end of his route.

The regular passenger train for the city left Gwynedd at six o'clock, and reached Camp Hill at six o'clock and 18 minutes. Finding the excursion train had not yet arrived, Mr. Wm. Vanstavoran, the conductor determined not to wait for it, and the train was moving along when the excursion train came thundering on around a curve, at the rate of 35 miles an hour. A collision of course ensued with the most appalling consequences.

The train was in front escaped without serious damage, but the scene presented by the excursion train was fearful. The three forward cars of the train were crushed completely to pieces, and the wreck, mingling with that of the locomotive, took fire, and the flames communicated to the other cars on the train. The last car but one after the three that were wrecked outright took fire, and was entirely consumed. The inmates of the three forward cars were completely mixed up with the wreck, and a large number of them were killed outright. There were probably fifty persons in each of the three cars, and the lowest estimate we heard gives the number of killed at fifty, while it was feared the dread aggregate would reach one hundred.

Henry Harris, the engineer of the excursion train, was cut to pieces and killed instantly; and John Beans, the fireman, is among the missing, and it is believed he is under the wreck.

As soon as the dreadful intelligence reached the city a car was despatched with all possible speed from the Master street depot, with physicians and other assistance.

The man "who stood upon trifles" has been blown away

The exact time when the election takes place, we at present cannot say, further than that the writ will be issued on the 1st of September, and to be returned on the first Tuesday in November. Though it's very likely that the election will take place some time in October. We are not in a position to say who will be returned for the United Counties of Kent and Essex. There are several Candidates mentioned for the honor. We have heard the names of James Smith, Warden, George Young, George Thomas, A. Charteris, Esquires, and Col. Prince, also, the Honorable H. I. Boulton, of Toronto. The gentlemen we have named are all well known to the people, but whether all or any of them are desirous of obtaining a seat in the Upper House, we cannot say, further than what dame rumor has given currency to, within the last two or three days. To our friends we would say, be not in too great a hurry to pledge yourselves, till it is fully known who the candidates are, lest you may be placed in a false position.

We have been informed that a convention of the two Counties is likely to be held with the view of deciding on a gentleman. We trust that whoever may be fixed upon, he will be a gentleman of principle, holding liberal and enlightened views. Next week we hope to be able to tender a little advice to our friends.—Kent Advertiser.

BILIOUS DISORDERS AND THEIR CURE.

There is nothing can form so useful and efficient an aperient as the Bile itself, which has been admirably adapted by nature to supply the bowels in a state of health with the requisite stimulus; but when this has from disease become either deficient in quantity, or deteriorated in quality, medicines are justly entitled to consideration as the most effectual means of restoring a healthy secretion. Sir Astley Cooper's Anti-Bilious and Family Aperient Pills are all powerful in removing the distressing symptoms attendant upon Bilious obstructions, disordered state of the stomach and bowels—such as pains in the head, dimness of sight, sickness, oppression of the chest, lowness of spirits, with great apprehension of imaginary danger, and fear of sudden death, disinclination for active employment, and various other symptoms, at all times troublesome, and not unfrequently dangerous. By taking two or three of Sir Astley Cooper's Pills, the symptoms above described are speedily removed, an unusual degree of serenity pervades the mind, the stomach and bowels are restored to their natural functions, and returning vigor is the result; by taking one, two or three pills at bedtime, and repeated as occasion may render necessary, they operate pleasantly, without producing that irritation common to most advertised and powerful medicines, which too often augment the maladies they were intended to remove.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—Be sure to ask for the Genuine Sir Astley Cooper's Pills, prepared in London and New York, by McPhail and Co., and see that their signature is on each box and on the directions. Without this mark of authenticity they are certainly spurious and an imposition.

Sold at 25 and 50 cents per box, and in Family boxes at $1 each. There is a great saving by purchasing the larger sizes.

For sale by Simpson and Dunspaugh, Druggists, Toronto; John M. Thornton, Dundas; Andrew Oliver Galt; A. H. Cook, Brantford, General Agents, by whom Country Druggists and Merchants will be supplied at London and New York prices.

The Grist Mill is situated in the Township of Sandwich, and a portion of the Town Lots and an excellent House and Lot are situate in the Town of Amherstburg; the remaining Town and Villa Lots in the Town of Sandwich, the County Town of Essex and on the beautiful river Detroit. The Wild Lands are situate in different parts of the County of Essex and are very valuable.

The Town Lots are large with fine broad streets, and close to the business part of the Town.

The Great Southern Railway Terminus will be within a very short distance of these Lots.

The Villa Lots have a most beautiful situation, being high and well adapted for gentlemen's residences, having a fine broad avenue laid out, on which they front; and are not surpassed in respect to beauty and position by any in the Province.

There are a greater number of prizes in proportion to the number of tickets to be sold than in any similar scheme yet offered to the public. The drawing will take place under the superintendence of a committee of gentlemen, to be appointed on the day of drawing by the holders of Tickets.

☞ Parties remitting to the subscriber one hundred dollars will receive a package of twenty-eight tickets in return.

CATHARTIC PILLS

OPERATE by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, and, by restoring their irregular action to health, correct, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first causes of disease. An extensive trial of their virtues, by Professors, Physicians, and Patients, has shown cures of dangerous diseases almost beyond belief, were they not substantiated by persons of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Their certificates are published in my American Almanac, which the Agents below named are pleased to furnish free to all inquiring.

Annexed we give Directions for their use in the complaints which they have been found to cure.

FOR COSTIVENESS.—Take one or two Pills, or such quantity as to gently move the bowels. Costiveness is frequently the aggravating cause of PILES, and the cure of one complaint is the cure of both. No person can feel well while under a costive habit of body. Hence it should be, as it can be, promptly relieved.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, which is sometimes the cause of Costiveness, and always uncomfortable, take mild doses—from one to four—to stimulate the stomach and liver into healthy action. They will do it, and the heartburn, bodyburn, and soulburn of dyspepsia will rapidly disappear. When it has gone, don't forget what cured you.

FOR a FOUL STOMACH, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take from four to eight Pills at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until activity and strength is restored to the system.

FOR NERVOUSNESS, SICK HEADACHE, NAUSEA, Pain in the Stomach, Back, or Side, take from four to eight pills on going to bed. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more the next day until they do. These complaints will be swept out from the system. Don't wear these and their kindred disorders because your stomach is foul.

FOR SCROFULA, ERYSIPELAS, and all Diseases of the Skin, take the Pills freely and frequently, to keep the bowels open. The eruptions will generally soon begin to diminish and disappear. Many dreadful ulcers and sores have been healed up by the purging and purifying effect of these Pills, and some disgusting diseases which seemed to saturate the whole system have completely yielded to their influence, leaving the sufferer in perfect health. Patients! your duty to society forbids that you should parade yourself around the world covered with pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores, and all or any of the unclean diseases of the skin, because your system wants cleansing.

TO PURIFY THE BLOOD, they are the best medicine ever discovered. They should be taken freely and frequently, and the impurities which sow the seeds of incurable diseases will be swept out of the system like chaff before the wind. By this property they do as much good in preventing sickness as by the remarkable cures which they are making every where.

LIVER COMPLAINT, JAUNDICE, and all Bilious Affections arise from some derangement—either torpidity, congestion, or obstructions of the Liver. Torpidity and congestion vitiate the bile and render it unfit for digestion. This is disastrous to the health, and the constitution is frequently undermined by no other cause. Indigestion is the symptom. Obstruction of the duct which empties the bile into the stomach causes the bile to overflow into the blood. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternately costiveness and diarrhœa, prevails. Feverish symptoms, languor, low spirits, weariness, restlessness, and melancholy, with sometimes inability to sleep, and sometimes great drowsiness; sometimes there is severe pain in the side; the skin and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow; the stomach acid; the bowels sore to the touch; the whole system irritable, with a tendency to fever, which may turn to bilious fever, bilious colic, bilious diarrhœa, dysentery, &c. A medium dose of three or four Pills taken at night, followed by two or three in the morning, and repeated a few days, will remove the cause of all these troubles. It is wicked to suffer such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

RHEUMATISM, GOUT, and all Inflammatory Fevers are rapidly cured by the purifying effects of these Pills upon the blood and the stimulus which they afford to the vital principle of Life. For these and all kindred complaints they should be taken in mild doses, to move the bowels gently, but freely.

As a DINNER PILL, this is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has been made more effectual to the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

About Sheep.

Anecdotes of animals are always amusing; and, moreover, if observed accurately and told without embellishment, may some day serve to solve a great problem in philosophy—the distinction, namely, between the spirit of a man that goeth upward, and the spirit of a beast that goeth downward to the earth a problem that the great Bishop Butler could not solve, and left a blemish in his argument, but a monument to his candor. The subject of the one I am going to tell happened many years ago, when I was an urchin of eight or ten, but I remember it well.

One fine summer morning it was my province to aid in driving a flock of sheep to the brook, to be washed, preparatory to shearing. The man who had charge of them led the procession with the salt dish in hand, in which he ostentatiously rattled some lumps of salt, and from time to time made a reference of throwing a handful on the ground, to draw the flock onward from place to place, while I followed to drive up the loiterers.

The old patriarch of the troop, a fine old buck, led the van of the quadrupeds, and carefully examined every spot where the false motion of throwing salt was made, till he was fully satisfied in his own mind that no salt was deposited. He then paused, shook his head with its ample honors, and waiting till the shepherd was about a rod in advance, charged upon him from the rear with his whole momentum, fairly raising him off his feet. I saw, and from the first comprehended the manœuvre, but there was so much fun in it, it was impossible to give the alarm; and when the man turned to "blow me up" for my tacit complicity, I was rolling on the grass in a convulsion of laughter so contagious he was forced to join in it, and let me off without a rebuke.

Will it do to attribute to so simple an animal as a sheep so high a moral sentiment as indignation at deceit? Perhaps not; but we may at least make the practical inference that those having charge of flocks cannot securely lead them long with mere occasional handfuls of wind.—Church Jour.

THE BEST COW FEED.—The vegetable I wish to recommend, all things considered, for milch cows in winter, is white, flat turnips. The potatoes will object to turnips because they will affect the taste of the milk and butter. So they will, if fed raw; this can be avoided by boiling. For each cow, boil half a bushel of turnips soft; while hot, add five or six quarts of shorts, which will swell, and you will get the worth of it. Guinea like this, to a cow once a day, will produce more milk of a good quality, than any other feed at the same cost. Turnips, fed in this way, do not taint either milk or butter.

One thing in favour of turnips, as food for cows is, that they can be sown in August or as late as September. I sowed some as late as September, which were very fine. Turnips are also very profitable food for pigs, boiled in the same way as for cows—Plow. Loom, and Anvil

GROUND FOOD FOR STOCK.—Few persons seem to beaware of the importance of grinding every variety of grain before feeding it to animals; it is all important. There is no animal's stomach that can digest any variety of grain with a cortical covering. All animals that swallow a single kernel without crushing, void it whole; and what is singular, after passing the ordeal of the gastric, the heat and digestive organs of the stomach on the whole intestinal canal, the seed will still germinate and grow.

In feeding horses and cattle, for simply carrying them through the winter, if what grain they are entitled to was ground, and the hay or straw cut, mixed and properly moistened, the saving would amount to quite an item—every inch of hay or straw will be eaten, and nothing lost. Two-third the quantity now fed is rather for horses to put under their feet, and that fed to cattle on the ground, and trodden down and spoiled, would suffice to carry stock though the winter. But habit is everything.

VINEGAR.—A writer in the Boston Cultivator proposes the following method by which he thinks the best vinegar can be procured at a trifling expense:—The juice of one bushel of sugar beets, worth twenty-five cents, and which any farmer can raise with little cost, will make from five to six gallons of vinegar, equal to the best made of cider wine. First, wash and grate the beets, and express the juice in a cheese press, or in any other way which a little ingenuity can suggest, and put the liquor into a barrel; cover the bung with gauze and set it in the sun and in fifteen or twenty days it will be fit for use. By this method a cheap kind of vinegar can be obtained without any great trouble; and I hope all who like good vinegar will try it.

CEMENTS.—To fasten small shells on ornamental work, use either of the following preparations: Dissolve as much gum arabic as will make a liquid of the consistence of treacle. 2. Finely powdered plaster of Paris made into a cream with water.

VARNISH FOR PICTURES.—White of eggs beaten up, makes a good varnish for water-color pictures; it must be carefully laid on with a large camel's hair brush.

CRAMP.—Those who may be subject in the night time to that excruciating pain called cramps, will be doubtless glad to learn that by tying any kind of bandage very tight around the leg, immediately above the knee, this unpleasant sensation will be instantaneously removed.

TO WHITEN TEETH.—Mix honey with fine dry powdered charcoal and use the paste as a dentrifice.

HOW TO COOK RHUBARB.—It is common error in cooking rhubarb to peel it. This should never be done, as the skin contains the aroma of the plant and is not at all injurious, and cooks up readily and becomes palatable. We have derived this information from a French cook of noted experience and skill.

PHILANTHROPY.—There are two kinds of philanthropists—those who talk and those who act; the former believe in good advice, the latter in dimes and dinners.

AYER'S
PILLS

Are curing the Sick to an extent never before known of any Medicine.

INVALIDS, READ AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES.

JULES HAUEL, Esq., the well known perfumer, of Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, whose choice products are found at almost every toilet, says:

"I am happy to say of your CATHARTIC PILLS, that I have found a better family medicine, for common use, than any other within my knowledge. Many of my friends have realized marked benefits from them, and I unite with me in believing that they possess extraordinary virtues for driving out disease and curing the sick. They are not only effectual, but safe and pleasant to be taken—qualities which must make them valued by the public, as they are known to be."

The venerable Chancellor WARDLAW writes from Barbarence, 15th April, 1854:

"DR. J. C. AYER—SIR: I have taken your PILLS with great benefit, for the restlessness, languor, loss of appetite, and Bilious headache, which has of late years overtaken me in the spring. A few doses of your Pills cured me. I have used your Cherry Pectoral many years in my family for coughs and colds with unvarying success. It is the only medicines which cure; and I feel it a pleasure to commend you for the good you have done and are doing."

JOHN F. BEATTY, Esq., Sec. of the Penn. Railroad Co. says:

"Pa. R. R. Office, Philadelphia, Dec. 13, 1853.

"SIR: I take pleasure in adding my testimony to the efficacy of your medicines, having derived very important benefit from the use of both your Pectoral and Cathartic Pills. I am never without them in my family, and shall never consent to be, while my means will procure them."

The widely renowned Dr. S. S. HERRICK, D., of Westworth, N. H., writes:

"Having used your CATHARTIC PILLS in my practice, I certify from experience that they are an invaluable purgative. In cases of disordered functions of the liver, causing headache, indigestion, costiveness, and the great variety of diseases that follow, they do more speedy good than any other. In all cases where a purgative remedy is required, I confidently recommend these Pills to the public, as superior to any cathartic medicine I have ever found. They are put in their operation, and perfectly safe—qualities which make them an invaluable purgative for public use. I have for many years known your Cherry Pectoral as the best Cough medicine in the world, and from all I see in its wise inferior to that admirable preparation for the treatment of diseases."

Acton, Me., Nov. 25, 1853.

"DR. J. C. AYER—DEAR SIR: I have been afflicted from my birth with scrofula in its worst form, and now, after twenty years' trial, and an untold amount of suffering, have been completely cured in a few weeks by your Pills. With such feelings of gratitude I write, for you are the instrument by which I was relieved, and now I am ready to do anything in my power to make your Pills known. Yours, &c.,

MARIA RICKER."

"I have known the above named Maria Ricker from her childhood, and, indeed, she was attacked my eyes, and made me almost blind, besides the unendurable pain; at times it seemed as if the roots of my head, including my hair, and has kept me partly bald all my days; sometimes it came on in my face, and kept it so much as to make me appear like a monster. I commenced taking your Cathartic Pills, and soon had the satisfaction of knowing that I was entirely free from the complaint. My eyes are well, my skin is fair, and my hair has commenced a healthy growth; all of which makes me feel like a new creature.

"Hoping this statement may be the means of conveying information that will do good to others, I am, with every sentiment of gratitude, Yours, &c.,

MARIA RICKER."

ANDREW J. MESERVE,
Overseer of the Pemberton Factory Co."

CAPT. JOEL PRATT, of the ship Marion, writes from Boston, 25th April, 1854:

"Your Pills have cured me from a bilious attack which arose from derangement of the Liver, which had become very serious. I had failed of any relief by my Physician, and from every remedy I could try; but a few doses of your Pills have completely restored me to health. I have given them to my family for Croup, with like good effects. They were promptly cured. I recommended them to a friend for costiveness, which had troubled him for months; he told me in a few days they had cured him. You make the best medicine in the world; and I say fire to my ship."

Read this from the distinguished Solicitor of the Supreme Court whose opinion has so much weight with the well known, not only in this but the neighboring States.

"SIR: I have great satisfaction in assuring you that your Cathartic Pills have been of much benefit to me as a medicine. My wife was cured, two years since, of a severe and dangerous cough, by your CHERRY PECTORAL, and since then has enjoyed perfect health. My children have several times been cured from attacks of the hollow croup by it. It is an invaluable medicine in the family of three complaints. Your CATHARTIC PILLS have entirely cured me from a dyspepsia and costiveness which has grown upon me for some years, so loosed, the cure is much more important, from the fact that I had failed to get relief from the best Physicians which this section of the country affords, and from many of the numerous pills I had taken.

"It seems to me, Doctor, like a providential blessing to our family, and you may well suppose we are not unmindful of it. Yours respectfully,

LEAVITT THAXTER."

Scate Chronicle, Ono, April 26, 1854.

"DR. J. C. AYER—Honored Sir: I have made a thorough trial of the CATHARTIC PILLS, bid me by your agent, and have been cured by them of the dreadful Rheumatism and Neuralgia which for years has made my family and myself miserable. The first dose of your PILLS relieved me, and a few subsequent doses have entirely removed the disease. I feel better health now than for some years before, which I attribute entirely to the effects of your CATHARTIC PILLS. Yours with great respect,

LUCIUS B. METCALF."

The above are all from persons who are publicly known where they reside, and who would not make these statements without a thorough conviction that they were true.

Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,

AND JOURNAL OF SUBURBAN ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the United States.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced. The growing interest with which the rising generation view the science of Horticulture, renders such a Journal as "The Illustrated Horticulturist" indispensably necessary to the progress of Rural affairs.

Rural Architecture forms one of the principal features; each number contains from two to four engravings of model cottages, from designs by eminent and skilful architects. Space is also assigned to the tasteful art of Landscape Gardening, engraved plans of gardens in every style, and adapted to the peculiarities of different orders of architecture, beautifies the work.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and to all who can boast the sovereignty of a square rod of tillable earth, "The Illustrated Horticulturist and Journal of Suburban Art" will prove an invaluable companion. The extraordinary low price at which it is afforded, together with its really superior execution, both in regard to typography and editorial ability, must make it the most popular work of the kind in America.

"The Illustrated Horticulturist" is printed on the finest quality of pearl surfaced paper, manufactured expressly. It is issued regularly the first of each month, commencing with July, 1855. The following gentlemen, eminent for their ability in the science of Horticulture, are engaged to conduct the Editorial department: H. P. KNIGHT, JAMES SCOWDEN and D. W. RAY.

TERMS: Two Dollars per annum, payable invariably in advance; a liberal discount to the Trade, Postmasters, and getters-up of Clubs.

Advertisements inserted at the rate of Ten Dollars per page.

N.B.—Newspapers inserting the above prospectus, and drawing attention editorially to the same, will be forwarded the ILLUSTRATED HORTICULTURIST for one year, a copy containing the advertisement should be sent in all cases to ensure attention.

NEW VOLUME OF THE
AGRICULTURIST

SUBSCRIPTION REDUCED FROM 25 TO 50 PER CENT.

The Canadian Agriculturist

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by the present proprietor in 1848, and is too well known to the leading farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us. The undersigned has made arrangements with the proprietor to publish the next, and probably succeeding volumes, and have resolved to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE
Illustrated with Engravings

Such as Farm Implements, Portraits of Animals, plans of Farm Buildings, Views of Inventions, &c., &c., interesting to the Farmer, and also portraits of some of the most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM MACDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the practice of Agriculture near this city. The active interest of the various improvements made in our Agricultural Legislation since 1847, and having also been connected with this Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and writings in behalf of Canadian Agriculture are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to its columns as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to extend the correspondence on subjects of a practical kind.

"In Childhood's Days."

BY MIRANDA S. OSBORNE.

In childhood's days—not long ago.—
We wandered by the stream,
Whose beauteous marge in wanton flow
Or floral rainbows gleamed—
And zephyrs gaily gilded past,
And hues on long bright fire high,
And childhood's heart beat quick and fast,
And life flew gaily by.

In childhood's days—not long ago—
We often met and roved
Beside the stream with footsteps slow,
But never dreamed we loved;
Those days of joy flew quickly past—
A sigh—a tear—we parted:
Death willed it was our first and last—
I roam now broken-hearted.

In childhood's days—not long ago—
It seemeth like a dream;
I hear the murmuring brooklet flow,
I sit beside the stream:
I press the marge her footsteps trod—
The flowers her hand caressed—
And whisper "Loved one—gone to God!
Thy childhood's dream was blest."

The Enchanted Camel.

BY DR. J. V. C. SMITH.

Those who have travelled in oriental countries are familiar with the fact that love to the marvellous is a characteristic of the people. It is interwoven with their thoughts, waking or sleeping; and their traditional stories, like their modern imaginings, abound with extraordinary exhibitions of exuberant fancy.

So recently as at the commencement of the year 1851, the writer passed through a desolate section of the desert of Arabia, between Egypt and Syria, with a friend who cheerfully shared with him the privations and vexations which belong to all expeditions on camels.

Usually, the caravan got under way about daylight in the morning, and came to a halt at four o'clock in the afternoon. From that hour, till dark, the animals were fed, the sheik baked a doura cake, and we cooked or rather ate a kind of meal that was christened a dinner.

Through the day, the customary rate of speed could not have exceeded twenty-five miles, at the farthest. By tiring the gait of the camels, the halter of one being tied to the crupper of the other, we rarely accomplished three miles in an hour. It was tedious and repeating the following, is confessing liable that any other method will supersede it, for crossing the great deserts of Africa, in hundreds of years to come. There is not inland commerce enough to warrant railroads or canals in those arid regions; and if either were constructed, the drifting of impassable sand would ultimately destroy any known device of man that might be suggested. The camel, therefore, fitted by its peculiar anatomical structure for the very localities where they are so very serviceable can never be dispensed with while nomadic life continues.

After replenishing our stomachs, and the sheik and his slave had lighted their pipes we filled ours also, and gathering round the apology for a fire, made and replenished every few minutes with bits of sticks, dry grass, and such rubbish as could be picked up on the sand through the day, as a group we were really quite happy.

While the volumes of white tobacco smoke ascended from the bowls, and in small circles rolled away in the air, the camels, lying down and grinding their dry beans, seemed to participate in the enjoyment. A question arose respecting the intelligence of those awkward beasts. Certainly they have a small brain, with a huge body. With that organ a few sizes larger, it is reasonable it would be difficult to manage them. As it is, means are beautifully adapted to ends. They were designed to occupy precisely the place in which they are found. Without them, the Bedouin Arab could not exist, as he now does.

But it would take up too much time to discuss the beautiful law of nature, which has provided for the physical well being of every grade and kind of organized being, from man to a monad, and hence we shall proceed at once to our story.

To a conversation in regard to the instincts of the camel, and its intelligence, and a query as to whether they profited by their experience, the sheik seemed to listen with profound attention. Of course he could not understand English, but we could speak enough of the Arabic to give him the gist of the subject.

Story-telling is a distinct branch of business in the East, recognized as an elevated profession, because it implies a tenacious memory, a familiar acquaintance with the elements of humanity, the virtues and vices of society, and, lastly, they are supposed to cultivate a purity of language, by taking the place of authors in other countries. Sheikh Hassen—or, as he was called by his friends, Sheik Shomah Hassan—had been a great traveller, and knew the bearings of the prominent objects in the desert, from Suez to Sinai, or from Cairo to Hebron, better than any Arab engaged in carrying franjees and howadjis over the trackless sand.

Sheik Shomah Hassan was not so old but that he had a full complement of wives, who did pretty much as they chose when he was from home; but they were ruled much as he managed his camels, on getting—that is, they were fed, and sometimes abused.

On one of his returns, which was at an unexpected moment for his faithful household, the door was closed, the water jar broken at the threshold, and an old camel left to the care of his youngest helpmeet to be recruited was gone, and the inmates of the domicil also. Hassan made no entry among his neighbors, but hampered his camels, after unloading them, gave them a generous supply of food, and then set to work to enter the premises.

Hassan's slave, Gobah, had related the affair thus far, when the sheik laid down his pipe, stroked his flowing, grisly beard bowed towards Mecca, and said: "Franjees—all this is true, as related by the slave.—But he may make mistakes, or neglect to speak with reverence of the Prophet—blessed be the memory of the just, and I will therefore tell you myself of the wonders that belong to the land of the believers."

He took a long breath, raised his turban so that the air might cool his head, shorn the day before, crossed his legs anew, and again paid his respects to the point of compass indicating the direction of the Holy City, and then commenced. Gobah, the slave, put himself in a position to brace his feet, in case he should be frightened.

"With considerable effort, the lock gave way, and on entering, there stood the old camel staring me in the face. Kneeling out my hand to take the halter, it was gone. I then put my hand to his neck and gave the sound, cluck, cluck, to make him lie down, that a noose might be slipped over his nose, but he never moved.

"'Very well,' said I to myself, 'there is something in a bag that will bring you out of the house, if anything remains persuasive in barley.' I opened a sack and placed a generous mess in a skin and returned with the fodder—when lo, he had disappeared.

"The hour of prayer had arrived, so spreading a mat, and salaaming according to the directions of the book, I omitted nothing which the Koran demands. On rising and opening my eyes, there stood the camel directly over me, but immovable. Crawling out from under his huge body, avoiding his legs, and rising to my feet—he was gone! Not a trace had been heard—no one would hear him unless [illegible] save the working of the jaws of the hampered beasts.

"I now resolved to explore the interior of the house, and ascertain what this absenteeism of the whole family could mean.—On popping my head into the door, there stood the camel agin—still, apparently, as though he were made of stone. Looking again towards Mecca, the fountain of light, and repeating the following, which is confessing unlimited confidence in the protection of the Prophet, I boldly squeezed between his tall bony limbs, and thus got beyond him.

"Entering the harem, there sat all my wives on the divan, dressed gorgeously—fast asleep, but bolt upright. Touching Allem Bulee, the youngest—fair as a lily, sweet, too, as a newly plucked rosa, who cost me three hundred piasters of a Jew dealer, the camel screamed, but Allem moved not. What was particularly frightful, no effort of mine could remove her from that position! There the old camel stood in his place, repeating the horrible noise, which I was quite sure would be heard at a great distance, and attractor, somebody to the place.

"Next I tried to raise my oldest wife, the mother of a son now in the army of the pasha; but she was in precisely the same fixed position. At that juncture, it was first perceived that neither of the four were breathing. This discovery shocked me exceedingly. But arming myself with new courage by repeating the tabib again in a loud voice, they simultaneously opened their eyes!

"'Allah is great,' said I, 'and Mohammed is his prophet!' The words were no sooner out of my mouth, than nothing remained in the room but the divan on which they had been sitting and my solitary self.

"Night was fast approaching. A question came up in mind what it was best to do. There were either four enchanted women in the house, or none at all—besides a camel. On the whole, it was concluded there would be less disturbance with the working camels, outside, and therefore I enveloped myself in the housings, and sung-ed myself up by the side of one of them, for the sake of the warmth to be afforded.

"It was now dark, when everything was arranged for repose. But before closing my eyes, I went through with the prescribed, prayers under circumstances of peril. I had confidence in the security which a faithful Moslem has in the protecting arm of the Prophet. A Christian, under any manifestations of an evil spirit, has no such resource. With a conscience void of offence, and a resolution to live up to the tenets of my fathers had professed, I soon fell into a sweet slumber, which must have lasted till near midnight.

"Something was pulling at my toes, on awaking. I started up, when what should I see but the old camel with panniers slung on either side, and my four wives stowed away in them, two in each. A small Nubian slave sat on the front of the saddle, holding the halter. They all beckoned to me to get in, but said nothing. 'Very well,' said I to myself, 'a man has a perfect right to go with his own family. Had they been strange women, or the camel not my own property, I should have shaken my head in the negative. As it was, I clucked, when down fell the camel on his knees, but utterly refused to lower his haunches.

"It was excessively awkward to mount while he was in that ugly position. As for stepping into the panniers, that could not be done. Two was enough for any basket, were it ever so capacious, especially when they were women. To my amazement, the slave never offered to shift further back, beyond the hump, his appropriate place; nor did he attempt to make room for me by moving from where he ought not to have been."

Hassan emptied the ashes from his pipe and recharged it with the real Syrian stringleaf. This was an indication of being comfortable. Our impatience would hardly allow so much rest, or rather break in the narrative. We were anxiously waiting for the remainder. He resumed:

"Waiting for the slave to make room, but perceiving he had no intention of doing so, I caught up a courbash and gave him a terrible blow over the head. 'Moustibe!—slave,' said I, 'by the beard of Abu Talib, your body will be in two pieces if I strike again.'

"But the threat never moved a muscle of his face. My wives stared at me, but said nothing. Determined to be up to my word Ptook a sword which was always worn when travelling—for my indignation was boundless—and smote the black rascal. Instead of streams of blood or a carcase, they had all disappeared—slave, camel, wives and housings! This was a dilemma. I was convinced that the evil spirit Kourbras—the same that once tempted the mother of the Prophet—had been in these strange phantasmagoric changes.

"With this solution of the cause that was operating to try the faith, a new resolution animated me to resist his influences on myself. I therefore again turned towards the Caaba in adoration, and touched my head revere ntially three times to the ground—repeating at each the prayer against demons. Nothing can stand against that most efficient and sovereign antidote to witchcraft and demonology, like that solemn ceremony. Often the Prophet has answered the wicked attentions of black spirits, by resorting to the same excellent device, which might be recommended even to infidel dogs.

"A question arose to my mind thus:—'Where is the camel? where my four wives?' and answered myself in the words of Mesopotamia, and talked incessantly about a camel, a Nubian slave, and our inability to move. Nothing has happened to us or to the camel.' 'I assert,' that enchantment had been used—that what I have related was reality; but was obliged to confess, on the testimony of four witnesses, no one had been enchanted but myself—and the enchanter was confined in a bottle till a Christian let it enter my own stomach, when he took possession of my brain, as he does of your example correspond with your precepts—nor tempt the faithful to deal with enchantments which are imprisoned in bottles!"

Miscellany.

Punch touches off in capital style the merits of the present dispute between Britain and the United States. He presents a full length picture of John Bull and Brother Jonathan, face to face:

John is a stout, healthy individual, apparently well to do in the world, and has a decidedly comfortable air of his face, slightly tinctured with a sentiment of self-satisfaction. He has, moreover, a long sword by his side, spurs to his boots, and two good revolvers in his belt; while behind him, in the distance, are a pile of cannon balls, and a first rate fleet. Jonathan is a tall, thin individual, with a very peevish cast of countenance; wears an exceedingly rough hat; has a cigar between the fingers of his right hand and the thumb, to his mouth. He has neither naval nor military forces for his support, and is only armed with a cat-o-nine tails, which hangs from the pocket of his coat. His left hand is thrust deep into the pocket of his trowsers, and he obstinately refuses to remove it, notwithstanding that John is holding out his hand and saying, in the most cordial manner possible, "Come, Jonathan, why should we fight? Am I not a man, and a brother?" Jonathan looks mum and sulky; but it will be queer if he does not cave in at last; not because of his reciprocation of John's frank and hearty advances; but because he will finally think and calculate that a war with John wouldn't pay, no how."

THE GERMAN FOR PLATE.—"Good gracious, Anna, what is the German for plate?" "Teller," I replied, leaning over the stairs. "Tell her what?" not supposing that she had heard aright. "Teller," I answered back at the top of my voice. "How can I tell her, unless you tell me what to tell her?" she retorted in a tone that betokened she was gradually becoming heated; and, indeed, the weather was sultry. "Can't you hear me tell you to tell her, teller?" "That's just what I want to do; but how can I tell her unless I know what to tell her?" I was laughing so heartily that I could only shout out, "Tell her, teller." But fearing that my aunt might become exasperated, I ran down stairs, and for her edification uttered the magic word. Of course, the desired plate was produced, to her great amazement; but she good naturedly joined in my unexpressed merriment.—Autobiography of an Actress.

A colt brated hangman in England, in showing the gallows attached to Newgate observed to the bystanders that he had hung twenty persons on it at one time. Some one suggested that it was too small. 'Oh, no, bless you, twenty-five persons could swing on that comfortably.'

SCENE IN A GROCERY.—A little incident occurred in a family grocery, a day or two since, which could not fail to have been for himself, would have kept him in laughter for a week. A lean countryman entered the grocery, having in his hand a small basket of eggs which he desired to exchange for housekeeping necessaries.

"How many eggs today, Mister?"

"You will [illegible]

"Bout three dozen; how much d'yo give for eggs?"

"Ten cents a dozen."

"What only ten cents!"

"Yes; that's all we get ourselves."

"Wall, then, all I've got to say is, it's a shame."

"What's a shame?"

"Why, look a here, mister," and here the countryman patted the eggs affectionately, and viewed them as though they were the veritable product of the giant's golden hen—"Why, look a here. If you was a hen, wouldn't you think it mighty hard times if you had to lay eggs for only ten cents a dozen?"

The expression of countenance—the sincerity—the indignation—the evident opinion of the egg market in the country would soon go to ruin at that rate were inimitable; and the merchant, appreciating it justly, "shelled out" eleven cents a dozen for the product of the countryman's cackiers.

SURFACE OF THE MOON.—The Earl of Rosse, who has recently completed the largest telescope ever made, alluded, at a late meeting in London to its effects. He said that, with respect to the moon, every object on its surface of 100 feet in height was now to be seen; and he had no doubt that, under very favorable circumstances, it would be so with objects 60 feet in height. On its surface were craters of extinct volcanoes, rocks and masses of stone almost innumerable. He had no doubt that if such a building as he was then in were upon the surface of the moon, it would be rendered distinctly visible by these instruments. But there were no signs of habitations such as ours—no vestiges of architecture remain to show that the moon is, or ever was inhabited by a race of mortals similar to ourselves. It presented no appearance which could lead to the supposition that it contained any thing like the green fields and lovely verdure of this beautiful world of ours. There was no water visible—not a sea or a river, or even the measure of a reservoir for supplying town or factory—all seemed desolate.

ANOTHER EXHIBITION OF SOUTHERN CHIVALRY.—GENTLEMAN KNOCKED OUT OF THE METROPOLITAN.—About 12 o'clock, on Tuesday night, Mr. Bushford W. Vicks a would-be chivalrous son of south Carolina, boarding at the Metropolitan Hotel, took upon himself the responsibility of caning Mr. Jacob Stanwood of Massachusetts, also a guest of that house, for saying that the late assault by Preston S Brooks upon Senator Sumner was a cowardly and brutal affair. The two gentlemen it appears, were conversing amicably, to all appearance, together, when Mr. Stanwood made the above remarks. Offence at it was instantly taken by the Chevalier, who raised his cane, and brutally beat Mr. S. over the face and shoulders causing the blood to flow freely. Several persons who were present, interfered and seperated the parties, otherwise it is uncertain how the affair would have terminated.

Mr. Stanwood was conducted to his room, and a physician was procured to attend him

Vicks was arrested by officer Dunn, of the 14th ward police, and taken to the station house where he was accommodated with quarters for the night. The following morning, in company with other rowdies, he was brought before Justice Brennan, but as Mr Stanwood failed to appear against him, he was discharged from custody. It subsequently appeared that the injuries Mr. S. had sustained prevented his appearance at that time. Later in the day, however, he was conveyed to the 3rd district police court in a carriage, when he made a charge of assault and battery against the aggressor.—On this complaint a warrant for the re-arrest of Vicks was issued. He will doubtless be compelled to answer for his conduct at the Court of Sessions. It is to be expected that the "Brookes and Sumner" outrage, will be aped to some extent by small potato politicians in various parts of the country, their object being to gain a notoriety which it impossible for them otherwise to attain—a short residence in the Penitentiary would do such characters good, and have a tendency, even in the hot weather to cool their aspirations after fame.—N. Y. Cour. & Enq.

IMMIGRATION.—Within the last few days we perceive that a large batch of fine, fair, and healthy looking Irish girls have passed through our Town in waggons on their way to the residence of Stephen C. Fuller, Esqr., to whose care they were consigned, and where, upon their arrival, they were immediately waited upon and engaged at fair wages by the farmers in this vicinity.—They came from the northern counties of Leinster and, as servants, appear to be more than usually intelligent, and, in regard to their moral character, Captain Fuller informs us that they came well recommended from highly respectable families in Ireland. They have been sent out, we believe, by Vere Foster, Esq., a gentleman whose exertion on behalf of this deserving class of his countrywomen are beyond all praise.—Norfolk Messenger.

The Murder of Emma Smith—Return of Frederic Haynes—His Statement.

Frederic Haynes the supposed murderer of the girl Emma Smith arrived in the Bay City from from Sandusky 2 o'clock this morning, in custody of Officers Sprague and Eglington. As soon as the Prosecut. Attorney of Norwalk, Ohio, returned, arrangements were made to bring him back. Our officers who had had him on their arrest and except the Sheriff, there, were quietly at the Police office. Haynes was brought from jail for examination on the charge of breach of trust, no complainant appeared and he was discharged. He was then immediately arrested by our officers, and conveyed on board the cars which were just ready to start, and the trio were out of town forthwith. They took the steamer last evening and came directly through.

The history of Haynes' adventures after he reached Toledo are briefly these: He hired a horse and buggy of Dr. H. Jones of Toledo, pretending to him that he was in pursuit of a girl who had robbed him of $600. At Delta he sold the horse and buggy. He then went to Norwalk where he had formerly resided. There he borrowed $200 of a man named Fredenburgh and started for New York State, where his father-in-law lives and where he now has a wife and two or three children, and where he was arrested for stealing the horse.

This morning Justice Purdy went to the jail to allow him to plead to the complaint laid against him, and, it was understood that he desired to make a full statement of the whole matter, a number of gentlemen were invited to be present, among whom we noticed Rev. Mr. Kitch, Sheriff Howard, S. S. Barnard, and several others. The following is his full statement:

That I was the cause of her death I confess but not intentionally. The girl was killed by an accidental shot from the gun which took effect in the back part of her head, but as for her ever being killed or cut with an axe or knife, I do protest that she was not and I request that the body may be examined more closely. I do not recollect the day of the month, my mind is so confused. We had criminal intercourse in the woods. Before that, I had shot two or three birds which she had carrying, but had just before thrown them down. I was carrying the gun carelessly and it accidently went off as she being forward of me. She had broken her arm about previously in the lake bank and she had given it to me to carry. So I had the watch in my pocket. I think she had three finger rings. One of them I gave to the hostler at Howe's Livery stable and another to the clerk of the Garrison House. The third I threw away on the sidewalk on Jefferson avenue below Heron's stable.—These I took from her fingers; also two earrings from her ears. I thought I threw them away that night near Mary Maxwell's house, as you go up the steps while officers Eglington and Sprague were in the house inquiring if she was there. I took her bonnet and shawl and threw them out of the buggy, on a side road near the Chicago road before I got to the city. That was the the road I went out on.

The parsol I left in the buggy when we got out and it came back with the chaise, where I saw it the next morning, when I took it and went down to see the body again. Her body was in precisely the same position as when I left it the night before. The head was nearly all shot away in the back part. I took no article of her dress. The watch and chain I sold to a man in Toledo who keeps a small cutlery shop near the R. R. Bridge that goes over to the middle ground, for $15. I also remember now of taking off her body a large cameo breastpin, which I flung away near the body. I don't know whether she had money on her person or not—think not, for she told me that she sewed for her board and had no money to pay with. I didn't put my hands in her pockets at all. I then put the officers on a false scent, (as related in The Tribune before.) I went to Toledo the next day, and thence to Delta, Ohio, with a horse and buggy that I got out of Jones, of Toledo.

Thence I returned back to Toledo by the cars and thence to Cleveland by railroad stopping the night of the 3rd at my brother's at Camden, Ohio, and going on the following day. Thence I went to Buffalo by boat and thence by rail to Rochester. Thence to Dewitt, 3 miles below Syracuse, where my father-in-law, Rite Kinney resides where I was arrested by officer Kellogg of Norwalk, Ohio.

The accident was in this wise: After we had had guilty connection we started to get into the buggy, she being ahead of me. I picked up the gun, one barrel of which must have had its trigger set, and went off accidentally, whether by being caught in a bush or by being pressed by my hand I do not know. When she fell I dropped the gun and went to her and looked at her. I held the gun near the muzzle and was drawing it after me through the bushes. She fell on her back, her hands dropping by her side, and her eyes closed. I called her by name, but she gave no sign of recognition and I think she died instantly. It must have been about dusk when I returned to the city. I have no recollection of asking her to put on her best clothes and jewelery before we went out to take the ride. I had no intention whatever of committing a murder or of robbing her. Her handkerchief she had placed on the back part of her neck and bonnet at the time of the connection, and when the gun went off it flew from the bonnet a little distance.

I wish to make my peace with God, and to speak the truth before you, and I do declare that I had no intention of murdering her.

In answer to the questions he made the following additional statements: The day before, I rode out with a girl, and had some talk with her about her jewelry, and told her I thought it was galvanized, and she said perhaps it was. I borrowed five shillings before I went to Toledo, and I had twelve shillings besides.

I took a girl named "Maria" over to Canada to ride before this, and asked her if she made money living in a house of ill-fame, and why she staid in such a house, being so good-looking a girl.

I also took a girl from Harriet Sly's named "Jenny," and went over to Canada riding; I never asked her if Harriet had money. She wanted me to help her get a lot and because I would not she was rather against me.

My motive in concealing the accident was that I knew no sympathy would be shown me, and my story would not be believed.

This is the whole statement made in jail. Haynes' manner is very much troubled, and he frequently heaved a deep sigh, saying "Oh my God, can I be forgiven." He declared repeatedly that he was innocent of the crime of murder but said he knew there was no hope for him—that it was all over with him and he had no object to conceal the truth. Whether his statements are true or not, our readers can judge as well as we. As the matter now stands it is not our province to pronounce him either innocent or guilty.

Among a certain class there is a good deal of excitement and threats of lynching are freely made. This however will not be done. Sheriff Howard will provide amply against any such contingency. He will probably be examined next week.

Caution

A Cure with a Vengeance.—Some itinerating, speech-making scamp, says the Advertiser, has been peddling on the street corners for a few days past, an article which he recommended as infallible cure for warts," corns, &c. A number of young men have applied it to warts, and it has in most cases eaten the flesh clear to the bone. One young man, on whom the fellow applied it himself, is obliged to carry his arm in a sling, it being swollen from the effects of the application to nearly twice its natural size.—He will lose the use of his arm for a considerable time. In most cases it is found necessary to apply to a physician to stop the eating process of the compound. The stuff is made of nitrate of silver, prussic acid, and potash, articles of a poisonous nature, which physicians and druggists always use with the greatest care and precaution.

The Maple Leaf,

SANDWICH, JULY 31, 1856.

As announced last week in this paper, a requisition most numerously signed was presented on Saturday last to Col. John Prince, to allow himself to be put in nomination at the approaching election, for the office of Legislative Councillor for this Division. The number of persons who were assembled on the occasion, and their respectability and influence, go far to show that the result of the election will be in his favor. There were gentlemen from all parts of the Division present, and we are informed that a requisition numerously signed from the County of Kent will be presented to him, during the week. The Colonel has been brought forward as well by that County as Essex. This feeling is just what we would like to see carried out during the election The only other candidate that is in the field, is Mr. Boulton of Toronto; and we believe that his chances of success, at present, are so small that it would be almost useless to mention his name; but to those who have not decided already to which of the candidates they will give their support, we would advise that they pause ere their votes are given to an entire stranger to these counties, who can have no interest whatever in their welfare, and who is only seeking your support for the position that he would attain at your expense, and would, if he were elected, think no more of our interests than if we had never been known to him, and why should he? for he will have obtained his seat in the Legislative Council for the term of eight years, which will be equal almost to a life lease of office to him. Now what is the difference in the case of Colonel Prince? Why, all his property is situated, and consequently all his interests, lay within the two counties Essex and Kent, and we may reasonably suppose that he will exercise all his influence and energies to our advantage. With only these two gentlemen soliciting the votes of this constituency—and we have heard of no other, and believe that no other person will offer himself—there can be no possible doubt, that Col. Prince will receive a large majority of votes; and the electors support a man altogether unknown to them, when one residing within the Division is in the field, and in whom every confidence can be placed? We think not. It would be hard, indeed, if the two counties could not choose from among themselves a person fit and competent to represent them in the Upper Chamber.

The following is the Requisition and the Colonel's reply:

REQUISITION.

TO COLONEL JOHN PRINCE,
THE PARK FARM, SANDWICH.

Sir,—We, the undersigned electors of the County of Essex, having full confidence in you, as their old representative, for eighteen years, in Parliament, do hereby solicit you to allow yourself to be put in nomination as a candidate to represent the Western Division, (composed of Essex and Kent), in the Legislative Council of the Province of Canada, under the Act in force rendering a part of that body elective; and we promise to support you with our votes and influence.

REPLY.

Gentlemen,

I hope you will agree with me in the opinion that it is not necessary for me to say more upon the present occasion than that I sincerely thank you for the compliment you have this day paid me, and that I accept with pleasure and with gratitude your invitation to become a candidate for the very high honor of representing the Counties of Essex and Kent in the Legislative Council of this Province.

I assure you that I feel greatly flattered by this renewal of the confidence which you have, for so many years, reposed in me as a public man, and as your old and faithful representative in the Popular Branch of the Canadian Legislature; and when the proper time arrives, I shall have the honor of addressing the electors of those counties upon such topics as appear to me of importance to the welfare and good government of Canada.

Again thanking you for this especial mark of your favor and friendship towards me, I beg, gentlemen, to subscribe myself,

Your faithful Friend and Obedient Servant,
JOHN PRINCE.

From New Brunswick, we learn that the Prohibitory Liquor Law has been repealed by the Legislature by a vote of thirty-eight to two.

It will be remembered that the Governor General of that Province, a short time since, dissolved Parliament, in order to obtain an expression of feeling upon this question from the people. This measure was taken contrary to his advisers, it was thought by some that he had over-stepped his bounds by doing so; but such appeared to be the public feeling against the measure, that His Excellency was determined to give the people an opportunity of expressing their wishes, in the election of new representatives, and the result proved, that his conduct has been approved by the electors. The following is his speech at the opening of the new parliament:—

SPEECH:—

Mr. President, and Gentlemen of the Legislative Council; Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly;

I have gladly availed myself of the first opportunity of meeting you after having recurred to the sense of the people.

The Law which prohibits the importation and manufacture of, and traffic in intoxication liquors forms a subject for earnest deliberation, and I trust that a measure on this subject which will be submitted to you without delay by the Government, will receive at your hands the consideration which its importance essentially demands.

I do not doubt that your decision on this question, which so deeply affects the social and financial interests of the community, will be satisfactory to the people; and it will afford me the most sincere pleasure to find that the exercise of a power entrusted to me by the Constitution, has been productive of consequences so beneficial to the Province.

You may be well assured that I shall ever wish but to consult the general welfare, and by a uniform adherence to the principles of the Constitution, to uphold in their just supremacy the rights of the Crown, the Legislature, and thus to secure the maintenance of liberty and order.

I leave you to your deliberations with the heartfelt prayer, that Providence may bless them for the peace and prosperity of the Province.

On the House resuming, Mr. End brought in a Bill to provide for the expenses of the Legislature.

[The Governor retiring at this period, was greeted with three hearty cheers by the crowd assembled in front of the Assembly.]

☞ Among this week's advertisements will be found that of the "St. George Hotel," Avon Springs, in the State of New York. These Springs are visited by numbers from all parts of the continent to partake of the water, which has been found to contain medicinal qualities superior to any other yet discovered. And as a fashionable resort during the summer months, few, if any can compare with it. The St. George is the largest, and by far the best, hotel in Avon; and visitors to the Springs will find in Mr. Davis that gentlemanly and attentive bearing towards them, which contribute in no small degree to the enjoyment of pleasure-seeking people: the house is furnished and kept in the most magnificent style. Having ourselves partaken of the hospitality of Mr. Davis, we are enabled to recommend his house to the public with great pleasure.

To the Electors of the County of Essex.

Gentlemen,

As the time for the election of a Legislative Councillor is upon us, and as a Delegation scheme has been recommended by the present Member for Essex, which is now before us, and which strikes me as altogether anti-British, I will take the liberty, (with your permission, Mr. Editor,) to make a few remarks on it.

Caucuses, Conventions and Delegations may be all very well for our neighbors on the other side, who make a business of politics, and who have to be incessantly at it, for they elect every one, from the constable to the chief magistrate, but who ever heard of such a scheme in Canada? We have always been in the habit, when an election was to take place, of calling upon parties by requisition, to allow themselves to be put in nomination as candidates, which, in my opinion, is the proper way. They are then fairly brought out, and, to a certain extent, work on their own salvation.

Have we not Electors, (of late years, at any rate,) been able to nominate and elect their best and most fitting man to fill the Presidential chair? Certainly not. Influences are brought to bear which make it impossible or impracticable; and so it will be here if ever we adopt Mr. Rankin's plan.

It is recommended, I believe, that the Reeves of the different Municipalities should act as delegates. Now our Reeves are, generally speaking, about the best men of the Municipalities, because they are not elected on account of their politics or religion; but would that be the case if they were to act as electioneering delegates? No. We should soon be cut up into all kinds of parties, such as Clear Grits and Reds, Hard Shells and Softs, Barn Burners, Hunkers and Dough-faces; and while it is to be hoped that we should have no barn burners among us, yet I fear the latter class would predominate. Politics and other influences would be brought to bear at elections, and the consequences would be we could not get our best men in, we should have political counsels, and in fact, our whole social and political fabric would be upset.

Do not imagine, Mr. Editor, that I am opposed to the elective principle altogether; far from it. I admire our municipal institutions as at present constituted, and I think that the principle of election might be beneficially extended; but there should be a limit to the property qualification of those about to elect our Judges, which would be the greatest political evil that could possibly overtake us.

With respect to the meeting advertised to be held at Maidstone Cross on Saturday next, if it is expected to get an expression of the County there, at this particular season it must be a failure; for, in the first place, the County of Essex has already expressed its wishes with respect to its choice of a Legislative Councillor, in the requisition presented to Col. Prince on Saturday last; and in the next place, the farmers are not so easily gulled as to be drawn from the harvest fields to second the political views of any man.

Maidstone Cross is, no doubt, the most central part of the county, but perhaps it is not generally known that, to attend a meeting there, the people of Amherstburg, Malden and Anderdon must go round by Sandwich to get there; and the people of Colchester must go round by Gosfield, owing to the neglect of the Government, or of some other party whose duty it should be to press the Government to complete the road from Amherstburg to Kingsville Cross. How then can an expression of the County be got there at the present time? Yet, as there is a principle at stake, and as we are in the dark as to the real meaning and object of us (friends of Colonel Prince) as can make it convenient, attend. Pray excuse me, Mr. Editor, for occupying so much of your valuable space.

The Merrickville Mystery Solved.

The last number of the Merrickville Chronicle informs us that the missing girl, Eliza Lung, whose carpet-bag was advertised for which had been abused by some young ruffians in Merrickville, and had suddenly disappeared on the 21st May, called last week and claimed her property. From the first discovery of the mutilated body, the impression very generally prevailed that it had been exhumed from the grave by medical men for examination; and several graves were opened in the neighbourhood to ascertain if a body had been removed. An old woman resided near Burritt's Rapids suspecting that her daughter, who had died of a peculiar malady a few months ago, was the body found, Constable Dowdall of Merrickville, assisted by a son of the old woman, proceeded to open the grave. The Chronicle says:—

The first insertion of the spade in the smooth sandy soil, soon showed emphatically that the grave had been opened as the coffin only lay about fifteen inches from the surface and when first interred it had been lowered to the usual depth. On uncovering it, a portion of the lid was found to have been broken off and pierced with augur holes—the body was gone—but the shroud and the dead apparel, even to the white cotton stockings which were on the feet, remained where it had all there. The body found in the Rideau answers the description given by the family: and it may now be taken for granted that no murder has been committed. We, however, in the name of the people of Burritt's Rapids and Merrickville, demand that this matter shall be thoroughly investigated.

After some extended remarks on the horrible treatment of the corpse, and denying the necessity of such an expedient to satisfy the demands of scientific enquiry, the Editor concludes with the following apostrophe:—

What kind of a man must he be who has done this thing? Certainly such a one as we wish not rear our bedside in the hour of sickness. His must be a cold, unsympathising nature—unscrupulous in thought, word and deed. We would wish him near their family? But not only does he merit condemnation for an unheard-of butchery; he has exhibited other qualities which give him, if possible, a notoriety more ignoble. Who, with a spirit above that of an assassin, could coolly have contemplated the proceedings in the case of the man Stewart, and not have moved to his release? Had the time specified by the witnesses been any other day but that on which the "training" in the upper province was held, could he have proved an alibi? Most assuredly not. He might have rotted in a prison ere Adams, or the perpetrator of this outrage would have come to his rescue. Men having authority amongst us! we call on you, by every feeling sacred to the human breast, by the regard you have for those nearest and dearest to you, by the desire you have that the fame of the place in which you live shall not become as a stench in the nostrils of your fellow men, to investigate this matter and rid us of this monster. Who among you desires that on the petty whim of any morbid-minded mountebank, the graves of those you love should be rifled, their contents hacked and cruelly mutilated?

Last Days of the Allies in the Crimea.

Accounts from the Crimea state that for some days the embarkation of French troops was conducted with extraordinary rapidity, and on an extensive scale It still continued, but more slowly, owing to the small number of transports now lying at Kamiesch. All the English vessels laden with troops had sailed directly for England. Others were expected to receive the men still remaining there. The French lately had four cases of cholera, and the English two, but the disease was of a mild character. On the 9th of June General Lord Gough attended a grand breakfast given to Him, and the officers of his staff, by the Russian General-in-Chief. The greatest cordiality prevailed during the repast, which had been preceded by a splendid review of the Russian troops. The general afterwards visited the Russian hospitals. He left the Crimea on the 14th, and arrived at Constantinople on the 16th. Baja Clava, where the English were engaged in taking to pieces the ironwork houses they had established there, as also their huts, was to be immediately surrendered to the Russians. About half a mile of the railway remained to be removed. The English traders were also pulling down their iron and wooden houses. A number of Russian speculators had presented themselves to take advantage of the disasters of the European merchants. They had purchased the stock of Amherstburg, Malden and Anderdon must go round by Sandwich to get there; and the people of Colchester must go round by Gosfield, owing to the neglect of the Government, or of some other party whose duty it should be to press the Government to complete the road from Amherstburg to Kingsville Cross. Sir Colin Campbell in Glasgow.

A brilliant company assembled in the Glasgow City Hall on Tuesday, to do honor to Major-General Sir Colin Campbell. The Lord Provost, after an appropriate address, handed the burgess ticket to Sir Colin, enclosed in a handsome box of solid gold, amid great applause.

Sir Colin Campbell, on receiving the diploma, said—"My Lord Provost, ladies, and gentlemen, On arriving to-day in my native city, after an absence of upwards of half a century, it has become my lot to receive this civic honor, and it is also intended to confer another honor of a military kind. (cheers). These both coming from my townsmen, it is hard to say which I value most highly; I can say that I shall always be ready to draw the sword, about to be presented to me, in defence of my freedom. (Great applause.) I shall always value, as I ought to do, highly and gratefully, the manner of my reception to-day, and the great honor conferred on me. The recompense which I desire to give you is, in every possible way to do my duty to my country.

After a speech from Sir A. Alison, the learned sheriff presented the sword; the whole audience then rose to their feet, and gave three hearty and enthusiastic rounds of cheering.

Sir Colin Campbell said: Sir Archibald and fellow countrymen, I was quite unprepared for the eloquent manner in which this honor has been done me. (Applause.) I can never forget the reception I have met with on this occasion, and the honors which have been conferred on me, surpassing, in amount of recompense, all the services I have been able to perform. (Great cheering). There is another party who ought not to be forgotten on this occasion. I owe all this to my hardy veteran soldiers of the Highland Brigade—(cheers)—and to them is the honor due for what you have now conferred on me. This should not be forgotten, that these are conferred in their name as well as my own.—British Banner

Another Chapter in Blood.

The following letter, received by a gentleman in this city, from Kansas, speaks for itself:

BLUE SPRING, NEAR TECUMSEH, K. T.
June 24, 1856.

W. G. Sherwin—Dear Sir: We take this method of acquainting you with the sad fate of your friend.

Yesterday morning, we (my friend Rooks and myself,) were going to Tecumseh, but when about eleven miles from that place, we were appalled by the sight of the body of a murdered man tied firmly to a tree near the road side. He was tied with his back to the tree, with his hands and fee partially around it. He had been shot just above the left eye with—as we suppose—rifle ball. A huge hunting knife was sticking in his breast. It had been driven clear through him, and the point was two or three inches in the tree. He was evidently murdered yesterday or the day before.

There was a toad-stool tied to the knife handle, on which the following inscription was written: "Let all those who are going to vote against Slavery in Kansas—take warning."

We went to the nearest house—which was about a mile and a half, and got some help and some tools, and buried him. He was a stranger to all of us except Mr. More, who says he (the murdered man) had been boarding at his house eleven or twelve days. His name was Laben Parker, and came from Cleveland. He had repeatedly said, at the boarding house, that he "did not intend to resort to force, but so far as his influence at the polls went, he was going to use it to make Kansas a free state."

A company of armed men from South Carolina, have been staying around Tecumseh three or four days. A squad of them were down this road yesterday and the day before.

We don't any of us know where his relatives live, but among the papers in his pocket, we find a letter from you, written (to him) on the 6th of May, and that is the reason why we direct this letter to you.

An Extraordinary Feat of the late Tornado.—We can recollect a paragraph published in the Paris Star, with reference to the Tornado that lately passed over this place, stating to the effect that a shower of shingles and broken fragments of buildings had fallen in the vicinity of Paris on the evening of the Tornado. Extraordinary as the above may appear, the following throws it completely into the shade. We are informed by undoubted authority, that a portion of a large case somewhat larger than a common door, had been found in a field near Mudg hollow, inhabited George Alexander, Esq., Woodstock. On inquiry being made, it appears that Mr. Alexander had, on his premises, up to the day of the Tornado, a large case about 14 feet long, 12 feet wide and about four feet deep, used for the purpose of keeping hams, lard, which had not been seen since the Tornado. The inference is, that the whirlwind that scattered that gentleman's large barn to the winds, had caught up this case, and carried portions of it, at all events a distance of twenty miles depositing them in a field near Mudg hollow, Blenheim.—Sentinel.

BILIOUS DISORDERS AND THEIR CURE.

There is nothing can form so useful and efficient an aperient as the Bile itself, which has been admirably adapted by nature to supply the bowels in a state of health with the requisite stimulus; but when this has from disease become either deficient in quantity, or depraved in quality, medicines are justly entitled to consideration as the most effectual means of restoring a healthy secretion. Sir Astley Cooper's Anti-Bilious and Family Aperient Pills are all powerful in removing the distressing symptoms attendant upon Bilious obstructions, disordered state of the stomach and bowels—such as pains in the head, dimness of sight, sickness, oppression of the chest, lowness of spirits, with great apprehension of imaginary danger, and fear of sudden death, dissolution for active employment, and various other symptoms, at all times troublesome, and not unfrequently dangerous. By taking two or three of Sir Astley Cooper's Pills, the symptoms above described are speedily removed, an unusual degree of serenity pervades the mind, the stomach and bowels are restored to their natural functions, and returning vigor is the result; by taking one, two or three pills at bedtime, and repeated as occasion may render necessary, they operate pleasantly, without producing that irritation common to most advertised and powerful medicines, which too often augment the maladies they were intended to remove.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—Be sure to ask for the Genuine Sir Astley Cooper's Pills, prepared in London and New York, by Me-Phail and Co., and see that their signature is on each box and on the directions. Without this mark of authenticity they are certainly spurious and an imposition.

Sold at 25 and 50 cents per box, and in Family boxes at $1 each. There is a great saving by purchasing the larger sizes.

For sale by Simpson and Dunspaugh, Druggists, Toronto; John M. Thurston, Dundas; Andrew Oliver Galt; A. H. Cook, Brantford, General Agents, by whom Country Druggists and Merchants will be supplied at London and New York prices.

The Grist Mill is situated in the Township of Sandwich, and a portion of the Town Lots and the excellent House and Store are situate in the Town of Amherstburg; the remaining Town and Villa Lots in the Town of Sandwich, the County Town of Essex and on the beautiful river Detroit. The Wild Lands are situate in different parts of the County of Essex and are very valuable.

The Town Lots are large with fine broad streets, and close to the business part of the Town.

The Great Southern Railway Terminus will be within a very short distance of these Lots.

The Villa Lots have a most beautiful situation, being high and well adapted for gentlemen's residences, having a fine broad avenue laid out, on which they front; and are not surpassed in respect to beauty and position by any in the Province.

There are a greater number of prizes in proportion to the number of tickets to be sold than in any similar scheme yet offered to the public. The drawing will take place under the superintendence of a committee of gentlemen, to be appointed on the day of drawing by the holders of Tickets.

☞ Parties remitting to the subscriber one hundred dollars will receive a package of twenty-eight tickets in return.

AYER'S
CATHARTIC PILLS

OPERATE by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, and, by restoring their irregular action to health, correct, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first causes of disease. An extensive trial of them, virtues, by Professors, Physicians, and Patients, has shown cures of dangerous diseases almost beyond belief, were they not substantiated by persons of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Their excellence has been published in my American Almanac, which the Agents below named are pleased to furnish free to all inquiring.

Annexed we give Directions for their use in the complaints for which they have been found to cure.

FOR COSTIVENESS.—Take one or two Pills, or such quantity as to gently move the bowels. Costiveness is frequently the most aggravating cause of Piles, and the cure of one complaint is the cure of both. No person can feel well while under a costive habit of body. Hence it should be, as it can be, promptly relieved.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, which is sometimes the cause of Costiveness, and always uncomfortable, take mild doses—from one to four—to stimulate the stomach and liver into healthy action. They will do it, and the heartburn, bodyburn, and sourburn of dyspepsia will rapidly disappear. When it has gone, don't forget what cured you.

For a FOUL STOMACH, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take from four to eight Pills at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until activity and strength is restored to the system.

FOR SICK HEADACHE, SICK HEADACHE, NAUSEA, Pain in the Stomach, Rack, or Side, take from four to eight pills going to bed. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more the next day until they do. These complaints will be swept out from the system. Don't ever lose and their kindred disorders because your stomach is foul.

FOR SCROFULA, ERYSIPELAS, and all Diseases of the Skin, take the Pills freely and frequently, to keep the bowels open. The eruptions will generally soon begin to diminish and disappear. Many dreadful ulcers and sores have been healed up by the purging and purifying effect of these Pills, and some disgusting diseases which seemed to saturate the whole system have completely yielded to their influence, leaving the sufferer in perfect health. Patients! your duty to society forbids that you should parade yourself around the world covered with pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores, and all or any of the various diseases of the skin, because your system wants cleansing.

To PURIFY THE BLOOD, they are the best medicine ever discovered. They should be taken freely and frequently, and the impurities which sow the seeds of miserable diseases will be swept out of the system like chaff before the wind. By this property they do so much good in preventing sickness as by the remarkable cures which they are so making every where.

LIVER COMPLAINT, JAUNDICE, and all Bilious Affections arise from some derangement—either torpidity, congestion, or obstructions of the Liver. Torpidity and congestion vitiate the bile and render it unfit for digestion. This is disastrous to the health, as the nutrition is frequently undermined by no other cause. Indigestion is the symptom. Obstruction of the duct which empties the bile into the stomach causes the bile to overflow into the blood. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternately costiveness and diarrhœa, prevails. Feverish symptoms, languor, low spirits, weariness, restlessness, and melancholy, with sometimes inability to sleep, and sometimes great drowsiness; sometimes there is severe pain in the side; the skin and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow; the stomach sick; the bowels sore to the touch; the whole system irritable, with a tendency to fever, which may turn to bilious fever, bilious colic, bilious diarrhœa, dysentery, &c. A medium dose of three or four Pills taken at night, followed by two or three the next morning, and repeated a few days, will remove the cause of all these troubles. It is wicked to suffer such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

RHEUMATISM, GOUT, and all Inflammatory Forms are rapidly cured by the purifying effects of these Pills upon the blood and the stimulus which they afford to the vital principle of Life. For these and all kindred complaints they should be taken in mild doses, to move the bowels gently, but freely.

As a DINNER PILL, this is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has been made more effectual to the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

Deep Cultivation.

In a recent number of the Mark Lane Express, we find the following judicious remarks on the subject of Deep Ploughing as practised by the best farmers in England.

"When the prophet alludes to the divinely given wisdom which leads the ploughman to 'open and break the clods of his ground,' he characterized the operation of tillage in terms which the light of modern science and practice has enabled us more fully to understand. We "open" the ground not only to admit the seeds or to allow the free spreading of the roots of our crops, but to let in the atmosphere, the rains, and dews which impregnate the recesses of the subsoil with fertility. We "break the clods" not merely to favour the fine rootlets of young plants, but to expose an infinitely multiplied extent of superficies in the pulverized mould to the chemical action of the gases we call "the air." And the teachings of Jethro Tull, of Hunton Smith, and of Lois-Weedon Smith, the practice of Flemish farmers and vineyard cultivators abroad, and of market-gardeners, cottagers, and trench-ploughers at home, are all commentaries and illustrations developing the significance of the Hebrew's descriptive phrase.

And have we not a corroboration of the advantage of deep and minute tillage in the natural processes which are working around us? Have not we all seen the changed texture and productive quality of a weather-ed subsoil; seen the sterile clay from the deep drain moulder into manageable and wholesome soil under the culture of a single wintering: reminding us of the saying of Dr. Clarke, that "the frost is God's plough, which he drives through every inch of ground," pulverizing and fitting it for seed?

But to come to particular examples. Mr. Hoskyns has decided the practice of the vine-growers in Madeira, which forms a remarkable and striking lesson for us. The vine is not a native of that island; and after growing well for a few years, the fruit begins to degenerate, and makes inferior wine. The expense of new stocks being very great, as they are usually brought from the hock-vineyards of Germany, every expedient has been tried in order to postpone the evil as long as possible; but no manuring, or pruning, or fallowing, is of any avail; and the only remedy is found in deep cultivation. "I once happened,' he says, "to see the process. Nearly a score of laborers, hard at work, were standing in a long trench as deep as they were tall, stocking the earth from one side and throwing it up on the other. On inquiry, they told me they were trenching an old vineyard for fresh planting—trenching nearly six feet deep! Some months afterwards, a merchant in taking me over his wine stores, pointed out in some casks that were being broken up a mineral incrustation about as thick as a half-crown and as brittle as glass, which he called tartrate of lime; adding, that it was commonly deposited by the wine, especially when new. I afterwards ascertained that potash and soda existed in the deposit. Now these minerals are very deficient in the soil of the island. Here, then, was good reason for deep trenching. The vine, to supply its mineral wants, robbed the soil so fast of what little alkali it contained, that nothing but the opening of a great depth to the action of the roots would keep up the supply for many years; for the roots of delicate plants will not travel through earth that has never seen daylight."

The vegetable gardens which supply Covent Garden, and other markets of the metropolis, we all know, are not only profusely manured, but deeply tilled; and in many cases the subsoil has been dug up, in the gradual course of time, no less than four or five feet deep, to supply the waste of mineral matter to the soil above.

In certain parts of Flanders they have a peculiar mode of gradually deepening the staple by spade-trenching: trenches being dug between the lands when sown, and the subsoil thrown over the surface. They go about two inches deeper than the depth that has hitherto reached; and by shifting the trenches sideways each year, at the end of a certain number of years two inches of the entire subsoil became mixed with the upper surface, and the soil is thus deepened by that amount. In some places they have repeated a couple of inches deeper still; and after four or five courses of trenching, the land is brought to a depth of 18 or 20 inches of uniform quality.

In Jersey they use a trench plough, which follows in the furrow going deep, by means of a shelving mould-board raises the subsoil out of the furrow and throws it on the top of the just turned furrow-slice. This is done as a regular thing once at the commencement of every rotation—that is, at the breaking in to autumn for the next year's turnip fallow.

Now let us observe in these instances that the subsoil is not brought up in large masses to defy the disintegrating powers of reather and crushing implements; but a small portion of the cultivated staple buried underneath a great thickness of the lifted subsoil, and so placed out of reach of the young plants above; neither is the subsoil merely broken and stirred, and covered again immediately by the original staple, soon to coalesce again into its previous impervious condition: but it is simply mingled partially and imperfectly with the staple, as is the case in some descriptions of subsoil ploughing. But it is lifted bit by bit, a little at a time, and exposed in a granulated state openly upon the surface, so as to be subjected to the ameliorating agencies that are above ground.

And it is by appealing to long-known and well-established practices like those, that we can readily confute the objections which have been brought against deep-ploughing and explain the causes of failure in many cases of its trial. The secret of want of success in trenching clays and strong loams, wherever it has occurred, lies, we believe in the want of judgment exercised in performing the work. Clays, and loams in any poverty or badness inherent in the subsoil. If a man will bury his fertile and highly conditioned staple of four inches underneath half a-foot thickness of raw unmellowed clay—thus providing for his crops a bouquet of mineral food in abundance, but food uncooked and incapable of being digested by those fastidious epicures, young plants—can he expect an adequate and quick return of profit from the expensive process? But on the self-same kind of soil he knows there are cottage gardens in plenty, which are yielding richly and profitably to the deep-working spade and fork: and one of the main points in the matter has been that the deepening was gradual. Reason tells us that what the atmospheric influences, manurings, and the growth of vegetation have, in the course of time, made of four or five inches of a mass of clay, they can in the same manner make of several inches more; and this manner is by penetrating and commeating through the avenues opened by tillage. Of course, we ought not to be too well out in our expectations, or too extravagant in our descriptions of such a transformation; so that when a practical man states that we have gone deep and dreaded, the action of the air and water passing through it so alters the very nature of the strong yellow clays, that in a few months they will become a deep rich loam," we may challenge the accuracy and appropriateness of the terms employed.

At the Farmer's Club, Mr. Webster took this course; but in so doing he unfortunately went too far, and said that we might expose the strongest clays to the action of the sun and air for years "and yet they never alter." Quite true that after centuries of cultivation our tenacious clays have not been rendered into friable loams; but is not the thin staple which has been cultivated mellower and of freer texture than the untilled subsoil which it once resembled. And where the tillage has been slight, we cannot gainsay the change talked of; where it has gradually deepened the upper soil opened the subsoil by deep drainage, subsoiling, and trenching—there it is just as true that the land is made more workable, as well as richer and warmer. If any man's personal observation, or the instances we have adduced, are not sufficient to convince him, let him go to Lois-Weedon, and thrust his walking stick into Mr. Smith's fallow intervals, or witness the easy traction of his ploughs, while in the adjoining fields the horses are turning up a furrow four or five inches deep.

Singular Case of Absence of Mind in a Clergyman.—We find the following in the Meriden(Conn). Transcript:—"The paragraph which we published a week or two ago, giving an account of a remarkable case of absent-mindedness which occured in this town—a minister having gone into the desk of a neighboring church and conducted the services, supposing that he was in his own—having taxed the credulity of several of our out townspeople, we take occasion here to vouch for its entire correctness. Not only was the Rev. gentleman so absorbed that he walked into the wrong vestry, and into the desk of a different doctrinal faith, but he actually opened the meeting, and had proceeded some ways with the services before he discovered his error. Meantime brother No. 2 coming in found his desk occupied, and in a puzzled mood quietly took his seat with the congregation, determined to await further developments. "I fancy the pheelinks "of brother No. 1 when brother No. 2 arose and said that he had come with the expectation of presiding over the meeting as usual, but was happy to see his desk so well occupied, and that he came simply to endorse the remarks which his brother had just made. The congregation of brother No. 1, after waiting a sufficient length of time, concluded that from some cause they where in the predicament of the "sheep without a shepherd," and so appointed deacon to preside, and had an interesting meeting on their own hook.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,
AND JOURNAL OF SUBURBAN ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the United States.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced. The growing interest with which the rising generation view the science of Horticulture, renders such a Journal as "The Illustrated Horticulturist" imperatively necessary to the progress of Rural affairs.

Rural Architecture forms one of the principal features; each number contains from two to four engravings of model cottages, from designs by eminent and skilful architects. Space is also assigned to the tasteful art of Landscape Gardening, engraved plans of gardens in every style, and adapted to the peculiarities of different orders of architecture, beautifies the work.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and in all who can boast the sovereignty of a square rod of tillable earth, "The Illustrated Horticulturist and Journal of Suburban Art" will prove an invaluable companion. The first number of each month, commencing with July, 1856. The following gentlemen, eminent for their ability in the science of Horticulture, are engaged to conduct the Editorial department of the Journal:—P. Knight, James Snowden and D. W. Ray.

Terms: Two Dollars per annum, payable invariably in advance; a liberal discount to the Trade, Postmasters, and getters-up of Clubs.

Advertisements inserted at the rate of Ten Dollars per page.

N.B.—Newspapers inserting the above prospectus, and drawing attention editorially to the same, will be forwarded the Illustrated Horticulturist for one year, a copy containing the advertisement should be sent in all cases to ensure attention.

AGRICULTURIST

SUBSCRIPTION REDUCED FROM 25 TO 50 PER CENT.

The Canadian Agriculturist

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by its present proprietor in 1848, and is too well known to the leading farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us. The undersigned have made arrangements with the proprietor to publish the next, and probably succeeding volumes, and intended to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE
Illustrated with Engravings

Such as Farm Implements, Portraits of Animals, designs of Farm Buildings, New Inventions, &c., &c., interesting to the Farmer, and also portraits of some of the most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM MACDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the practice of Agriculture near this city. The active promoter of the various improvements made in our Agricultural Legislation since 1847, and who has been connected with this Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and writings in behalf of Canadian Agriculture are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to the Agriculturist as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to extend the correspondence on subjects of a practical kind.

The Farmer and the Counsellor.

A Counsel in the Common Pleas,
Who was esteem'd a mighty wit,
Upon the strength of a chance hit
Amid a thousand flippancies,
And his occasional bad jokes,
In bullying, bantering, browbeating,
Ridiculing and maltreating
Women or other timid folks,
In a late cause resolved to hoax
A clownish Yorkshire farmer—one
Who by his rough-and-ready gait,
Appear'd expressly meant by Fate
For being quiz'd and played upon.
So having tipp'd the wink to those
In the back row,
Who kept their laughter bottled down
Until our wag should draw the cork,
He smiled loosely on the clown,
And went to work:

"Well, Farmer Numscull, how go calves at York?"

"Why—Sir, as they do we you.
But on four legs instead of two."

"Officer!" cried the legal elf,
Piqued at the laugh against himself,
"Do pray his evidence down below there.
Now look at me, clown, attend,
Have I not seen you somewhere, friend?"

"Yees—very likely—I often go there."

"Our rustic's waggish—quite incomparable!
The counsel cried with grin sardonic;
"I wish I'd known in a prodigy,
To a witness of such fun."

"On circuit was at York residing."

"Why no, Sir, no; we've got our share,
But not so many as whom you were there."

Now, Farmer, do for once speak true,
Mind, you're on oath, so tell me, you
Who doubtless think yourself so clever,
Are there as many fools as ever
In the West Riding?

A Fortunate Adventure.

A poor comedian, who had filled all the parts in prominent theatres from the huskined hero to the penniless, found himself, after, twenty five years absence, driven to Paris to find employment in his declining years.

Some one had given him a letter of recommendation to the theatre for vaudevilles at Paris, and he was seeking it with the modest view of finding employment in some third or fourth rate class of characters, and with very humble professions as to salary. Having spent the way bidden, he was told he would find it at the bottom of the street, pointing out to him the Rue Vivienne. At the end of the street, in the place indicated, the comedian stopped astonished before a magnificent structure.

"What a splendid theatre! thought he. "Alas! too fine for me. Doubtless they demand talents here proportioned to this magnificient structure—and I, poor fellow, shall probably meet with a contemptuous repulse."

The poor man had mistaken the Bourse for the Vaudeville. The imposing aspect of the building, with its forest of columns, frightened him, and he scarcely felt the power of performing even the wretched parts he had at first aspired to. However, he mechanically advanced, and at the entrance whom he should he meet but a former companion in the orchestra of the Bordeaux theatre.

"Ah, is that you?" exclaimed the Bordelais, grasping his hand with warmth.

"Yes, indeed," replied the comedian ironically.

"And what are you doing here?"

"I have come to try my fortune."

"Take care—this is a dangerous place—take my word for it. Do not venture here, but seek somewhere else a fortune less sudden but more sure."

I was just thinking so myself! The country was a worse income, would be just to my taste

"And then you could not but succeed for you have talent, and the public of Bordeaux have given you the stamp of the approval. Do you remember how they used to applaud you? that people so full of enthusiasm?"

"Ah! that was in my palmy days! It is now seven years since that time. I was then in my full vigor, and I know that I did well enough in comedy; and in the character of financier, I can say without vanity that I was not surpassed. Indeed I am still the most skilful, the most perfect financier that has ever appeared at Bordeaux!"

While the other player was thus eulogizing with all the candour and sincerity of a real artist, who announced something important to him. The bordelais immediately took leave of his friend the player.

"Adieu," said he, "business compels me to leave you, but if you would lend assistance in any operation, here is a gentleman who will attend to your business effectually."

Then addressing the broker he added—

"I recommend this gentleman to you as a man of talent, and the most skilful and accomplished financier in Bordeaux."

Saying so, he left the theatre in haste, almost the words of the comedian, he withdrew. The broker, thinking from the title financier that he was addressing a rich speculator bowed respectfully, and said.

"Sir, I am happy to offer your my services."

"It is I who shall be obliged, Sir," replied the player.

"If you please to accept me as your intermediatory, I hope you will find reason to be satisfied."

"Monsieur is agent!"

The Comedian meant dramatic agent, the broker agent in the stocks, so the conversation continued with a mistake on both sides.'

'Agent? not exactly, I am a broker.'

'No matter, it amounts to the same thing.'

'True. Do you wish to act then?

'That is my great desire.'

'Very well! I think I can direct you successfully. I am perfectly acquainted of the state of affairs, and I have some influence at the bourse.'

'I have no doubt of it, Sir; you have my entire confidence, and I trust all my hopes of success to you.'

'The present movement is very decided, Funds are very low.'

'Alas! yes! low enough. Most business operations are brought to a stop.'

'It is necessary then, to base our proceedings upon this state of things.'

'Yes, indeed, we must proceed accordingly.'

'You have already lost, I suppose, by the downward movement?' Well, it is not surprising—the most skilful have suffered by it, but you will regain.'

'So much the better. We shall be sure to act according to circumstances. Have your views taken any particular direction? I am inclinded to think the North well suit you?'

'Perfectly. I have already acted there with some success.'

'Well, I will operate on the North then. How much shall we act on what figure shall we fix.'

'Ah! that is the difficulty.'

'Two thousand francs. Would two thousand answer.'

'Yes, indeed, two thousand francs is quite enough.'

While the broker was putting down in his memorandum book two thousand in the Northern line, to sell on his client's account, the Comedian was saying to himself: 'a good engagement indeed! the Northern Department, the theatre of Lille, and two thousand francs! I could not have hoped better.'

The broker continued, 'we have still Lyons and Strasbourg that offer some chances. Would you like to try there?'

'Oh! with all heart. If we do not succeed on one side, we can turn on the other. We should alway shave more than one string to our bow.'

'I shall set you down then for Lyons and Strasbourg. Say a thousand again each?'

'Yes, let us stick to that figure.'

'Shall you remain long at Paris?'

'I shall go to Lille as soon as possible. You would like to realize soon then?'

'I acknowledge I should.'

'Not a month by settlement, then, but cash down.'

'That's the thing! let it be cash down! (A wonderful man this truly!)'

'Well now that is settled, I will leave you to attend to the business, unless you prefer to accompany me?'

'There is no need of that; I should prefer taking a walk.'

'Very well; you will find me here at three o'clock, or rather I will do myself the honor of calling upon you.'

'Oh, by no means: It is I that will have the honor of calling upon you, to see the result.'

'And we will settle it all at the interview. Here is my card. Adieu till we meet again.'

A very natural anxiety brought him back to the house at about the present hour. 'Time he not again his first Bordeaux acquaintance.

'What, is it there again. Well I see you are really a speculator.'

'I not at all! I am the most fortunate fellow in the world—I am soon to have an engagement for which I shall be indebted to you!'

'Indeed!'

'Yes; a first rate engagement either at Lille Lyons, or Strasburg, with a salary of two thousand francs. Oh, how much I am obliged to you for introducing me to this agent. His knowledge of affairs is wonderful, and seems sure of his place.'

'My dearest whom can you be speaking of?'

'Why, of the gentleman you introduced to me a short time ago in this very place.'

'But you speak of a theatrical agent—and this gentleman is a broker who deals in railroad stocks.'

'Come, come, you are joking, we talked about theatres and engagements more than twenty minutes.'

The other, on making him repeat the conversation word for word—soon understood the mistake.

'Well, my dear sir, you are much more fortunate even than you anticipated. The broker his understood, literally, the financial character I spoke of, and has made a large operation in stocks for you.'

'An operation for me—who has not a sous!'

'Oh, that is often done here. You are not the only one who speculates without money. Credit is all that is necessary—and that my recommendation give you.'

'But I may lose.'

'Do not be alarmed, funds were down—and you have gained. Nobody is wronged. This is done here daily. So receive the good fortune Providence has sent you.'

The player and his friend repaired to the Broker's office, who presented him an account showing a balance in favor of twenty-five thousand francs.

'To morrow, sir, said the Broker. 'I shall be happy to receive your orders again, for I presume you mean to pursue this good fortune.'

'No, indeed! I have no wish to abuse fortune's favors, I will stop at this.'

Twenty thousand francs gave him a life annuity of one hundred louis, a sum generally considered sufficient for a bachelors. A moment's mistake had done more for him than years of hard labor.

Diving for the "Atlantic's" Safe.

Some interesting facts connects with the Atlantic have been furnished the Cleveland Herald by Mr. E. P. Harrington of Westfield, New York, the diver who went down to the vessel. From the lengthy statement we condense as follows:—In this undertaking there were associated with him Martin Quigley and Chas. O. Gardner, of Chautauqua Co. N. Y., and Wm. Newton of Detroit. They sailed in the Schooner Fletcher to the locality where the Atlantic was sunk, arriving there June 18. The next day Mr. Harrington, encased in Wells and Gowan's sub-marine armor, made his first descent. This armor is made of two layers of canvass and one of India Rubber, the rubber occupying the middle. It is loose and flexible, and of course admits no pressure. From in front of the mouth proceeds a tube composed of nine alternate layers of canvass and rubber with a copper wire coiled inside to prevent collapse.—This is flexible too, and being as long as the depth to which the diver goes, and the upper end being in the open air, secures proper ventilation. The aperture in the armor through which the diver descends has previously been dropped and rested against the side of the steamer

Dressed as above described, with leaden shoes and with lead weights attached to his body, amounting in all to 248 lbs., with a rope around his waist, by which he could be raised to the surface, with a check-rope signal line in his hand, the adventurous diver commenced his first descent. He was governed by the wreck line, and struck the promenade deck about 40 feet aft the state-room where the Express Company's Safe was, which was in the third cabin aft the wheelhouse on the larboard side. He remained on deck but one minute. After descending from 30 to 70 feet, depending upon the clearness of the sky above, all is dark to the diver and he is governed entirely by feeling.

During the four days he made six descents to the Atlantic, remaining on board of her periods of from four to eleven minutes each. It was not until the third day, upon which he made seven dives, that he succeeded in getting the safe on board, during which he succeeded in breaking a hole through the wood work and getting a line fast to the ring of the safe, but found the aperture too small to admit of the passage of the safe. The next day he, by the aid of a saw, managed to attach a rope to the part work and enough to the woodwork above detected it. The safe was then raised.

The Atlantic lies careened, her larboard side 175 feet, and the safe was about 87 feet from the surface. Upon her deck, Mr. H. found a light sediment of three or four inches deep. He could, as we have said above, see nothing, and encountered nothing but the wood work, chains, glass and the chest. The water was chilly, and Mr. H's hands were so benumbed he could not keep feeling around the glass from the wood. It was only by the former's breaking that he knew his material. He thinks his strength when below was not more than one-tenth that he has when in open air. He judged but little from pressure except by the fact that when he was at the rush of blood to the head, that as he says, he saw bright flashes in his helmet, like electric sparks."

Miscellany.

YOUNG MEN IN STORES.—If a table was made up which would comprise the history of this numerous and important class, the reverse would indeed be the gravest attention among those to whom the shaping of [illegible] was lately made out of the history of few young men springing from a particular class who entered into business in a large and respectable wholesale house in a single twelvemonth about ten years ago.—Out of these ten, three became drunkards in good and a small fortune was made in the streets of that village, when his clothes took fire. He had — light loose clothing, and becoming alarmed ran towards home, the wind in the mean time fanning the blaze. Persons near by who saw the occurrence tried to overtake and stop him, but without avail. When he reached home, a short distance, his head was enveloped in flames which could not be subdued by his frantic mother until he was awfully burned. She was badly burned in her efforts to save her child. The little sufferer lingered till Saturday noon, when death came to his relief.

CANADIAN OCEAN STEAMERS.—Our advertising columns announce the sailing of the first class screw steamer Chester from London for Montreal on the 23d inst.—to be followed by other screw steamers at stated times, if sufficient encouragement is given.—It is gratifying to find that private enterprise is adding to our means of communication with Europe, and we doubt not the result will prove that there will be ample employment for all the steamers that may be placed on the route. We observe that there is a movement on foot, at Montreal, having for its object the obtaining of a weekly instead of a fortnightly line from Liverpool, and with that view it is proposed that the Provincial Government should increase the subsidy from £20,000 to £100 000. If private enterprise should provide another line, as a matter of course it would be unnecessary to consider that project.—Globe.

His Excellency, the Governor General we understand, leaves Toronto to day by the Passport, to make rather an extensive tour. The people of Kingston, Ottawa, Montreal, and Quebec, are all making preparations for giving His Excellency a becoming reception. It is said he will visit also St. Thomas and the Saguenay, and extend his trip as far as the Baie Chaleur.—Globe.

THE QUEEN'S ADDRESS TO THE GUARD.—Her Majesty, with her usual consideration and tact, has been speaking to this division of the household troops on their return from the Crimea. The words are simple and to the point, and appear to have made a deep impression on the gallant men. The scene and speech are thus given:—

The Queen's carriage thrown open, and her Majesty, who wore a riding habit, and in her hat a military plume of feathers, rose amid breathless attention, and spoke as follows:—

I wish personally to convey through you to the regiments assembled here this day, my hearty welcome on your return to England in health and full efficiency. Say to them that I have watched anxiously over the difficulties and hardships which they have so nobly borne; that I have mourned with deep sorrow for the brave men who have fallen for their country; and that I have felt proud for that valor which, with their gallant allies, they have displayed on every field. Thank God that your dangers are past. I feel sure, from your services be again required, you will be animated with the same devotion which in the Crimea has rendered you invincible."

UNPLEASANT NIGHT.—The day after the apparition of the Yankee at Her Majesty's levee in a black cravat, the English Funds actually declined. A correspondent draws from the fact the following moral: The "ties of the two nations must be extremely loose, when "cravats" can thus affect the "stocks!" —Punch.

QUICK WORK.—The Louisville, Ky. Courier says, the wife of a well-known draymen in Covington, died one day last week. The next day the bereaved man married a new wife and took her to the dead wife's funeral.

THE FIRST QUAKER PUN.—Not long since a friend, who rejoiced in the name of Constant Reader, proposed with the bundle of rods with which King Strang last winter, ordered the two men flogged, who subsequently shot him. The scourge is made of beech, birch, and maple sticks, about seven feet in length, and five in number, each of them about half an inch in diameter at the butt, and all tightly bound together by strings. With this terrible instrument of flagellation poor Bedford was scourged, upon the bare back, and the sticks are bent twisted and splintered by the force of the blows delivered. It was presented to that poser by an United States officer who procured it on the spot.

A FITTING REWARD.—When Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, shortly after ascending the throne, conferred the honor of Knighthood upon Col. MacNab, the Men of Gore looked upon the most distinction thus conferred, as a tribute not only to the loyalty and worth of the man who had led them in defence of their country, but also as an acknowledgement of the service they themselves had rendered. Years have passed since then, and it affords us the most pleasing gratification to be enabled to state that Her Majesty has signified her intention of adding to that honor by an additional mark of her Royal pleasure. The friends of the gallant Knight will be glad to hear that in consideration of the long and arduous services rendered to Canada, Her Majesty has expressed a desire of conferring a Baronetcy upon SIR ALLAN NAPIER MACNAB.—Spectator.

SAD AFFAIR AT NIAGARA FALLS.—The Niagara Falls Gazette says a little boy, aged about six years, son of Mr. McDonald, was playing with other boys, on Friday, around a small fire which had been made in the streets of that village, when his clothes took fire. He had — light loose clothing, and becoming alarmed ran towards home, the wind in the mean time fanning the blaze. Persons near by who saw the occurrence tried to overtake and stop him, but without avail. When he reached home, a short distance, his head was enveloped in flames which could not be subdued by his frantic mother until he was awfully burned. She was badly burned in her efforts to save her child. The little sufferer lingered till Saturday noon, when death came to his relief.

GOLD WEIGHED BY MACHINERY.—One of the most interesting and astonishing departments within the whole compass of the Bank of England, is the weighing department, in which, with the rapidity of thought a precision approaching the one-hundredth part of a grain, the value of gold coin is determined. They are six weighing machines and three weighers to attend them. Large rolls of sovereigns, or half sovereigns, are placed in grooves, and are at a time, by the motion of the machine, put into the scale. If they are of the right standard weight, they are thrown by the same mechanical intelligence into a box at the right hand side of the person who watches the operation; if they have lost the hundredth part of a grain, they are cast into a box on the left. Those which passed the test are put forty bags of 1000 each, and those below par cut by a machine and sent back to the mint.—London Times

GOVERNOR'S RECEPTION AT KINGSTON.—A telegraphic despatch from Kingston says:—An enthusiastic reception was given to the Governor General, and a great dinner afterwards. His Excellency made a good speech. An attempt was made, in Committee of Arrangement, before the arrival of the Governor, to exclude the toast of "The Ministers." It was put down. The toast was well received, and was responded to by Attorney-General Macdonald.

The Census of Hamilton.

The census of the "ambitious little city" was recently ordered to be taken, and as we learn from the Spectator, has resulted favorably. Our cotemporary says that some were sanguine enough to set down "the actual number at 25,000, but that was rather more of an increase than could have been expected—7,000 in two years. The following return will show the increase in the population during the last eight years:—

In 1848	9,889
" 1851	14,112
" 1854	18,596
" 1856	21,855

"The above shows that the increase since 1854 falls little short of the increase from 1851 to 1854. It must also be taken into consideration that the G. W. Railway added considerably to the census by the floating population between 1851 and that period. On the whole, the returns go to show a gratifying increase in the past two years, and there is little reason to doubt that two years hence the total number will reach over 25,000."

While we heartily congratulate the sister city on an approximate population of 22,000 souls, yet it is fairly claimed in behalf of London that it has now entered the race for the position of the second city in Upper Canada. True it is that this city is still little more than 5,000 behind, but if the ratio of increase is maintained, which has been current since 1852, when it had a population of only 6,735 at the time that Hamilton numbered 14,112, it will not be very long before London will be able to count heads with Hamilton. It is now confidently asserted that there are over 16,000 persons dwelling here, which exhibits an increase of 9,300 during four years, while the increase of Hamilton, during that period, has been but 7,743. At the political dinner held on Tuesday, a member of the Administration expressed his astonishment at the rapid growth the city is making, and referred to the piles of building materials which are collected together at almost every corner. Mr. J. A. Macdonald said that "there was not to be wondered at, seeing that all Londoners were 'bricks' themselves," a piece of pleasantry which was, of course well suited to the occasion. But while the progress of Hamilton has been stimulated to a great extent by the Great Western, the effect of the Grand Trunk and the Port Sarnia roads has yet to be developed here. How far the anticipations that have been formed will be realized, we do not know, but that they will not be belied. In a case like this we may all take courage, feeling certain that our progress here will yet be accelerated, and eventuated in the achievement of no small things.—London Free Press.

The Minister of Agriculture has performed a duty which the public had reason to expect the Crown Lands' Department to do. The advertisement of wild lands published in our yesterday's edition, will create an interest altogether new in the partially explored districts of the country. The names of "Hastings Road," "Addington Road," and the "Ottawa and Opeongo Road," without some explanation as to their location and the easiest means of reaching them, conveyed but very confused ideas to the class most directly interested. A thousand enquiries would have to be made; because, in nine cases out of ten the persons interrogated would be unable to give the required information. The Minister of Agriculture has put the needed information into a concise shape; and, in addition to the publication it has already received, we believe it will be circulated in pamphlet form. An idea of the character of the lands thus offered to the acceptance of actual settlers is also given. This was the more necessary because the part of the country in which they lie is scarcely known at all to the residents of the old settlements; and it is always the case, in similar circumstances, the most contradictory rumors were circulated as to the nature of the soil and its capabilities for farming purposes. It is therefore important to know, from an official source, that the lands thus opened are capable of producing even winter wheat, with such other descriptions of produce as are generally grown in the Province.

After all that has occurred, if any section of the population, requiring land for settlement, should fail to avail themselves of the offer of free grants now made, it will be their own fault. The information regarding them is now circulated far and wide, among all classes of the population; and if there is no possibility that any class should be left in ignorance of the offer. It is obvious that the first comers must be first served; and therefore those who intend to avail themselves of the offer of free grants, will not suffer unnecessary delay to take place in making application in the right quarter.

The free grants will, from their position on the great leading roads, ultimately become the most valuable in the district of country in which they lie. That is one consideration that must weigh with many; and it may cause some settlers of a better class to accept grants which they would otherwise reject. After a country becomes settled, the lands lying on the main roads are always more valuable; because they enjoy the advantage of the best facilities for reaching market. The country along these great govern ment roads may now be an unbroken forest; but a few years will put a new face on matters. Those who live here thirty-four or thirty-five years remember when in the township of Eramosa there was an unbroken forest where now a series of fine cultivated farms, decked with excellent orchards and good stone houses. And what the best part of Eramosa is to day the roads now opened will be in less time than it has taken the former to come up to its present position; because we have a large population and progress faster than we did a generation ago. This reflection, this anticipation will cheer the heart of the settler and nerve him to the great life-battle with rugged nature. Independence is the goal at which he is aiming, and he is buoyed up and animated by the reflection that by labor and perseverance he will ultimately be enabled to reach the wished for destination.—Leader.

Loyalty of Canada.

Dr. Bartlett, formerly editor of the New York Albion, but now one of the proprietors, and editor of the Anglo Saxon, published at Boston, lately visited Canada, and has returned home with a firm conviction of the loyalty of its inhabitants. The following is an extract from an article published in a late number of his paper, and will serve to shew the impression received by the Dr during his visit to this province:—

"Those who talk so glibly of war with England fail not to assure us that the conquest of Canada and other British Colonies on this continent is a matter of easy achievement, for, say they, Canadians are ready to join us, and if they are not, we can speedily overrun them, now that we have grown so powerful, and our "manifest destiny" become so certain. Never were notables so preposterous, or so easy of refutation, if persons have eyes to see and ears to hear.

A recent visit to Canada by the writer of this article has not only tendered to confirm him in the potency of his belief in the loyal and attachment of those fine provinces of Great Britain, but, it has inspired him with the strongest conviction of their ability to defend themselves, and to protect their soil from every invader. Those who view Canada through the long vista of the past, forget that she has of late years grown with great strength—that vast forests have been cleared and that the soil is now covered with an active, hardy and vigorous population; they forget that villages have become towns, and that small towns have become great cities —that lofty spires and noble buildings, of magnitude and strength everywhere prevail, over which floats the meteor flag of England with all its inspirations and all its glory.

After a peace of forty years, during which Great Britain and the United States have advanced in science and civilization with a rapidity unknown to other nations, the thought of war between two such countries afflicts humanity, and pierces the heart to the core; but the hostile spirit that has of late manifested itself—the insults that have so needlessly been offered to England, and the general tone in society lead us to fear that that great calamity is not impossible. Such being the case it behoves all those who yet cling to the hope of peace, to use their best effort to that end, and perhaps this cannot be better done than by disabusing the public mind of a pernicious belief in the easy conquest of Canada."

Stocks.

Bank of Montreal.—Old was sold at 10½ premium, in the early part of the week; it has since been taken freely at 10½; to-day holders ask 11 per cent. New has been taken at 11 per cent premium.

Commercial Bank, M. D.—Without variation; the business of the week very limited.

City Bank.—Both Old and New are held at 1½ premium.

Bank of Upper Canada.—No buyers in market it is offered at 2½ discount, without leading to business.

Banque du Peuple.—Inquired for at par; demand light.

Montreal Mining Consols.—Could be obtained to a small extent at 9s 9d; there is an unwillingness on the part of holders generally to sell at anything like this figure.

Champlain and St. Lawrence Railroad.—Quite inactive.

Champlain and St. Lawrence Railroad.—7 per cent 2nd Mortgage Bond.

Great Western of Canada.—Would find buyers if offered at our quotation.

In other Stocks.—Nothing doing.

Exchange.—Bank is reduced to 10 per cent; private is consequently low.—Chronicle and News.

The Late Commander-in-Chief and the Army.

The following "general order," dated Horse Guards, July 15, 1856, has been issued:—"Field-Marshal Viscount Hardinge having been compelled by the state of his health to tender to the Queen his resignation of the command of the army, which Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to accept, desires to record his deep sense of the conduct of the troops, and the obligations he is under to the general and other officers for their uniform support while he has had the honour and happiness to be at their head.

On assuming the command of the army —succeeding, as he did, the greatest commander which this country has produced— Viscount Hardinge felt the weight of the duty which by Her Majesty's favour, was entrusted to him; but he confidently relied on the zealous exertions of its officers to maintain it in that high state of discipline and efficiency, for which it had ever been distinguished.

A period of war ensued, and it was then seen how fully this confidence was justified. After a long peace, a British army took the field, unsurpassed in any of the qualities required of soldiers Under a leader whose loss has been deplored by the Sovereign, the army, and the country, a series of victories was achieved which shed an additional lustre on the British arms.

The instructions for the conduct of the war, and Her Majesty's thanks to the troops during its operations, have been according to invariable custom, conveyed to the army in the name of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for War. Her Majesty's sentiments have on all these occasions been expressed with great force and truth; but Lord Hardinge cannot on this occasion deny himself the satisfaction of recording his conviction that at no former period of the military history of this country has the devoted conduct of the troops been surpassed. Their soldier-like qualities stood the test of a siege carried on through a rigorous winter, and for eleven months of open trenches.

The valour and perseverance of that gallant army, and of its brave allies, were at length rewarded by the capture of the enemy's fortress, and the attainment of an honourable peace.

While the Field-Marshal records his admiration of the conduct of the troops who took part in that great achievement, he desires to convey to the army at large his thanks for their zealous obedience and devotion, and to express the regret with which he separates himself from them. Viscount Hardinge can only add the expression of his sincere gratification that the command of the army is, by Her Majesty's pleasure about to be assumed by General his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, K.G. G.C.B., the illustrious Prince whose name is associated with some of the most splendid triumphs of the war just concluded, and whose devotion to the interests of the service is so well-known.

Arrival of the Atlantic.

The steamship Atlantic, arrived at 5 p.m. with Liverpool dates to July 23.

The steamer Asia arrived out on the 21st July.

The news relates mainly to the outbreak of civil war in Spain. The statements respecting its progress and prospects are very conflicting; it would appear that O'Donnell had previously prepared to crush any manifestation, and was assembled in and around Madrid 18,000 troops against the force of the National Guards, the citizens held their ground for 30 hours, but at length gave in and were disarmed; 200 persons were killed in the encounter. At latest dates Madrid was tranquil, and Paris was supposed to be within the city under arrest. At Barcelona and elsewhere there had been several smaller outbreaks, but they were speedily suppressed. The head quarters of the insurrectionists was at Saragossa, where Espartero's friends had gained a victory over the garrison. The citizens had assembled, and proclaimed Liberty and the Constitution.

The Emperor of France had ordered a French force to assemble on the Spanish frontier, as a measure of precaution.

The difficulty between Spain and Mexico has been honorably settled.

The British news unimportant.

Parliament will adjourn about the 30th. The large failures alluded to in the last steamer's news were those of John Munn, Cotton Broker, Liverpool; John Wright & Co., Spinners, Stockport; L. A. Law, Commission Merchant, Manchester, and 4 other houses. The liabilities were all large and the assets small.

The Atlantic left Liverpool on the p. m. of the 23rd and brings upwards of sixty passengers.

The reports of the riot at Aldershott have been greatly exaggerated.

Spain.

The latest accounts states that the Cortez had moved a regiment under Gen. Infante. They intended to make war upon Queen Isabella and her Ministry in the name of liberty and the constitution.

The London Times and other papers say the insurrection was encouraged by the O'Donnel party.

Espartero was very strong in Aragon, which is the stronghold of the liberals.

It is believed that Gens. Divera and Falconried are partisans of Espartero. Espar- [illegible] Guards at Saragossa.

Eighty five members of the Cortes, more than half of the whole body had held formal sittings there,

The despatch received at Paris says, when the news of O'Donnel's accession reached Saragossa, the Captain-General convened the civil authorities and the National Guard, and after several debates resolved on resistance.

The Maple Leaf,

SANDWICH, AUGUST 6, 1856.

In pursuance of a Requisition to the Sheriff of Essex, to call a public meeting for the purpose of taking into consideration the best mode of proceeding, with a view to the selection of a suitable person to be brought forward as a candidate for the representation, in the Legislative Council, of the Western Division, Mr. McEwen appointed Saturday last, at Maidstone Cross, at which time a few of the inhabitants about the Cross were present. We also noticed three or four gentlemen from Kent, who came down, not as delegates, but merely to see what proceeding would be taken at this meeting. The meeting was particularly small; the weather being very unfavorable may account for this in some measure, and the farmers at this season being engaged in the harvest-field, care to trouble themselves but little in politics.

R. S. Macdonell, Esquire, Warden, was appointed Chairman, and Paul John Salter, Esq. Secretary of the meeting. Upon Mr Macdonell taking the chair, he stated the objects of calling the meeting, and that under the law rendering the Legislative Council in part elective, and the Counties of Essex and Kent having been entitled to the election of our member under the first drawing, and also explained the act in a clear and comprehensive manner

We regret our inability to give the speeches in full of the different gentlemen who spoke, but that was impossible as it rained incessantly, and it was difficult to hear the speakers from the window, where the gentlemen of the press, through the kindness of Mr. Stoder, were sheltered from the storm.

Mr. Rankin, our member, was the first to mount the platform, which was any thing but comfortable or pleasant to the speakers, being nothing more or less than a lumber waggon, with a plank to stand upon. Mr. Rankin stated that he considered it his duty, as member of the County of Essex, to call together a meeting of the electors to obtain an expression of their wishes in regard to the forthcoming election, and thought the best mode of proceeding would be to appoint delegates from each township, who should meet and decide upon such person as they thought fit and competent to represent this division. He hoped that a person of known integrity and tried principles would be elected, as the Upper House, under the present system, would become the leading branch of the Legislature at no distant day. This meeting was not called to the disparagement of any of the candidates already brought forward, for should either of the gentlemen be nominated, his election would thereby be made certain. He (Mr. Rankin) approved of the elective principle as applied to the Council, and thought that body would be materially improved by the addition of new men from the people, and spoke in no flattering terms of the present ministry, and thought them the most corrupt set of men that ever held office. Mr. Rankin, after having read over the Act of Parliament rendering the Upper House elective, requested that one of the gentlemen from the County of Kent would address the meeting, but (as we understood, the speaker being almost inaudible,) one of the gentlemen stated that they had not attended for the purpose of proposing any measures for the guidance of the electors, but only desired to know what proceedings would be taken in Essex, that they might direct their proceedings accordingly in Kent.

Mr. Rankin moved the first resolution, and Mr. Woodbridge moved an amendment, which will be found below in the report of the proceedings.

Col. Prince was the next speaker. He opposed the system of conventions, which were republican in their tendencies, and thought they should not be introduced into this Province, and was certain that the meeting would carry him out in opposing its introduction here, that persons had heretofore been called out by requisition, which he thought the proper mode of proceeding, and that having received a numerously signed one, he would be a candidate for this division. Col. Prince made some remarks upon the conduct of Mr. Rankin, stating that he had been canvassing the Counties, and had agents doing the same, and called upon Mr. Rankin to state whether he would become a candidate or not.

Mr. Rankin denied that he had canvassed the County, or was a candidate, and had no intention of being so, unless called upon by a large majority of electors from both counties; then he would come forward and contest the election.

Col. Prince accused Mr. Rankin of ingratitude for deserting his constituency for the sake of a seat in the Upper House.

Mr. McCrea, from Chatham, being called upon, requested the meeting to dispose of the resolution before them; he wished to exercise no influence in the matter whatever. (From our position it was impossible to hear further what Mr. McCrea said.)

Mr. A. Prince was the next who addressed the meeting. He spoke against the manner in which the meeting had been called, and that it was impossible to obtain an expression of public opinion at a season of the year when farmers were employed in their fields, and would not trouble themselves about an election at a place like Maidstone Cross. It was an imposition upon the public; that public opinion would not be represented if meetings were held in each township and two delegates chosen from each. Conventions he disapproved of, and thought it was intended to deceive the electors. It could not be supposed that a meeting like the present could be called a County Meeting, when there were less than two hundred present.

Mr. O'Connor stated that the present meeting could not be called a secret one, as a requisition to the Sheriff in the usual manner in which public meetings are convened, and one had been presented to Mr. McEwen to call this one, signed by most respectable people, and public notice given thereof. He approved of conventions and thought it the only way of obtaining a true expression of the feelings of other counties.

The Chairman then called for a division, when it was found that there was a large majority for the amendment, which was accordingly declared to be carried.

Mr. McKellar, of Chatham, addressed the meeting. He had not come down with any authority from Kent, but merely as a private individual. He approved of conventions, and thought much trouble would be spared the electors if it were adopted in the present case, and hoped both counties would act together, and in a friendly manner toward each other.

A number of other gentlemen addressed the meeting.

The following report of the proceedings was then read:—

REPORT,

The Public Meeting of the Freeholders and inhabitants of Sandwich, Windsor, and the surrounding country, convened by John McEwen, Esq., Sheriff of the County of Essex, in compliance with a Requisition, was held at Maidstone Cross, on Saturday the 2nd of August.

On the motion of Arthur Rankin, Esquire, M. P. P., the chair was taken by S. S. Macdonell, Esq. Warden of the County, and Paul J. Salter, Esq., was appointed Secretary.

The Chairman having called the meeting to order and explained the object of it, it was moved by Thomas Paxton, Esq., seconded by Wm. D. Baby, Esq., and resolved, that each speaker to the question before the meeting be limited to half an hour.

Arthur Rankin, Esq. M.P.P., having briefly addressed the meeting on the importance of the change about to take place in the Legislative Council of the Province by the provisions of the Act rendering that body elective, moved the following resolution, which was seconded by John O'Connor, Esq.:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this meeting, it is desirable that a Convention of Delegates from each Township and Municipality in the Counties of Essex and Kent should assemble on Friday the 23rd inst., at some convenient point, for the purpose of nominating such person as may be chosen by a majority of the votes of such delegates as a candidate for the representation in the Legislative Council, of the Western Electoral Division, and that meetings of the electors shall be called by the Reeve of each Municipality, on as early a day as possible, for the purpose of enabling the people to elect two delegates from each Municipality to proceed to the divisional convention.

It was moved in amendment by Thomas Woodbridge, Esq., and seconded by Mr. Isaac Askew, that:

Inasmuch as Colonel Prince has been requested by a majority of the electors of the County of Essex and a large number of the Electors of Kent, to allow himself to be put in nomination as a candidate for the Legislative Council, it is inexpedient to form a convention or appoint delegates.

The following gentlemen then addressed the meeting:

Col. Prince and Albert Prince, Esq., in condemnation of the Resolution, and John O'Connor, Esq., in favor of its adoption.

Mr. Askew spoke briefly in approval of Colonel Prince being nominated as a candidate.

Archibald McKellar, Esq., of Chatham, being at this stage of the proceedings, called upon to speak to the meeting, declined doing so until after the vote upon the resolution should be taken.

The amendment and resolution having been put from the Chair the voice of the meeting was declared by the Chairman to be against the Resolution.

A. McKellar Esq., then expressed himself in favor of a convention, and gave a short synopsis of the line of policy likely to be adopted by the Reformers of Kent in the forthcoming election.

It was then moved by John G. Buchanan Esq., seconded by John O'Conner Esq., and resolved that the thanks of the Meeting be given to the gentlemen from the County of Kent for their attendance at the meeting.

It was then moved by Capt. Peel, seconded by Mr. Bampton that S. S. Macdonell Esq., do leave the chair and that Mr. Buchanan take the same.

A vote of thanks was then passed to the chairman and Secretary and the meeting adjourned.

P. J. SALTER, Sec.

The Editor of the Chatham Planet, has at length a fertile subject upon which he may exercise his pen; for since his installation into office, politics were dull, the prospect of a war had ceased to agitate the public mind Alas, where was a field to be found for the exercise of the chained up talents of that mighty gentleman? After an inglorious calm, a storm at last appeared upon the political horizon which promised a fruitful, harvest to the imprisoned hero. A Legislative Councillor had to be elected for these two Counties, which gave ample opportunity to our confrere, to distinguish himself, of which opportunity he did not fail to take advantage, and so soon as each Candidate came forward to make his bow to the electors, and humbly ask their suffrages, then did the thunders from that infernal Planet fall upon his head. Alas who could withstand so awful a destiny? was it unreasonable to suppose that they would all shrink from another touch of that withering pen? Not at all, and we have no doubt such were the thoughts of our neighbor, but such simpletons were said candidates, in the face of such dangers that they still persist in asking these Counties for support. What will be the feelings which will move the editor's breast when he awakens and finds that their hopes are not blasted at the first thunder. We envy them not. Not alone, were the candidates made to suffer, but he must needs seek out, our humble self in this obscure region of the world, and pour forth the vial of his wrath upon us, after this fashion:

However it is not amoung the higher classes of strategy that we should look for anything indicative of the Colonel's genius.—But for a good shameless, out and out "bouncer," commend us to the following from Mr. Prince's protegee, the Sandwich Maple Leaf:—

"We are also informed that the requisition to him from Kent is most numerously and respectably signed as well as that from Essex."

Now far be it from us to insinuate that such a precocious baby was accouche in the Cabinet of our Sandwich confrere: of course such a thing could not be—it would be professional treason to imagine it. But when we tell the public of Essex, so far as we can reach them, that standing where we do, eager and anxious to obtain information of all that is passing in relation to this important crisis—when we assure them that we here have not even heard of the existence of such a document, we fancy they will be apt to think that the editor has been somnified in his sanctum one of these hot days, and must have dreamt the thing he speaks of. Otherwise, as he cannot possibly speak otherwise than as he thinks, he must have received very loose and inferential "information" concerning it. A very little would probably suffice for so foregone a conclusion. Well, the thing is a lie—a great, road, bold infamous lie!—that's the fact; but whose lie it is, we are not called upon to determine. We will, at all events, save the honor of the cloth.

Now how unkind to disturb us from our somnified state and show us that it was only a dream—that under the influence of old sol we had popped into a world of bliss and then imagined this pr. ocious baby—perhaps with wings, hovered over our head.

We must now look into facts and see whether the Editor of the Planet or the Maple Leaf was somnified. We opine that instead of ourself he was in that state, if not in a worse. For if as he states, standing eager and anxious to obtain information on all that is passing in relation to this important crisis. He must have either been in a state of unconsciousness or it was a wilful perversion of what he knew to be the case. for in Monday's issue he is forced to admit that a requisition had been presented to Col, Prince in Chatham, much against his will no doubt—and from the manner in which he does so, shows it a bitter pill to swallow. Now could he with his boasting watchfulness over public matters been so blind that he did not hear that such a requisition was being signed and by some of the first men in Kent, and if we mistake not by many in Chatham, under the very watchful eye of the Planet. What are we to suppose either that he himself was somnified in his sanctum—or was himself guilty of the —great, broad, bold infamous lie!—it is with regret that our Columns should be disgraced with such language toward another of the cloth—but when dealing with ruffians we must be ruffians. Well is it for that gentleman to honor the cloth; we fear that had the cloth many such representatives there would be little to save—and were it not for the cloth under which he takes shelter he would be found (bear) bare as when he made his entrance into the world.

To prove that our statement was not made without foundation we will give his own words from Monday's Planet, although he would have the public believe, that there were so few signers to the requisition. This is only on a par with his other statements and deserve as much credit, when we have it from his own pen that a requisition was presented to Col. Prince at Chatham, it would be useless to say more; read his own words.

"Mr. Prince—much more in the character of the poltfogger than of either the Prince or the officer, attempted to convict us of falsehood in our former statement respecting the Kent requisition, by producing a requisition he had received the night before —a day after our publication!—which had been signed in one of the townships. The petition was read, with signatures. The number of these latter was, we find, forty-seven. This was shamelessly brought forward to rebut the imputation of falsehood we had affixed to the following announcement in the Maple Leaf:

"We are also informed that the requisition to him from Kent is most numerously and respectably signed."

To notice the abuse that has been showered upon the head of Col. Prince through the Planet would be useless, for when such low and vulgar language is resorted to, to decry a public man, reason and sense is generally wanting, and no person will read the violent and laboured articles in that Journal without seeing in an instant that such language is only the outpouring of a vicious mind.

Colored Celebration.

On Friday last, the first of August, being the anniversary of the West Indian Emancipation, was celebrated in Sandwich by the colored population of the surrounding country and from the adjoining State, by marching through the streets with music, banners, &c. A procession was formed at the landing headed by Marshal Jackson, a colored resident of this place, in full uniform; red coat, cocked hat, and mounted upon a charger, presented quite a military appearance. General Jackson, for such was he styled, being the acting marshal of the day, afforded no little amusement to the white spectators whose curiosity led them to be witnesses of the amusements of the day, in the military manner in which his sombre majesty spoke his commands; with drawn sword, and head carried aloft, marched as if he were monarch of all he surveyed; or, like the Prince of Morocco,

"By this scimetar,
That slew the Sophy and a Persian Prince,
That won three fields of Sultan Solyman,
I would out stare the sternest eyes that look,
Out brave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pluck the young suckling cub from the she bear,
Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey."

The General upon the whole acquitted himself admirably. Three bands of music from Detroit accompanied the procession, and the gay dresses of some of their ladyships who graced the assemblage, and a hot sun shining brightly upon their polished ebony faces, gave a gay and happy effect to the scene.

The procession having marched the College square, the Sheriff, upon a requisition to him, opened the meeting in due form, when a number of speakers held forth in a manner that surprised the natives. Among the number was the celebrated Garrett, of whom we had occasion to speak before in relation to the Magisterial dismissal.

The Late Railroad Catastrophe in Pennsylvania—Verdict of the Coroner's Jury.

(From the Philadelphia Ledger, July 26)

The Coroner's jury in the railroad accident assembled last evening, and commenced deliberating upon their verdict. After a consultation of more than two hours, the following was agreed upon:—

First. The inquest find that Rev. D. Sheridan, Lawrence Fallon, Edward Hall, Elizabeth Gunn, Thomas Kelly, Bernard Raynegan, Michael O'Brian, John Maguire, James McIntyre, Francis Wall, James Quigley, Catharine McGurk, John Ryan, Hugh Campbell, James Powlin, Mary McErlain, and Henry Harris, died in the city Philadelphia, from violence inflicted on Thursday, the 17th of July, near Camp Hill Station, on the North Pennsylrania Railroad, within the vicinity of Montgomery.

Second. That such deaths resulted from the violent collision of two trains of locomotive engines and passenger cars, belonging to and under the management of the said company.

Third. That the said collision was occasioned by the criminal negligence of Alfred Hoppes, who, as conductor, was in charge of the excursion trains running from Philadelphia to Fort Washington, and who carelessly and negligently ran his train beyond the sideing at Edge Hill.

Fourth. That the regulations of the north Pennsylvania Railroad Company for the running of excursion trains are insufficient, especially in this, that there is no provision for the special instruction to the conductors of the regular trains, when excursion trains are on the road.

Fifth. That the said regulations are further defective in this, in permitting regular trains on a road of nineteen miles in length to start at or near the time when excursion trains are expected to arrive.

Sixth. That adequate provision is not made for the regulation and comparison of the watches used by conductors and engineers on the road.

The inquest make these last three findings as the expression of their opinion and as required by their duty to the public.

The Brockville Recorder relates a very melancholy occurrence which took place about a quarter of a mile from the village of Newboro, on Saturday morning, 19th July. It appears a fire broke out in the cook-house attached to the premises of Mr. Henry McAnally, which speedily spread over every part of the building. After having succeeded in saving a good deal of the Furniture, &c., Mrs. McAnally returned into the house, for the purpose, it is supposed, of saving some money which she had privately laid up, but being prevented by the progress of the flames from returning, her husband made an effort to rescue her, when, as he was assisting her out of the window, the roof fell in, burying Mrs. McA. in the ruins. Mr. McAnally was ultimately dragged from the burning mass, but so seriously injured, that he shortly afterward died.

THE TEST QUESTION.—Our spirited cotemporary, the Brantford Courier, makes the following remarks in reference to the test question at the ensuing election. "If this is in effect the point on which parties will be divided, we think there will be little difficulty in divining the result. The loyalty of Her Majesty's Canadian subjects has not yet got to so low an ebb as to elect men opposed to British civil liberty, and in favor of American Institutions, with all the evils of their system. Go a-head Rads, let your flag be hoisted with the motto inscribed on it, "American vs. British Institutions," and the British Lion will march in his wonted strength "from conquering into conquer." —Goderich Times.

Special Notices.

"A Subscriber" (whom we suspect to be some narrow minded Leech) asks us why we advertise Dr. Ayer's Pills, and we will give him our seven reasons for so doing. The first, second and third are that we are paid for it. The fourth is we know them by experience to be good. The fifth is that Dr. Ayer's preparations being recommended by better men than we—by physicians of the highest talent and the deepest learning in the land, we are well sustained in our own convictions of their value. The sixth is that they are cheap as well as useful. The last but not the least is that they have done and are doing an amount of good in this community which our old fogy friend if he could repeat himself a thousand times might never hope to equal, and we trust by making them known, to render some service to our readers as well as ourselves.—Christian Herald.

BILIOUS DISORDERS AND THEIR CURE.

There is nothing can form so useful and efficient an aperient as the Bile itself, which has been admirably adapted by nature to supply the bowels in a state of health with the requisite stimulus; but when this has from disease become either deficient in quantity, or deteriorated in quality, medicines are justly entitled to the consideration as the most effectual means of restoring a healthy secretion. Sir Astley Cooper's Anti-Bilious and Family Aperient Pills are all powerful in removing the distressing symptoms attendant upon Bilious obstructions, disordered state of the stomach and bowels—such as pains in the head, dimness of sight, sickness, oppression of the chest, lowness of spirits, with great apprehension of imaginary danger, and fear of sudden death, disinclination or active employment, and various other symptoms, at all times troublesome, and not unfrequently dangerous. By taking two or three of Sir Astley Cooper's Pills, the symptoms above described are speedily removed, an unusual degree of serenity pervades the mind, the stomach and bowels are restored to their natural functions, and returning vigor is the result; by taking one, two or three pills at bedtime, and repeated as occasion may render necessary, they operate pleasantly, without producing that irritation common to most advertised and powerful medicines, which too often augment the maladies they were intended to remove.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—Be sure to ask for the Genuine Sir Astley Cooper's Pills, prepared in London and New York, by McPhail and Co., and see that their signature is on each box and on the directions. Without this mark of authenticity they are certainly spurious and an imposition.

Sold at 25 and 50 cents per box, and in Family boxes at $1 each. There is a great saving by purchasing the larger sizes.

For sale by Simpson and Dunspaugh, Druggists, Toronto; John M. Thornton, Dundas; Andrew Oliver Galt; A. H. Cook, Brantford, General Agents, by whom Country Druggists and Merchants will be supplied at London and New York prices.

The Grist Mill is situated in the Township of Sandwich, and a portion of the Town Lots and an excellent House and Lot are situate in the Town of Amherstburg; the remaining Town and Villa Lots in the Town of Sandwich, the County Town of Essex and on the beautiful river Detroit. The Wild Lands are situate in different parts of the County of Essex and are very valuable.

The Town Lots are large with fine broad streets, and close to the business part of the Town.

The Great Southern Railway Terminus will be within a very short distance of these Lots.

The Villa Lots have a most beautiful situation, being high and well adapted for gentlemen's residences, having a fine broad avenue laid out, on which they front; and are not surpassed in respect to beauty and position by any in the Province.

There are a greater number of prizes in proportion to the number of tickets to be sold than in any similar scheme yet offered to the public. The drawing will take place under the superintendence of a committee of gentlemen, to be appointed on the day of drawing by the holders of Tickets.

☞ Parties remitting to the subscriber one hundred dollars will receive a package of twenty-eight tickets in return.

CATHARTIC PILLS

OPERATE by their powerful influence on the digestive viscera, to purify the blood and vitalize it into healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, and, by restoring their irregular action to health, correct, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first causes of disease. An extensive trial of their virtues, by Professors, Physicians, and Patients, has shown cures of diseases almost beyond belief, were they not substantiated by persons of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Their certificates are published in my American Almanac, which the Agents below named are pleased to furnish free to all inquiring.

Annexed we give Directions for their use in the complaints to which they have been found to cure.

FOR CONSTIVENESS.—Take one or two Pills, or such quantity as to gently move the bowels. Costiveness is frequently the aggravating cause of Piles, and the cure of one complaint is the cure of both. No person can feel well while under a costive habit of body. Hence it should be, as it can be, promptly relieved.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, which is sometimes the cause of Costiveness, and always uncomfortable, take mild doses—from one to four—to stimulate the stomach and liver into healthy action. They will do it, and the heartburn, bodyfaint, and soulhorn of dyspepsia will rapidly disappear. When it has gone, don't forget what cured you.

FOR A FOUL STOMACH, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take four to eight Pills at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until activity and strength is restored to the system.

FOR NERVOUSNESS, SICK HEADACHE, NAUSEA, Pain in the Stomach, Back, or Side, take from four to eight pills on going to bed. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more the next day until they do. These complaints will be swept out from the system. Don't wear these and their kindred disorders because your stomach is foul.

FOR SCROFULA, ERYSIPELAS, and all Diseases of the Skin, take the Pills freely and frequently, to keep the bowels open. The eruptions will generally soon begin to diminish and disappear. Many dreadful ulcers and sores have been healed up by the purging and purifying effect of these Pills, and some disgusting diseases which seemed to saturate the whole system have completely yielded to their influence, leaving the sufferer in perfect health. Patients! your duty to society forbids that you should parade yourself around the world covered with pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores, and all or any of the unclean diseases of the skin, because your system wants cleansing.

TO PURIFY THE BLOOD, they are the best medicine ever discovered. They should be taken freely and frequently, and the impurities which sow the seeds of incurable diseases will be swept out of the system like chaff before the wind. By this property they do as much good in preventing sickness as by the remarkable cures which they are making every where.

LIVER COMPLAINT, JAUNDICE, and all Bilious Affections arise from some derangement—either torpidity, congestion, or obstructions of the Liver. Torpidity and congestion vitiate the bile and render it acrid in digestion. This is disastrous to the health, and the constitution is frequently undermined by no other cause. Indigestion is the symptom. Obstruction of the duct which empties the bile into the stomach causes the bile to overflow into the blood. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternately costiveness and diarrhœa, prevails. Feverish symptoms, languor, low spirits, weariness, restlessness, and melancholy, with sometimes inability to sleep, and sometimes great drowsiness; sometimes there is severe pain in the side; the skin and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow; the stomach sells; the bowels are to the touch; the whole system irritable, with a tendency to fever, which may turn to bilious fever, bilious colic, bilious diarrhœa, dysentery, &c. A medium dose of three or four Pills taken at night, followed by two or three in the morning, and repeated a few days, will remove the cause of all these troubles. It is wicked to suffer such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

RHEUMATISM, GOUT, and all Inflammatory Fevers are rapidly cured by the purifying effects of these Pills upon the blood and the stimulus which they afford to the vital principle of life. For those and all kindred complaints they should be taken in mild doses, to move the bowels gently, but freely.

AS A DINNER PILL, this is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has been made more effectual to the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

CUCUMBERS.—The Maine Cultivator says:—"When a cucumber is taken from the vines, let it be cut with a knife, leaving about the eighth of an inch of the cucumber on the stem, then slit the stem with a knife from its end to the vine, leaving a small portion of the cucumber on each division, and on each separate slit there will be n w cucumbers as large as the first.

Those wishing to raise large quantities of this article for pickles will do well to try the experiment."

LIME ON GRASS LAND.—An application of lime has frequently a very beneficial effect on grass land. It kills heath, moss, and sour and benty (agrostis) grasses, and brings up a sweet and tender herbage. mixed with white and red clovers, more greedily eaten and more nourishing to the cattle. Indeed, all fodder, whether natural or artificial, is said to be sounder and more nourishing when grown upon land to which lime has been abundantly applied. On benty grass the richest animal manure often produces little improvement until a dressing of lime has been laid on.

PRUNING EVERGREENS.—The Horticulturist furnishes the following observations on pruning evergreens:—

It is a question not often mooted, whether evergreens do or do not require the same cutting back as deciduous trees when removed. Our own experience indicates that a slight trimming is useful. The mode of operation on the Norway fir, for instance, is this: Cut back the limbs of last year's growth, using the dissolved shell-lac on cuts, and leaving the leader untouched. The effect is the same as that on deciduous trees, with this additional advantage: the plant throws out at least two—probably more—leading limbs, and the result is that of thickening the growth, and improving the appearance. For the sake of experiment, we carried this system to as great an extent, with a single specimen, as possible; ere many years elapsed, the limbs became so heavy with numerous branches, that they broke with their own weight. Others, cut back once in every three years, have attained rare beauty and a close habit.

ADVANTAGE OF KEEPING MANURE COVERED.—An experiment conducted by the President of an Agricultural Society, in England, shows that manure which was kept covered by 9 inches in depth with earth, so that no evaporation escaped, produced 4 bushels more of grain per acre, than the same quantity and kind of manure applied to the same extent and quality of land, but which manure had laid from the 13th January to the 4th of April, exposed to the weather.

THE BEST HEDGE IN THE UNITED STATES, says the Genesee Farmer, extends about a mile along the highway, on a plantation of three hundred acres, near Augusta, Georgia. It is the Cherokee rose, which is now in full bloom, presenting a magnificent spectacle, and filling the atmosphere with delicious perfume. No animal without wings can get over or through it. Having stood forty or fifty years, it still promises a good fence for a century to come.

TO TAKE INK STAINS OUT OF LINEN.—There are various chemicals capable of extracting ink stains from linen, but the most simple and convenient, when the stain is comparatively fresh, is the juice of lemons, applied to the spots, then washed out with warm water. Some use common salt with lemon juice, but this is of no use unless the salt is decomposed by the citric acid of the lemon uniting with the soda of the salt, thereby setting its chlorine free, which is a most powerful bleaching agent.

Lemon joice was long used (and is by some yet) by straw hat bleachers, for removing iron stains from leghorn hats, but oxalic acid has nearly superseded it. The latter is much superior, but is dangerous to keep in families where there are children, as it is a poison. Muriatic acid (old spirit of salt) is a more powerful extractor than either citric or oxalic acids, but it is unsafe in the hands of others than experts.

MACHINE FOR BLACKING BOOTS.—Ayckbourn, of London has invented a machine for the foregoing named purpose. It is made of a framework of wood, with concave brushes on spindles surrounding a step on which the boot is placed. A trough containing blacking is set beside each brush to supply it, but which are moved out of reach by touching a road when sufficient blacking is put on. The brushes are made to do their work of blacking and polishing, by simply turning a crank handle, by a person while standing. He has to place his booted foot on a step and turn a crank, and by a few whirlabouts, his boot from a muddy brown hue, wi.l be developed into a black shining mirror.

WASHING SILVER WARE.—It seems that housekepers who wash their silver ware with soap and water, as the common practice is, do not know what they are about. The proprietor of one of the oldest silver establishments in the city of Philadelphia, says that "housekeepers ruin their silver by washing it in soap suds; it makes it look like pewter. Never put a particle of soap about your silver; then it will retain its original lustre. When it wants polish take a piece of soft leather and whiting, and rub it hard.

TO MAKE PURE WINE OF APPLES.—Take pure cider made from sound ripe apples as it runs from the press. Put 60 pounds of common brown sugar into 15 gallons of the cider, and let it dissolve; then put the mixture into a clean barrel, and fill the barrel up to within two gallons of being full with clean cider; put the cask in a cool place, leaving the bung out for forty-eight hours; then put in the bung, with a small vent, until fermentation wholly ceases, and bung up tight, and in one year the wine will be fit for use. This wine requires no racking, the longer it stands upon the lees the better.

THE CROPS.—From personal observation, and from enquiry. we are glad to be able to say that the crops in this county are looking exceedingly well, especially wheat. The hay crop is very promising, the growth of which will be materially advanced by the late rains.—Kent Advertiser.

AYER'S PILLS

Are curing the Sick to an extent never before known of any Medicine.

INVALIDS, READ AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES.

JULES HAUEL, Esq., the well known perfumer, of Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, whose choice products are found at almost every toilet, says:

"I am happy to say of your CATHARTIC PILLS, that I have found them a better family medicine, for common use, than any other within my knowledge. Many of my friends have realized marked benefits from them, and coincide with me in believing that they possess extraordinary virtues for driving out diseases and curing the sick. They are not only effectual, but safe and pleasant to be taken—qualities which must make them valued by the public, when they are known."

The venerable Chancellor WARDLAW writes from Baltimore, 15th April, 1854:

"DR. J. C. AYER—Sir: I have taken your Pills with great benefit, for the listlessness, languor, loss of appetite, and Bilious headache, which has of late years overtaken me in the spring. A few doses of your Pills cured me. I have used your Cherry Pectoral many years in my family for coughs and colds with unfailing success. You make medicines which cure; and I feel it a pleasure to commend you for the good you have done and are doing."

JOHN F. BEATTY, Esq., Sec. of the Penn. Railroad Co. says:

"Sir: I take pleasure in adding my testimony to the efficacy of your medicines, having derived very material benefit from the use of both your Pectoral and Cathartic Pills. I am never without them in my family, nor shall I ever consent to be, while my means will procure them."

The widely renowned S. S. STEVENS, M. D., of Wentworth, N. H., writes:

"Having used your CATHARTIC PILLS in my practice, I certify from experience that they are an invaluable purgative. In cases of disordered functions of the liver, causing headache, indigestion, costiveness, and the great variety of diseases that follow, they are a surer remedy than any other. In all cases where a purgative remedy is required, I confidently recommend these Pills to the public, as superior to any other I have ever found. They are sure in their operation, and perfectly safe—qualities which make them an invaluable article for public use. I have for many years known your Cherry Pectoral as the best Cough medicine in the world; and these Pills are in no wise inferior to that admirable preparation for the treatment of diseases."

"Acton, Me., Nov. 25, 1853.

"DR. J. C. AYER—Dear Sir: I have been afflicted from my birth with scrofula in its worst form, and now, after twenty years' trial, and an untold of amount of suffering, have been completely cured in a few weeks by your Pills. With what feelings of rejoicing I write can only be imagined when you realize what I have suffered, and how long.

"Never until now have I been free from this loathsome disease in some shape. At times it attacked my eyes, and made me almost blind, besides the unendurable pain; at others it settled in the scalp of my head, and destroyed my hair, and has kept me partly bald all my days; sometimes it came out in my face, and kept it for months a raw sore.

"About nine weeks ago I commenced taking your Cathartic Pills, and now am entirely free from the complaint. My eyes are well, my skin is fair, and my hair has commenced a healthy growth; all of which makes me feel already a new person.

"Hoping this statement may be the means of conveying information that shall do good to others, I am, with every sentiment of gratitude, Yours, &c., MARIA RICKER."

"I have known the above named Maria Ricker from her childhood, and her statement is strictly true.
ANDREW J. MESERVE,
Overseer of the Portsmouth Manufacturing Co."

CAPT. JOEL PRATT, of the ship Marion, writes from Boston, 20th April, 1854:

"Your Pills have cured me from a bilious attack which arose from derangement of the Liver, which had become very serious. I had failed of any relief by my Physician, and from every remedy I could try; but a few doses of your Pills have completely restored me to health. I have given them to my children for worms, with the best effects. They were promptly cured. I recommended them to a friend for costiveness, which had troubled him for months; he told me in a few days they had cured him. You make the best medicine in the world; and I am free to say so."

Read this from the distinguished Solicitor of the Supreme Court, whose brilliant abilities have made him well known, not only in this but the neighboring States.

"New Orleans, 5th April, 1854.

"Sir: I have great satisfaction in assuring you that myself and family have been very much benefitted by your medicines. My wife was cured, two years since, of a severe and dangerous cough, by your CHERRY PECTORAL, and since then has enjoyed perfect health. My children have several times been cured from attacks of the Influenza and Croup by it. It is an invaluable remedy for these complaints. Your CATHARTIC PILLS have entirely cured me from a dyspepsia and costiveness, which has grown upon me for some years,—indeed, this cure is much more important, from the fact that I had failed to get relief from the best Physicians which this section of the country affords, and from any of the numerous remedies I had taken.

"You seem to us, Doctor, like a providential blessing to our family, and you may well suppose we are not unmindful of it. Yours respectfully,
LEAVITT THAXTER."

"Senate Chamber, Ohio, April 5th, 1854.

"DR. J. C. AYER—Honored Sir: I have made a thorough trial of the CATHARTIC PILLS, left me by your agent, and have been cured by them of the dreadful Rheumatism under which he found me suffering. The first dose relieved me, and a few subsequent doses have entirely removed the disease. I feel in better health now than for some years before, which I attribute entirely to the effects of your CATHARTIC PILLS. Yours with great respect,
LUCIUS B. METCALF."

The above are all from persons who are publicly known where they reside, and who would not make these statements without a thorough conviction that they were true.

Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,
AND JOURNAL OF SUBURBAN ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the United States.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced. The growing interest with which the rising generation view the science of Horticulture, renders such a Journal as "The Illustrated Horticulturist" imperatively necessary to the progress of Rural affairs.

Rural Architecture forms one of the principal features; each number contains from two to four engravings of model cottages, from designs by eminent and skilful architects. Space is also assigned to the tasteful art of Landscape Gardening, engraved plans of gardens in every style, and adapted to the peculiarities of different orders of architecture, beautifies the work.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and to all who can boast the sovereignty of a square rod of tillable earth, "The Illustrated Horticulturist and Journal of Suburban Art" will prove an invaluable companion. The extraordinary low price at which it is afforded: together with its really superior execution, both in regard to typography and editorial ability, must make it the most popular work of the kind in America.

"The Illustrated Horticulturist" is printed on the finest quality of pearl surfaced paper, manufactured expressly. It is issued regularly the first of each month, commencing with July, 1855. The following gentlemen, eminent for their ability in the science of Horticulture, are engaged to conduct the Editorial department: H. P. KNIGHT, JAMES SNOWDEN and D. W. RAY.

TERMS: Two Dollars per annum, payable invariably in advance; a liberal discount to the Trade, Postmasters, and getters-up of Clubs.

Advertisements inserted at the rate of Ten Dollars per page.

N.B.—Newspapers inserting the above prospectus, and drawing attention editorially to the same, will be forwarded the ILLUSTRATED HORTICULTURIST for one year, a copy containing the advertisement should be sent in all cases to ensure attention.

NEW VOLUME OF THE

AGRICULTURIST

SUBSCRIPTION REDUCED FROM 25 TO 50 PER CENT.

The Canadian Agriculturist

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by its present proprietor in 1848, and is too well known to the leading farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us. The undersigned have made arrangements with the proprietor to publish the next, and probably succeeding volumes, and have resolved to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE
Illustrated with Engravings

Such as Farm Implements, Portraits of Animals, designs of Farm Buildings, New Inventions, &c., &c., interesting to the Farmer, and also portraits of some of the most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM MACDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the practice of Agriculture near this city. The active promoter of the various improvements made in our Agricultural Legislation since 1847, and having also been connected with this Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and writings in behalf of Canadian Agriculture are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to its columns as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to extend the correspondence on subjects of a practical kind.

THE AGRICULTURIST IS NOT LIABLE TO POSTAGE.

Select Poetry.

What is a Year?

What is a year? 'Tis but a wave
On life's dark rolling stream,
Which is so quickly gone that we
Account it but a dream.
'Tis but a single earnest throb
Of Time's old iron heart,
Which tireless now, and strong as when
It first with life did start.

What is a year? 'Tis but a turn
Of Time's old brazen wheel;
Or but a page upon the book
Which Time must shortly seal.
'Tis but a step upon the road,
Which we must travel o'er,
A few more steps and we shall walk
Life's weary road no more.

What is a year? 'Tis but a breath
From Time's old nostrils blown,
As rushing onward o'er the earth
We hear his weary moan.
'Tis like the bubble on the wave,
Or dew upon the lawn—
As transient as the mist of morn,
Beneath the summer's sun.

What is a year? 'Tis but a type
Of Life's oft changing scene,
Youth's happy morn comes gaily on
With hills and valleys green;
Next summer's prime succeeds the spring
Then autumn with a tear,
Then comes old winter,—Death and all
Must find a level here.

Going a Shopping.

Did you ever go a shopping? I suppose not. Gentlemen have no genius for shopping. They are not equal to it. Nature has left their faculties imperfect in that particular. They can write books and make speeches, and all that sort of thing, but they are not up to shopping. It takes the ladies for that. Men go to a store and select what they want and buy: but that is not shopping—that requires no genius.

Men pretend they don't like to go shopping with the ladies. I wonder whoever asked them? What lady would have such an incumbrance on such occasions? Men are well enough in their place. Young men are convenient to take to concerts, and see us home from church, and bring up banquets and music, and husbands are useful, I suppose, to pay the bills, &c., but for a shopping excursion they are quite out of place.

Do not understand me to insinuate that I have any disrespect abiliity that way. Not at all—I only speak for my sex. In fact I acknowledge a poor hand at it. But my friend Sallie Z. is a model shopper. I am taking lessons of her, and hope to be perfected by the time I am married. A few days since she invited me with her.

'I wish to look at the new style silks,' said she.

'Why, do you want to get a dress?' said I.

'Really,' said Sallie, 'if it were not impolite, I should say you were verdant. I don't want a dress, but that's no reason why I shouldn't see the material.

So Sallie and I sallied out. The first store we entered, she asked whether the merchant had received his spring goods.

He said he had, and enquired what she would like to see.

'Show me your new style dress goods,' said she, 'such as berege robes and make robes, handsome stripes and plain silks; brocades are not much worn this spring, but I'll look at your solid colors.'

The merchant soon had his counter spread with goods. She examined and tossed the pieces about, making various remarks to them to see whether they would come out again by rubbing.

'What style is worn?' said Sallie to the clerk.

'Well, we sell probably more plaids and stripes than any other.

'Have you any with the chene stripe?' inquired Sallie.

'O, yes, some very fine,' and a variety of pieces were produced.

'Well, I can't say, after all that I like the chene stripe; it looks like the old style revived. I prefer the plaids: the green is very pretty.'

So Sallie held it in various lights, rubbing and cressing it.

'Well, it don't crease much,' said she, 'I wonder whether it will cut.'

'No, it is a boiled silk, and we find that the plaids and stripes generally wear very well.'

'Your silks are very pretty, and you may cut me off samples if you please,' continued Sallie.

This the merchant was forced to do, though with a rather bad grace, as most of his goods were in patterns, and he feared spoiling the piece.

'Will you be kind enough to furnish samples of the solid colors?'

These were also cut off.

'This plaid is very pretty, one dollar and ten cents. Is that the lowest?'

'Yes—we can't take less.'

'How many yards in the pattern?'

'Fourteen.'

'I'd rather have eighteen; perhaps I might conclude to have flounces. Well, I'll take the sample and show my mother, and then make up my mind. Have you any of Coste's cotton; give me a spool, No. 33.'

This was handed her; she paid five cents, and we left. I looked at my watch. We had been there exactly a full hour.

'What a cheat! I can buy these spools for four cents,' said Sallie, when we were fairly out, 'and besides, we forgot their shawls?'

So we went to another store.

'Have you Stella Shawls?'

'Yes, some beautiful ones, just opened.'

'Would you see the broche boiders, or the printed?'

'Both.'

'Any particular colors?'

'No, sir—I'll look at them all,' said Sallie.

Different colors and patterns were accordingly produced.

'What is the price of this green centre broche border?'

'We can afford you that at nine dollars—same style sold for fifteen two months ago. Some printed borders we can put at four dollars and fifty cents.'

'No; I prefer broche, but can't you take less?'

I saw a twinkle in the merchant's eye, which made me think he knew she was only shopping.

'Now,' said he, 'if you won't mention it, I'll let you have it for six.'

Sallie looked surprised. She knew that style of article was selling at nine.

'Six dollars—is that your lowest?' she inquired.

'Well, to oblige you, I'll say four,' said the merchant.

A pause ensued.

'Then you think that four dollars is your very lowest?'

'Ahem! We have had a large lot, and I want to dispose of them. I'll say two dollars and a half?'

Still longer pause.

'Are you sure it is a first rate piece of goods?'

'I'll warrant it all silk and wool,' said the merchant.

My friend was caught. Turning to me she whispered;

'I do wish I had brought some money? and then, addressing the merchant, she said:

'I'll call again.'

I never was so glad to get out of a store before, for the clerks had gathered around us, seeming to understand the joke. But Sallie went home, got the money and, insisted on my returning with her to the store for the shawl. The trader said he was sorry, but they were sold and just been sold. And so was Sallie, too, I thought. We went shopping no more that afternoon.

The Boiled Cod-Fish, or A Woman's Wisdom.

One day as Zechariah Hodgson was going to his daily avocations after breakfast, he purchased a fine large codfish, and sent it home, with directions to his wife to have it cooked for dinner.

As no particular mode of cooking it was prescribed, the good woman well knew that whether she boiled it or made it into chowder, her husband would scold her when he came home.—But she resolved to please him once, if possible, and therefore cooked several portions of it in several different ways. She also, with some thrift idty, procured an amphibious animal from a brook back of the house, and plumped it into the pot. In due time her husband came home; some covered dishes were placed on the table, and with a frowning, fault-finding look the moody man commenced the conversation:

"Well, wife, did you get the fish I bought?"

"Yes, my dear."

"I should like to know how you have cooked it. I will bet anything that you have spoiled it for my eating. (Taking off the cover) I thought so; what in creation possessed you to try it? I would as leave eat a boiled frog."

"Why, my dear, I thought you loved it best fried."

"You didn't think any such thing. You knew better—I never loved fried fish; why didn't you boil it?"

"My dear the last time we had fresh fish, you know I boiled it, and you said you liked it best fried. But I have boiled some also."

So saying she lifted a cover, and lo! the shoulders of the cod nicely boiled were gently deposited in a dish, a sight of which would have made an epicure rejoice, but which only added to the ill-nature of her husband.

"A pretty dish, this," exclaimed he—"boiled fish! chips and porridge! If you had not been one of the most stupid of womenkind, you would have made it into a chowder?"

His patient wife with a smile immediately placed a tureen before him containing an excellent chowder.

"Why dear?" said she, "I was resolved to please you. There is your favorite dish."

"Favorite dish, indeed! I dare say it is an unpalatable, wishy-washy mess. I would rather have a boiled frog than the whole of it."

This was a common expression of his, and had been anticipated by his wife, who, as soon as the preference was expressed uncovered a large dish of her husband, and there was a large BULL-FROG, of portentous dimensions and pugnacious aspect, stretched out at full length! Zechariah sprang from his chair, not a little frightened at the unexpected apparition.

It is stated that the rope which hanged Palmer is selling in Lochmaben, Dumfriesshire, at 8s per inch. The seller is a person just arrived from Dudley, where Smith, the hangman, resides. The "interesting relic" it is said, meets with ready purchasers. The rope was also selling extensively in England, it is said, and of course is being spun as the demand for it increases.

Miscellany.

Our respected townsman, E. Billings Esq., the able editor of the "Canadian Naturalist and Geologist," and for some time past connected with the editorial department of this paper, having received an appointment in the Geological Survey of Canada, has removed to Montreal, to enter upon the duties of his office. His appointment is one which reflects credit upon those who bestowed it for he is in every way well qualified for the performance of its duties. An amateur Naturalist and Geologist, he has, by dint of the most arduous study and perseverance, attained that distinction which has drawn upon him the notice of the most distinguished savans of the day; and procured admission for his writings into the foremost of scientific journals both in Europe and America. Long may he persevere in the course which has won for him such a enviable distinction, and may the rewards he has so well merited.—Ottawa Citizen.

JUST "ONE SHADE GREENER."—A lady of this city shopping one day last week called for some green silk. The piece was produced, but it would not do; another, another, and yet another was brought forth by the salesman—but of no avail; there were none among the ample pile that suited the fastidious lady's taste. "A deep, very deep and dark green is what I wish," said the fair customer. The shelves were then again ransacked by the attentive attendant. Deeper and deeper still glowed the green, until it emerged into a dark sea tint. But none yet had been displayed suiting the lady's fancy.

At length, fairly out of patience the clerk exclaimed, 'Madame, I do declare, and verily believe, that you do not know what shade of green you want yourself," "I do sir right well," returned the fair, fastidious and witty one, "select a pattern just one shade greener than yourself, and I'll take it at once."—

OCEAN STEAMERS LOST.—The following are the names of the ocean steamers lost since the establishment of steam communication between this country and Europe, upwards of sixteen years ago:

Names.—President—never heard of.
" Columbia—all hands saved.
" Humbolt—all hands saved.
" City of Glasgow—never heard of.
" City of Philadelphia—all hands saved.
" Franklin—all hands saved.
" Arctic—A few only saved.
" Pacific — (probably) — never heard of.

In that time thirteen lines of steamers have been formed and forty-two vessels built, with a capacity of nearly one hundred thousand tons. The loss of life is not extraordinary when we take into consideration the number and tonnage of the vessels employed.

A BARONET ON THE STAGE.—On Monday night Sir William Dun, Bart., made his appearance at the Theatre Royal, Manchester, in one of the last new dramatic productions, the Evil Genius, from the pen of Mr. Buckstone, if we are rightly informed. Sir William, on his first appearance in Manchester some few years ago, was evidently a close imitator of Buckstone. Absence from his model has wrought an improvement, but there is still the same Buckstone twang, and the mannerisms of his original. The dramatic baronet, however, is by no means destitute of original talent; his acting is easy and natural, and free, to a great extent, from affectation and stage conventionalism.—Manchester Guardian.

FRANCE.—Yesterday evening considerable assemblages of persons were to be seen on the new Boulevard de Sebastopol, in the neighborhood of the Chateau d'Eau. These groups were formed to view a spectacle well worthy of attention. The municipal administration has raised, at regular distances on this Boulevard, columns surmounted with can'elabras of a particular form, lighted with gas. On these candelabras clock dials have been ingeniously placed, marking the hour, the minute, and the second, for the day as well the night, by means of electricity. This is the first application at Paris, on a grand scale, of electricity as a regulator of public clocks. The experiment succeeds perfectly.

Lady Raglan, widow of the late Lord Raglan, and the widow of Marshal St. Arnaud, lately travelled together from Paris to Plombieres, where the Emperor is now staying, and where these ladies have gone for the purpose of using the waters. A close friendship is said to exist between them, one of those friendships of sympathy easily understood.

POPPING.—"Charles," said a young lady to her lover, "there is nothing interesting in the paper to-day, is there dear?" "No Louise, love, but I hope there will one day when both shall be interested."

SUDDEN DEATH.—Mr. Robert Johnson of Grafton while taking dinner at the Exchange Inn, in this town was seized with apoplexy, and expired in a few minutes.—Cobourg Star.

American paper on noticing the proposal to light the streets of a village with red-headed girls, says:—"If we lived there we'd play tipsy every night, and hug the lamp-posts."

THE NORMAL SCHOOL AT TORONTO.—Before closing I should refer to the admirable system of education in Canada West. An immense Normal School is established here by Government, which educates teachers for every district in the Province. The school building is equal in magnitude, though not so smooth in aspect, as the Smithsonian Institute at Washington. It is made the depository of all the school apparatus, such as globes, maps, charts, school and library books (of which there are several hundred thousand volumes), for all the schools throughout the Province. These books and apparatus are mostly purchased in the United States, at the lowest wholesale prices, and the Government pays one half the costs. When any school District will raise $10 to pay for school or library books, or school apparatus of any kind, the Government will furnish an equal sum, and the district thus obtains $20 worth for every $10 raised, and the same for any amount they choose voluntarily to pay. Is it not strange that in Upper Canada we should find a Normal School, which, with all its advantages, is not equalled on the globe!—for such I believe to be the fact. What a blessing it would be to the people of the United States, if the surplus millions in the Treasury were devoted to such a noble object, instead of being reserved for a possible war.—Cor. Boston Transcript.

The Moniteur de l' Armee publishes what it represents to be an official account of the deaths in the French army during the Eastern war. The account says that from the first of May, 1854, to the 30th of March, 1856, the number of deaths in the East was 62,492 officers and men; and in the Baltic, 1,052.

The Schooner Hamilton, Captain Fitzgerald arrived here this morning with a full load of lumber from Toronto. This is the vessel reported by the papers as having refused to render assistance to the Northern Indiana at the time of the burning of that steamer. She has not been on Lake Erie at all. Will the papers that have given currency to this unjust charge do justice to her officers and crew by making the correction?—Oswego Times.

William Ross, Esquire, Barrister, has been appointed Judge of the United Counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, in the room of George S. Jarvis Esq., resigned.

A transparent ballot box is on exhibition in New York which it is proposed to adopt in future elections in that city. It is described as very simple, being a hollow glass globe supported on four pillars. A brass lid is fastened by a loc to the top of the globe.

In this lid is an aperture large enough to admit a ballot. It will be seen that by this kind of ballot box, every vote can be seen as deposited, and that false bottoms and any other modes of cheating cannot by any possibility be introduced.

ANCIENT REMAINS IN CALIFORNIA.—Elisha Hughes, in a letter from Santa Clara, California, to the Scientific American, gives the following account of some old ruins recently discovered "I recently had an opportunity of examining some ancient ruins, lately discovered, about six miles east of Santa Cruz. They are entirely buried up in a sand hill. I found twenty-three chimneys with their tops peering above the ground. These chimneys are round, and vary in diameter from four to twelve inches. They are made of sandstone, and were filled up with loose red sand. The stones of which they are built are cut circular, and cemented together.

I stamped on the hill and it emitted a hollow sound, indicating vaulted chambers below. A tunnel is now being run in under the hill; at first it was attempted to sink a deep shaft, but the sand came in too fast upon the miners. Who built these structures no one can imagine. They appear to be thousands of years old. A large yellow pine tree was growing on the top of the hill.

The number of years required for the sand to cover these houses and form the hill, before the seed of this large tree germinated, could not be less than two thousand years."

The fact, we believe, is not generally known, that the Canadian line of Ocean Steamers are taking produce from Montreal to Liverpool at rates corresponding to what is charged by screw steamers and sailing vessels from New York. The rates at which produce is now taken by lake vessels to Kingston, and thence to Montreal, do not exceed twelve cents per bushel for grain. But when we add to this the ocean freight per steamer from Montreal, we find that the total cost for transporting wheat to Liverpool from this port, with only one transhipment at Montreal, is less than thirty cents per bushel. Why should not so direct trade to Liverpool by this route attract the attention of shippers, and lead to more extensive transactions with foreign markets, when they can be made quite as direct as by way of New York? Let the connection between Chicago and Montreal, by a line of steam propellers be once established, and the stream of direct trade between this port and Liverpool would soon develope itself, and add immensely to the value of all shipping commodities, and give a great impetus to the immense grain trade of our city.—Democratic Press, Chicago.

PALACE DISCOVERED UNDER GROUND.—The remains of a magnificent palace have been discovered under a garden in the Isle of Capri. It must not only have been splendid in structure, but in situation, commanding a view of the bay of Palermo and Naples. Marble of various colors was used in it construction, and all its apartments, so far as the excavations have proceeded, are of the most spacious and elegant character. The doorway is twelve feet wide, and of white marble, and the rooms are paved in mosaic, while the wall are painted red, blue, yellow, &c. Several coins of the reign of Augustus and the Tiberius has been found some of them disclosing the curious fact that the coins of one reign were at times recoined in another.—Boston Journal.

A CURE FOR BAD POETRY.—A physician at Bath told Foote that he meant to publish his own poems, but had so "many irons in the fire!" he had not well known what to do. "Then take my advice, doctor," said Foote, and put your poems where your irons are.

A CUTTING REMARK.—General Lee, of the Revolution, one day found Dr. Cutting, the army surgeon, who was a handsome and dressy man, arranging his cravat complacently before a glass.

"Cutting," said Lee, "you must be the happiest man in creation."

"Why, general?"

"Why," replied Lee, "because you must love with yourself, and have not a rival on the earth."

Walter Scott does not appear to have been the boy at school which some have stated.—Once, a boy in the same class was asked by the 'dominie" what part of speech the word "with" was.

"A noun, sir," said the boy.

"You young blockhead," cried the pedagogue. "what example can you give of such a thing?"

"I can tell you, sir," interrupted Scott "you know that there is a verse in the Bible which says, "they bound Sampson with withs."

A sharp nose and thin lips are considered by physiognomists certain signs of a shrewish disposition. As a criminal was on his way to the gallows, proclamation was made that, any woman would marry him under the gallows, with the rope round his neck, he would receive pardon. "I will," cried a crack voice from amid the crowd. The culprit desired the eager candidate for matrimony to approach the cart, which she did, and he began to examine her countenance. "Nose like a knife," said he, "lips like wafers! Drive on hangman!"

DIGGING FOR MONEY.—"What are you digging for?"

'I am digging for money.

The news flew—the idlers collected.

'We are told you are digging for money?

'Well, I ain't digging for any thing else.'

'Have you had any luck?

'First-rate luck—pays well; you had better take hold.'

All took of their coats, and laid hold most vigorously for a while. After the owing out some cart-loads, the question arose:

When did you get any money last?

Saturday night, why?

How much did you get?

Four dollars and a half.

Why that's rather small.

It's pretty well—six shillings a day is the regular price for digging cellars, all over town."

The spades dropped, and the loafers vanished.

A boarding school Miss, being unwell, thought it ungenteel to say she was ill-ness; so she complained of being Willin-ous.

MIDNIGHT PASTIME.—A Yankee has just invented a method to catch rats. He says: "Locate your bed in a room much infested by these animals; and on retiring, put out the light. Then strew over the pillow some strong smelling cheese, three or four red herrings, some barley-meal or new malt, and a sprinkling of dried codfish. Keep awake till you find the rats at work—then make a grab.

Cigar ashes will be found an invaluable remedy for the bite of the mosquito and insects. Wet the ashes and rub them on the part and the stinging sensation will be extracted almost instantly. The reason of this is that the ashes contain alkali, which neutralize the acid of the poison.

A lawyer retained in a recent case of assault and battery, was cross-examining a witness in relation to the force of a blow struck:

"What kind of blow was given?"

"A blow of the common kind."

"Describe the blow?"

"I am not good at description."

"Show me what kind of a blow it was."

"I cannot."

"You must."

"I won't."

The lawyer appealed to the court. The court told the witness that if the counsel insisted upon his showing what kind of a blow it was, he must do so.

"Do you insist upon it," asked the witness.

"I do."

Well, then, since you compel me to show you it was this kind of a blow" at the same time suiting the action to the word, and knocking over the astonished disciple of Coke upon Lit-tle-ton

New Brunswick & Canada Railway and Land Company.

(From Herapath's Railway Journal)

The importance of this undertaking and its speedy completion, have lately drawn the attention of some of the most influential parties in this country, who have formed themselves into a company, and purchased all the rights, privileges, &c., of the St. Andrew's and Quebec Railway Company, by means of paid up shares, with a determination to carry it out in all its integrity, under the name of the "New Brunswick and Canada Railway and Land Company." This railway is perhaps scarcely understood in all its important aspects. In point of magnitude and advantage, both to this country and the colonies themselves, it claims a pre-eminent place. The internal wants of our extensive British North American Provinces, are now being met by a scheme of railroad enterprise which will traverse their whole extent. This railway embraces the two-fold objects of connecting the Canadas with the Atlantic by the shortest route through British territory, and by transhipment with Europe. The line will form a junction at Trois Pistoles, with the Grand Trunk and Great Western Railways of Canada. The Government of New Brunswick has undertaken to construct branch lines from St. John and Fredericton, and when the Halifax and Windsor line shall have been completed, that important Province will be traversed, and be placed, in immediate communication with the Canadas. The old company, the St. Andrew's and Quebec, has about 26 miles of their line already constructed, and an engine running over it, and 14 miles more are nearly finished, making in all 40 miles. The whole line has been surveyed, and it intersects a belt of country capable of the highest cultivation; thus affording the most hopeful prospect of an extensive colonial immigration. It will open up a continent which is scarcely known to us in all its extent and territorial magnitude, enriched as it is with mineral and vegetable productions of the most valuable kind; for example at Woodstock valuable iron works are carried on and lately very superior copper mines have been discovered, which are now in operation, and the owner Mr. Stevens, is now in London forming a company to enable these mines to be more fully developed. The whole of the most important privileges obtained from the Colonial Government by the St. Andrews and Quebec, will now be transferred to this company, embracing the free grant of land for five miles on each side of the railway. All the timber and materials, the property of the crown, requisite for the construction of the line, and the guarantee of a minimum dividend of 6 per cent for 25 years on the completion of the line to Woodstock. Since these privileges were conceded they have greatly increased in value; indeed, it is impossible to calculate what may become the value of the land (forming a belt of 10 miles in width, with the railway passing through its centre, and amounting in all to nearly a quarter of a million of acres), even in two or three years time, when it is expected the first section of the railway to Woodstock will be completed. The establishment of steam communication between this country and our North American Provinces by the Liverpool, Newfoundland, and Halifax Company, must materially help to place 2,000,000 of British subjects in a position of self reliance and independence in these colonies so rapidly increasing in importance. The imports into New Brunswick alone, even now, amount to £600,000 annually, and will, no doubt, very greatly increase under an improved system of communication.

From London to Calcutta in Seven Days.

This is not a chimera. Rapid and important as have been the changes in the commercial world during the first half of the Nineteeth Century, there is already evidence that the second portion of Century will be equally, if not more, prolific in those great discoveries and improvements, which tend to bring the whole human family more acquainted with each other. We learn from our foreign files of newspapers, that Mr. Macdonald Stephenson's plan for a railway to India, is fully before the public.—He proposes a railway from London to Calcutta divided, without any interruption save at the Straits of Dover and the Bosphorus, the distance being accomplished in about a week. This is the ultimate developement of the scheme which he undertakes to execute within ten years; but in its simple form it resolves itself into the completion of the European railways to Constantinople, and the making of a railway from Scutari to Bussora, at the head of the Persian Gulf. The route indicated is from Scutari to Ismid—the Brighton of the Constantinopolitans; thence, by the valley of the Sakaria river, to Kutayah, and so on to Ak-serai, and the Kurin Mountains. Emerging from one of the mountain passes, the line would come upon the head of the Euphrates, and would proceed by the valley of this river to the Persian Gulf, passing to the west of the Shiraz Mountains, and so Bagdad to Bussora. There can be little doubt as to the possibility of constructing the line; a surveyor has actually been sent to Bussora to take flying levels.

In furtherance of this highly important measure, we learn that the Scinde Railway line has received permission to survey the Punjaub from Moultan to Lahore and Umrinser. This line will be 230 miles in length Moultan is on the Chenaub, at the point where the deep water ceases. From Moultan to Hyderabad the navigation for steamers is open; from Hyderabad to Kurrachee one already sanctioned continues the communication to the sea. The Upper line of railway will be connected with the lower by means of steamers of improved construction, and by this means Central Asia, the Punjaub, and the Affghan West Provinces will be placed in steam communication with Kurrachee. This may help forward the realization of the plan of connecting, by rail and steam, Europe and Central Asia, via the Euphrates.

We learn also from our late English papers, that the Calcutta and south Eastern Railway has been announced with a capital of £1,500,000 in 50,000 shares, which comes outunder the auspices of good names, and in which the projectors and proprietors show their confidence by their resolution to carry it out, though the East India Company declines to add to the guarantees it has already given. The object of this rail is to connect Calcutta with the fertile districts to the south-east of that city, and especially to connect it with the head of Mutlah, at the distances of 20 miles over a dead level, and there to construct wet docks in conjunction with the rail. It will open a new communication between Calcutta and the sea, access to the port of Calcutta being now impracticable except for vessels of small draft. The Mutlah offers facilities for navigation superior to those that existed in the Hooghly at any time.

It would be difficult to conceive what results will follow from the execution of the plans now alluded to. At the present moment a fortnight or more will intervene the overland mail is carried from Calcutta to London in about forty days; and we have no doubt that in three or four years this will be reduced to eight or ten days.

The Duke of Cambridge and the Army.

GENERAL ORDER.

Horse Guards, July 16.

In obedience to the gracious order of Her Majesty, General His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge will resume his command of the army, which has been conferred to him by Her Majesty's favour, on the resignation of Field-Marshal Viscount Hardinge.

His Royal Highness feels it no easy task to undertake the responsibilities of so hon ourable and arduous a post as the successor of that distinguished General who has found himself compelled to retire from it by the state of his health, and who again was preceded by that illustrious chief whose name will ever continue to be the glory of the British army and the British nation; but he has the strongest reliance on the support of the general officers with whom he will be associated, and on the army at large; and in this reliance he enters confidently on the noble trust which now devolves upon him.

His Royal Highness has had the advantages, as a General officer in command of a division, under the orders of his immediate and gallant friend the late Field-Marshal Lord Raglan, of becoming to some extent personally acquainted with the heroic deeds of the army in the recent arduous contest, now so fortunately brought to a successful end. He knows of what excellent materials the troops are composed, both as to officers and men, It will be his anxious endeavour to maintain the army in the high state of efficiency in which it has been left to him by his distinguished predecessor, and he doubts not that the army itself will be main ly instrumental in enabling him to carry out this most anxious wish of his heart.

By order of H is Royal Highness the Gen. Commanding in Chief,

G. A. WETHERALL, Adjutant-General

Election Stuffing Ballot Box.

The N. Y. Sun contains engravings and sketches of the lives of CASEY, CORA, YANKEE SULLIVAN and McGOWAN, of California notoriety, and also a cut representing the kind of ballot box used in the fraudulent elections, which the Vigilance Committee were compelled to get possession of by the confession of SULLIVAN. It is described as follows:

One of the sides and the bottom, is double; the innocent looking casing, or base-board, around the lower edge on the outside serving for a handle with which to pull down or pull out the inside lining to the box, and allow the "little jockers" concealed behind to tumble out among the bona fide ballots put in the legitimate way, through the hole in the box lid.

The plan in using this "stuffing box" was to get "lids" from two of the candidates "for a majority of the votes to be cast." The stuffers—one at least of whom was an Inspector of Election, then prepared the box, putting a large quantity of ballots behind the side lining for one of the bidding candidates, and another quantity for the other candidate under the bottom lining. The sides were then shut and the election commenced. While the regular voting was going on, the bidding candidates were again ticketed up. One who had previously offered $150, was now willing to give $200 to make a thing to do. The opponent then offered $50, more than that, and so the auctioneering went on until one of the precious pair of office-seekers had planked down $500 and the other refused to "cover."

The voting at last ended. The inspector or inspectors of election then took up the box to show that all was fair and gave it a few turns by which each side of the box could be seen.—While the turning was progressing, however, the $500 slide was dexterously down, the extra $200 in the $500 candidate shaken out and the side slide again and then the canvassing solemnly commenced. Bystanders who had watched almost every ballot deposited, were surprised and puzzled when they saw how many more than they imagined had been put in the box were counted out of it. And thus, it is proved many California elections were conducted. The "Border Ruffians" were not up to that dodge or no doubt they would have tried it in Kansas.

Liverpool and Chicago.

We have a great interest in the navigation of the St. Lawrence. It is yet destined to open up to us the direct trade with Liverpool. At least, we can trade with that port without the encumbrance of transhipment at Montreal, if our merchants and the Canadian interested only take proper action in the matter.

There is now in the full tide of successful operation between Quebec and Liverpool a line of screw steamers consisting of the following vessels:—

Anglo Saxon—Andrew McMaster.

North American—William Grange.

Indian—Thomas Jones.

Canadian—William Ballantine.

They are under contract with the Provincial Government of Canada to carry the mails fortnightly between Liverpool, Quebec and Montreal. These are first-class vessels, as is demonstrated by the trips they make, as they very generally anticipate the paddle wheel steamers of the Cunard line, which touch at Halifax en route to Boston. The last vessel which arrived at Quebec was the Indian. She left Liverpool on the 15th of July, and arrived at Quebec on Sunday last, the 27th inst., making the trip in eleven days. The Arabian, the fastest steamer of the Cunard line, except the Persia, left Liverpool on the 19th and reached Halifax on Tuesday the 29th, which is no better time, considering the distance in favour of Halifax, than that made by the Indian. But the Anglo-Saxon of the Quebec line is a still faster vessel. She made the last outward trip to Liverpool in nine days and a half, and the letters by her received answers by the Indian in twelve days from the date of mailing in Quebec.

Now, here we have a line, which only needs a connection at Montreal or Quebec to give us almost a continuous line from Chicago to Liverpool, to all intents and purposes opening a direct trade between the two places, by which passengers and freight can be brought forward very rapidly.

The vessels in the line between Quebec and Liverpool are of iron, built with water tight compartments and in the best manner. They are to be increased in number so as to make weekly trips as soon as the new vessels can be built. Let the proprietors and friends of this line establish a line of iron propellors in connection with it, between Chicago and Montreal or Quebec, and we have no doubt it would be a most profitable one, besides bringing a large amount of freight and a large number of passengers to the Liverpool steamers.

The people of Montreal are now engaged in dredging out the St. Peter's flats, between that place and Quebec, and we learn have so far succeeded as to enable the largest-sized vessels to pass up and down without lightening. The ship Esmerelda lately passed down with a large cargo and sailed for Liverpool.

We call attention to this matter at this time as we think it is of the greatest importance to our city we should have a line of steamers between this city and Montreal in connection with the Montreal and Liverpool ocean line. Such a line of vessels would add greatly to our trade, and we only wonder that a project offering such superior advantages, has not ere this been taken hold of by some enterprising parties.—Chicago Democrat.

SANDWICH, AUGUST 14, 1856.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY MEETING.

In accordance with a resolution passed at a meeting of the Provisional Directors, held in St. Thomas on the 5th July last, a meeting of the shareholders of Southern Railway stock was appointed to take place at Amherstburg, on Thursday the 7th instant, at which meeting the shareholders present having paid ten per cent. on their stock subscribed, were either by person or by proxy to choose nine directors.

It would be as well at the outset to state, that a misunderstanding had arisen among the Directors, the cause of which it is impossible to ascertain, but from what can be gathered from both parties, it would appear that one portion of Directors are favorable to, and have encouraged the taking of a large amount of stock by the Great Western Railway Company. These are the ones who belong to the Amherstburg party—the remainder, headed by Messrs. Zimmerman and Rankin, contending that the Great Western wished to obtain the control of the Southern Stock for the purpose of using it to their own interests.

Now that they a number of shareholders attended from different parts, for the purpose of electing the new Directors, when the Provisional Directors, whose duty it was to carry out the charter, until the new ones were elected, having divided, each party held a meeting and elected their own set; which party is in the right, it is a somewhat difficult matter to determine at the present, and as the whole matter will have to be decided by the Court of Chancery, we will merely give the proceedings of each meeting as fully as it is in our power to do. The excitement was very great in consequence of the split, and caused no little ill-will.

The following is a brief statement of the meeting of the Amhersburg or Buchanan section. A printed notice, purporting to be signed by the Secretary, Mr. McKay, calling the meeting for eleven o'clock, A.M., at the Town Hall; this appeared to be done under the direction of this party of Directors. As the other section of them did not recognize the meeting thus called, and who held theirs at Mr. Harrison's Hotel—a report of which we will give below.

Mr. McKAY opened the meeting thus called, and having read the minutes of the meeting held at St. Thomas on the 5th July past, which authorized the calling of this one,

JOHN MCLEOD, Esq., was elected Chairman, and Mr. MCKAY, of St. Thomas, was appointed Secretary of the meeting.

It was moved and carried, that Messrs. Baby, of London, and White, of St. Thomas, be scrutineers of votes.

The Secretary then read that section of the Act of Parliament relative to the appointment of Directors, and stated what was necessary at present to do.

The Chairman explained that, at a meeting of the Provisional Directors, held in St. Thomas, last September, (1855), it was resolved that all deposits of instalments on shares should be made in the Bank of Upper Canada by its agencies, and that shareholders who could not produce a certificate of deposit from that Bank, of the ten per cent., would not be permitted to vote for the election of Directors.

Upon which, the Secretary, by request, read the names of holders of certificates of deposit in that Bank that had been handed in

The Chairman then requested all persons present who claimed a right to vote to produce them at once.

The Sheriff, Monroe of St. Thomas, presented a certificate of Deposit of the ten per cent. upon ten shares, in the agency of the Commercial Bank at St. Thomas, which the chairman declared to be insufficient to entitle him to vote. Mr. Ermatinger and others did the same, but were rejected; he then requested the right to address the meeting, which being granted, stated,—

That from the length of time which had elapsed since the resolution had been passed requiring the deposits to be made in the Bank of Upper Canada and its agencies, that it had altogether escaped his memory, and he was certain that it was known to very few, if any, interested in the matter, and from the little interest that appeared to be taken in the matter at the time, and the advertisement in regard to the present meeting was so inexplicit in not giving full particulars, that he and many others were, tho' justly, excluded from voting. Yet he acquiesced in the decision of the chairman. And that the meeting held in St. Thomas, of Provisional Directors, at the celebration of the opening of the London and Port Stanley Road, when the books were closed, was held without notice having been given to some of the Directors.

Mr. Sheriff Monroe then stated that the feelings of the inhabitants of St. Thomas, were identical with those of Amherstburg, and that had he himself and other friends been permitted to vote, their votes would have been given to persons having the same views and interests as those who he believed would be now elected. The interest manifested by those who have much influence in the Great Western Railway was, he believed sincere, and was satisfied that the Southern Road would, with their assistance, be at once built, and he had no doubt in good hands would prove a more remunerative investment than the Great Western Railway, and thus induce English capitalists to invest their money in this County in the hands of honest men, as he believed the proposed Directors were, than in the hands of those who would tack on worthless schemes. The chairman then stated that although the St. Thomas Shareholders, in consequence of not having paid their deposits into the proper Bank could not be elected Directors, nevertheless that so soon as the Board of Directors had been properly organized—that they would find seats in the Board Room.

The scrutineers then declared the following persons duly elected:

1. WILLIAM DUFF.
2. JAMES DUNBAR.
3. J. W. RIDSDALE.
4. PETER MENZIES.
5. J. B. BERTHLET.
6. THEODORE PARK.
7. JOHN McLEOD.
8. JOHN G. KOLFAGE.
9. WILLIAM WALLACE.

It was then moved and carried that the chairman leave the chair and that Sheriff Monroe of the county of Elgin fill the same.

A vote of thanks was then recorded to Mr. MacLeod for his able and efficient conduct in the chair.

Mr. McLeod having returned thanks in elegant and appropriate language the meeting then broke up. The following are the Minutes of the Meeting held at Mr. Horsman's Hotel by the Rankin and Zimmerman's party.

Minutes of Meeting of Provincial Directors and Stock-Holders of the Amherstburgh and St. Thomas Railroad held at Amherstburgh pursuant to Notice on Thursday the 7th August 1856.

The Provincial Directors present were A. Rankin Esq., M. P. P., Geo. Macbeth Esq., M. P. P., Edwin Larwill Esq., M. P. P., Geo Southwick Esq., M. P. P., and John McLeod Esq.

Messrs Kolfage and Paul were in the Town and notified to attend the meeting.

Mr. McLeod stated that he declined taking any part in the meeting.

Edwin Larwill Esq., M. P. P., was moved into the Chair, and Mr. Paul Salter was appointed Secretary.

1st. It was resolved that Messrs Mc Beth and Southwick be authorised to demand from Mr. McKay all Stock Books and papers and certificates of Deposit now in his hands belonging to the Amherstburg and St. Thomas Railroad Company.

In reply to the demand for the Books and papers made to Mr. McKay by Messrs Mac Beth and Southwick a direct refusal was given by McKay.

2d. It was resolved that a list of Shareholders be made and handed to the Scrutineers for their guidance, also a list of persons qualified to act as Directors.

3d. It was resolved that the votes of the Shareholders shall be received by two persons as Scrutineers, who shall make an entry for whom the qualified Shareholders named in the list of persons entitled to vote, shall vote, and the number of the votes given by each.

4th. It was resolved that the vote of every shareholder appearing on each list shall be received from himself or proxy by the Scrutineers upon the production of the Bank Deposit Certificate of ten per cent of the amount of his Stock being paid to the credit of the Company if the same has not been hitherto delivered to the Provisional Directors, which Certificate of Deposit as well as the Proxy papers (if vote by Proxy) shall be returned as the authority for registering the vote.

5th. It was resolved that the Poll be now held at Horseman's Inn and opened forthwith. *

6th. It was resolved that Messrs O'Connor and Van-horman be the Scrutineers.

7th. It was resolved that the supposed taking of Stock by Mr. Wallace of £500,000 is a fraud upon the Provisional Directors and all others, subscribers of stock, that such taking of stock was done in a clandestine manner with a view of using it, if an opportunity should present itself to the injury of this Company. That in the opinion of the Directors the name of Mr. Wallace was inserted in the stock Book after the closing of the books. That it is alleged that such stock was taken long prior to the amended Charter of last Session, which amended act was passed upon the grounds that sufficient Stock could not be obtained, and that it was expedient to reduce the amount, necessary to organize the Company to £250,000 instead of £500,000 and the Provisional Directors pressed the amended Charter upon that ground, while if the statement of Mr. Wallace was true, over £500,000 were then subscribed. That since the amended Charter gentlemen were pressed by the Provisional Directors to take sufficient stock in good faith to organize the company upon the assurance and under condition that no stock, but a few thousand pounds, was then subscribed. That further the Provisional Directors are of opinion that Mr. Wallace is the mere agent of the Great Western Company, whose interests are antagonistic to this Company, and that the means of the Great Western are employed to prevent the construction of this Railway. That under all the circumstances the Provisional Directors feel it incumbent upon them to declare that the taking of Stock by Mr. Wallace is illegal, and that Mr. Wallace has no right to vote at the Election of Directors,

The Provisional Directors are also of opinion that as it is not known to them when the £500,000 stock lastly subscribed by Mr. Zimmerman was taken, and it is alleged that it was taken after the close of the Books, that the taking of such stock by Mr. Zimmerman is illegal, and that he has no right to vote upon the stock either, and that both their names be struck out of the Stock Book.

The Scrutineers having reported to the Chairman of the Meeting that Messrs Arthur Rankin, Geo. Southwick, Geo. Macbeth, Geo. McMicken, R. G. Benedict, Joseph A. Woodruff, James Zimmerman, John W. Dunckley, and John McLeod were elected Directors of the present Company, and these Gentlemen were declared duly elected Directors.

A vote of thanks was then returned to the Chairman, and the meeting adjourned.

(Signed,) EDWIN LARWILL,
CHAIRMAN.

P. J. SALTER, Sec.

At two o'clock a meeting was called by the Reeve of Amherstburg, and held in front of the Salmoni House, for the purpose of giving parties an opportunity of explaining their motives in connection with the Railway, when Mr. Rankin defended himself from the attacks that had been made upon him for the line of conduct he has pursued. In justice to Mr. Rankin, we cannot but say his treatment on the whole by the Amherstburg people, has not been what it should. There can be no doubt that he used every exertion, and every energy was strained to obtain the charter for this Road, and favored that town in no small degree. It is hardly fair, then, so soon as the Road is in a fair way of being built, to turn upon him and impute motives which are anything but consistent with his exertions on their behalf.

REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT SCHEME.—In another column will be found an advertisement, offering the greatest chance to the Public, of securing real estate which has yet ever been brought forward, and from the position of the property and its being situated in most favourable localities, we need hardly say that the opportunity should not be lost.

A melancholy accident occurred in Amherstburg on Sunday last. John McLeod, Jun., son of John McLeod, Esq., of that place, accidentally fell from a dock and was drowned. Deceased was about eight years of age.

Arrival of the Arago.

NEW YORK, August 11.

The steamship Arago, from Havre, July 13th, arrived here this morning. She brings London dates of July 30th and 175 passengers, among them C. M. Ferring, bearer of dispatches from St. Petersburg.

The steamer Baltic arrived off Pt. Lucas the morning of the 7Oth, exchanged signal Aug. 3th, latitude 43.40 longitude 54.40, with the steamer Persia.

ITALY.—The outbreak at Massacara was completely suppressed. Twenty arrests were made. Most of the persons arrested, who belonged to the Mazzinian party, have been sentenced to imprisonment in irons for 2 years and the others for terms of twenty years.

Three millions of ball cartridges were ordered to be sent from Cologne to Italy.

SPAIN.—Intelligence is to the 24th.—The revolution is nearly suppressed. Verna had been evacuated by Gen. Ruex, and he, with other chiefs, have fled to France.—Little intelligence, however, states that Malaga and Grenada had pronounced against O'Donnel, and that the Royal troops had joined the movement.

CHINA.—Advices from China state that the revolution was progressing. Sixty-five rebels were beheaded in Canton in one day.

The English money market reported flat, caused partly by a further decline in the Paris Bourse.

There was an active demand for money on the stock exchange at 4½ per cent.

Foreign Securities firm but closed easier.

The London Times of the 29th contains an article laudatory of Col. Fremont, and speaks of his political address as worthy of any statesman.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—It is not true that Judge McLean has issued a warrant of habeas corpus in the case of the persons charged with treason in Kansas. Application was made to him and refused, it not appearing on the face of the papers that their detention was without law, but on warrants issued by a court of competent jurisdiction.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 11.—The town Pomeroy, Ohio, was destroyed by fire on Friday, p. m. Sixty houses were destroyed, including all the business portion of the town, the court house and public offices. Two persons were killed by falling walls.

SENATE.—Washington, July 14th. Mr. Mason submitted a resolution which was adopted, calling on the President for information as to what measures had been taken by this government with regard to the position adopted by the allied forces of Europe recently held in Paris, respecting the abolition of privateering and the doctrine that free ships make free goods. Mr. Mason said that it was somewhat remarkable that those powers should have presented these propositions as a new question, when it was known that the U. S. had contended for their adoption ever since the foundation of this government.

Arrival of the Canada.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE

Halifax, Aug. 11.

The Canada arrived at half-past 4 this p. m., with Liverpool dates to Aug 2.

An earthquake had occurred at the Molucca, and 2000 were killed.

From Spain accounts are conflicting. The indications are that the Royalists had triumphed and Saragossa will soon be reduced. Senor Olosego, Spanish Ambassador to Paris, resigned immediately on hearing the coup d'etat, but the Queen refused to accept his resignation. Advices to the 29th say the Provinces are tranquil, excepting Sargossa, and that city is closely invested and must submit.

The King of Belgium contradicts the report of his contemplated resignation.

Advices from Stockholm mention a great excitement among diplomatists, in consequence of reclamations made by Norway against Russian encroachments on Norwegian territories, in planning fortifications along the Baltic coasts.

In Italy the Austrians were making preparations for crossing the River Po at four different points.

Further by the Canada.

New York, Aug. 12.—The steamship Canada left Halifax at 6 o'clock last evening, and will be due at Boston about day break to-morrow.

Austrian letters by the Canada state that the relations of Austria and Russia are be coming friendly.

Russia has reduced her tariff on sugar.—Russian letters deny that the Aland Islands will be fortified, but admit that they will be garrisoned by Russian troops.

Respecting Russian observations of the Isle of Seputus, Lord Stratford de Radcliffe had sent Gen. Mansfield to inquire into it.

Intelligence from Constantinople states that the insurrection in Arabia had been completely subdued. The chief of the insurrection was captured at the fortress of Kalf and sent prisoner to Constantinople.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The Times, in giving the despatches from Spain which the Monitour publishes, expressly says that it does not guarantee their authenticity.

General Codrington arrived in London last night.

The Times contains a leading article on the position of Smith O'Brien, commended for his resolution to act the part of a country gentleman rather that of a Senator.

The Monitour contains the following:

"SR. SEBASTIAN, July 31st.—News has just been received via Pampeluna and Irun that all Catalonia has acknowledged the Government of the Queen of Spain. Navarre and Basque provinces enjoy the most perfect tranquility."

ST. JOHNS, N. B., Aug. 12.—Twenty buildings in this city were burned this morning, including dwellings, tanneries and factories located on Waterloo, Union and Brussels streets. Loss unknown.

BOOK NOTICE.

"LIFE AND VOYAGES OF AMERICUS VESPUCIUS," is the title of an excellent and interesting book upon the early discoveries on this continent by C. E. LESTER. The contents are taken from manuscripts which were supposed to have been entirely lost, but the persevrance of the author has brought to light many interesting and valuable facts which otherwise would have likely never seen the light of day. No subject can possess more interest than this, and no one should be without a copy of this work.

Sir Astley Cooper's Pills

Have acquired much of their celebrity from the fact that they soothe the system, destroy latent diseases, impart cheerfulness, and that appetite comes back again, and with a little perseverance, even the oldest man discovers that he has a chance of living a little longer.

Sir Astley Cooper's Pills will prove highly efficacious in bilious complaints, scorbutic disorders, liver complaints, affections of the nervous system, lowness of spirits, palpitation of the heart, rheumatic pains in the head, limbs, and other parts, and, with a little perseverance, even the oldest man discovers that he has a chance of living a little longer.

Sir Astley Cooper's Pills will prove highly efficacious in bilious complaints, scorbutic disorders, liver complaints, affections of the nervous system, lowness of spirits, palpitation of the heart, rheumatic pains in the head, limbs, and other parts, and, with a little impairment of the chest, indigestion, loss of appetite, redundancy of bile, dizziness of the eyes, vicious taste in the mouth and furred tongue, impaired memory, sick headache, tremulous action of the whole frame, restlessness and bad dreams, stoporific dozing, flatulency, costiveness, &c.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—Observe that on the top of each box of the Genuine Pills there is a correct likeness of Sir Astley Cooper, with a fac-simile of his signature, and likewise also the fac-simile of the signature of the Proprietors, McPhail & Co., London and New York, on each box, and on the directions without these marks they are spurious and an imposition.

Sold at 25 and 50 cents per box, and in Family boxes at $1 each. There is a great saving by the large size packages.

For sale by Simpson and Dunspaugh, Druggists, Toronto; John M. Thornton, Dundas; Andrew Oliver Galt; A. H. Cook, Brantford; General Agents, by whom County Druggists and Merchants will be supplied at London and New York prices.

The Grist Mill is situated in the Township of Sandwich, and a portion of the Town Lots and an excellent House and Lot are situate in the Town of Amherstburg; the remaining Town and Villa Lots in the Town of Sandwich, the County Town of Essex and on the beautiful river Detroit. The Wild Lands are situate in different parts of the County of Essex and are very valuable.

The Town Lots are large with fine broad streets, and close to the business part of the Town.

The Great Southern Railway Terminus will be within a very short distance of these Lots.

The Villa Lots have a most beautiful situation, being high and well adapted for gentlemen's residences, having a fine broad avenue laid out, on which they front; and are not surpassed in respect to beauty and position by any in the Province.

There are a greater number of prizes in proportion to the number of tickets to be sold than in any similar scheme yet offered to the public. The drawing will take place under the superintendence of a committee of gentlemen, to be appointed on the day of drawing by the holders of tickets.

☞ Parties remitting to the subscriber one hundred dollars will receive a package of twenty-eight tickets in return.

Crown Lands Department.

Toronto, 24th July 1856.

THE undermentioned lots which form a part of the Northern and Southern portions of the Island of St. Joseph, Lake Huron, will be offered at Public Auction, at the office of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, in the City of Toronto, on Monday, the Fifteenth September next, at the hour of noon Upset price two shillings and six pence per acre; one fifth to be paid down at the time of Sale, the remainder by four yearly instalments with interests on each as it becomes due, or Patents may issue as soon as the purchase money shall be paid up in full.

The map of the Island may be inspected during business hours, up to the day of Sale.

A considerable portion of the Island of St. Joseph is of a good quality, well timbered, and the soil adapted for Agricultural purposes, and the waters around it abound with excellent fisheries.

The Mining regions will afford a favorable market for the surplus Agricultural produce raised upon the Island, which lies in the course of, and possesses stopping places for the American and Canadian Steamers, proceeding to the Sault St. Marie.

CATHARTIC PILLS

OPERATE by their powerful influence on the internal viscera, to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, and, by restoring their irregular action to health, correct, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first causes of disease. An extensive trial of their virtues, by Professors, Physicians, and Patients, has shown cures of dangerous diseases almost beyond belief, were they not substantiated by persons of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Their certificates are published in my American Almanac, which the Agents below named are pleased to furnish free to all inquiring.

Annexed we give Directions for their use in the complaints which they have been found to cure.

FOR COSTIVENESS.—Take one or two Pills, or such quantity as to gently move the bowels. Costiveness is frequently the aggravating cause of Piles, and the cure of one complaint is the cure of both. No person can feel well while under a costive habit of body. Hence it should be, as it can be, promptly relieved.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, which is sometimes the cause of Costiveness, and always uncomfortable, take mild doses—from one to four—to stimulate the stomach and liver into healthy action. They will do it, and the heartburn, headpain, and soulburn of dyspepsia will rapidly disappear. When it has gone, don't forget what cured you.

FOR A FOUL STOMACH, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take from four to eight Pills at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until activity and strength is restored to the system.

FOR NERVOUSNESS, SICK HEADACHE, NAUSEA, Pain in the Stomach, Back, or Side, take from four to eight Pills to start with. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more the next day until they do. These complaints will be swept out from the system. Don't wear them and their kindred disorders because your stomach is foul.

FOR SCROFULA, ERYSIPELAS, and all Diseases of the Skin, take the Pills freely and frequently, to keep the bowels open. The eruptions will generally soon begin to diminish and disappear. Many dreadful ulcers and sores have been healed up by the purging and purifying effect of these Pills, and some disgusting diseases which seemed to saturate the whole system have completely yielded to their influence, leaving the sufferer in perfect health. Patients! your duty to society forbids that you should parade yourself around the world covered with pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores, and all or any of the unclean diseases of the skin, because your system wants cleansing.

TO PURIFY THE BLOOD, they are the best medicine ever discovered. They should be taken freely and frequently, and the impurities which sow the seeds of incurable diseases will be swept out of the system like chaff before the wind. By this property they do as much good in preventing sickness as by the remedial cures which they are making every where.

LIVER COMPLAINT, JAUNDICE, and all Bilious Affections arise from some derangement—either torpidity, congestion, or obstructions of the Liver. Torpidity and congestion excite the bile and render it unfit for digestion. This is disastrous to the health, and the constitution is frequently undermined by no other cause. Indigestion is the symptom. Obstruction of the duct which empties the bile into the stomach causes the bile to overflow into the blood. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternately costiveness and diarrhœa, prevails. Feverish symptoms, hungry, low spirits, weariness, restlessness, and melancholy, with sometimes inability to sleep, and sometimes great drowsiness; sometimes there is severe pain in the side; the skin and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow; the stomach and; the bowels sore to the touch; the whole system irritable, with a tendency to fever, which may turn to bilious fever, bilious colic, bilious diarrhœa, dysentery, &c. A medium dose of three or four Pills taken at night, followed by two or three in the morning, and repeated a few days, will remove the cause of all these troubles. It is wicked to suffer such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

RHEUMATISM, GOUT, and all Inflammatory Fevers are rapidly cured by the purifying effects of these Pills upon the blood and the stimulus which they afford to the vital principle of Life. For these and all kindred complaints they should be taken in mild doses, to move the bowels gently, but freely.

AS A DINNER PILL, this is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has been made more effectual to the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

Field-Mice, Hedges, &c.

To the Editor of the Agriculturist.

DEAR SIR,—I was talking the other day to a shrewd, practical old Canadian farmer —one of the very early settlers in the neighbourhood—on the subject of field mice destroying the orchard trees. He suggested as a preventative, first the careful removal of straw and loose litter from the roots of young trees in the fall; substituting in lieu of the usual mulching a dressing of leached ashes, fine mould, or well rotted manure; and as soon as the snow acquired any depth, to send a man with heavy boots on, to tramp the snow well round the tree; beating it as hard as he could with his feet. This plant would, he asserted me, effectually preserve the trees from the depredations of the mice, who harbour among the loose rubbish, and work their way through the new-fallen snow. This advice, coming from an old, experienced apple-grower, and one unmarriageable for his general practical knowledge, I consider as valuable, and I venture to offer it, on his testimony, to the readers of the Agriculturist.

I have seen a mixture of tar and lime used as a paint in the old country to prevent the ravages of hares and rabbits on young apple trees, the paint being applied with a brush to a height of three or four feet from the ground.

The practice, so universally adopted, of mulching the roots of young orchard trees with stable litter may be one fruitful source of the increased destruction of fruit trees, thereby affording shelter to vermin of this kind. The substitution of ashes and earth, to be removed again by the hoe in the month of May, would, I think, be equally serviceable to the tree, and not offer the same objection, especially if it were well trodden down or beaten hard with the spade.

Even if this process be a remedy for the barking of trees from mice in orchards, I fear it will hardly be available in respect to the hedge plants, as those little animals would find a comfortable shelter among the roots in the interior of the hedge, where no person could use his foot for beating down snow or earth; even were labour so cheap as to admit of time being so employed.

CHEAP CAKE.—One cup of sugar, one of buttermilk, two ounces of butter, one teaspoonful of saleratus, one essence of lemon; stir in flour til quite stiff; beat the mixture well before baking.

WHITE CAKE.—One and a half cups of sugar, one of milk, two of flour, four tablespoonfuls of butter, one teaspoonful of cream tartar, one-half do. of soda; the whites of three eggs.

COOKIE.—One cup of butter, two of sugar, two eggs, one teaspoon of saleratus dissolved in two tablespoons of milk.

COMMON SOAP.—To make excellent soap for common uses, you must have your ashes, and put them in hoppers or barrels, on a thick layer of straw, adding a half bushel of lime to a common sized hopper; wet the ashes for several days to let them rot; then run it through, and it will be strong; put it in your kettle and boil it, and fill it up for two or three days, or till you can skim up thick potash, that looks like dirty salt, then take out one-fourth of the lye and potash, and set it aside. Now get your grease, and put in the coarsest skins of bones, bones, &c., you have, and Material for Draining, as they facilitate greatly in the labor, also in the expense of Draining, only requiring a Drain the width of the Spade and two feet down will never require removing. Samples may be seen and orders received at the Store of Mr. J. Fitzell, corner of Richmond and Dundas Streets, London.

Also Roofing Tiles and Press Bricks for fronting Buildings of a superior quality.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,
AND JOURNAL OF SUBURBAN ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the United States.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced. The growing interest with which the rising generation view the science of Horticulture, renders such a Journal as "The Illustrated Horticulturist" imperatively necessary to the progress of Rural affairs.

Rural Architecture forms one of the principal features; each number contains from two to four engravings of model cottages, from designs by eminent and skilful architects. Space is also assigned to the tasteful art of Landscape Gardening, and the formation of gardens in every style, and adapted to the peculiarities of different orders of architecture, beautifies the work.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and to all who can boast the sovereignty of a square rod of tillable earth, "The Illustrated Horticulturist and Journal of Suburban Art" will prove a valuable companion. The extraordinary low price at which it is afforded: together with its really superior execution, both in regard to typography and editorial ability, must make it the most popular work of the kind in America.

"The Illustrated Horticulturist" is printed on the finest quality of pearl surfaced paper, manufactured expressly for this work, regularly the first of each month, commencing with July, 1855. The following gentlemen, eminent for their ability in the science of Horticulture, will conduct the editorial department: H. P. KNIGHT, JAMES SNOWDEN and D. W. RAY.

TERMS: Two Dollars per annum, payable invariably in advance; a liberal discount to the Trade, Postmasters, and getters-up of Clubs.

Advertisements inserted at the rate of Ten Dollars per page.

N.B.— Newspapers inserting the above prospectus, and drawing attention editorially to the same, will be forwarded the ILLUSTRATED HORTICULTURIST for a year, a copy containing the advertisement should be sent in all cases to ensure attention.

NEW VOLUME OF THE
AGRICULTURIST

SUBSCRIPTION REDUCED FROM 25 TO 50 PER CENT.

The Canadian Agriculturist

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by its present proprietor in 1848, and is too well known to the leading farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us here. The undersigned have made arrangements with the proprietor to publish the next, and probably succeeding volumes, and have resolved to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE
Illustrated with Engravings

Such as Farm Implements, Portraits of Animals, designs of Farm Buildings, New Inventions, &c., &c., interesting to the Farmer, and also portraits of some of the most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM MACDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the direction of the Agricultural Bureau in this city. The active promoter of the various improvements made in our Agricultural Legislation since 1847, and having also been connected with this Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and writings in behalf of Canadian Agriculture are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to its columns as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to extend the correspondence on subjects of a practical kind.

Select Poetry.

I Have Wandered far from thee, Mother.

I have wandered far from thee, Mother—
Far from our happy home;
I have left the land that gave me birth,
In other climes to roam—
And time, since then, has rolled in years,
And marked them on my brow;
Yet still I think of thee—
I'm thinking of thee now.

I am thinking of the days, Mother,
When, with such earnest pride,
You watched the dawning of my youth
And clasped me to your side;
And memory brings thy parting words
When tears fell on thy cheek—
But the last loving anxious look
Told more than words could speak.

I am far away from thee, Mother,
No friend is near me now,
To soothe me with a gentle word,
Nor cool my burning brow;
The dearest ties affection wove,
Are now all torn from me;
They left me when my sorrow came—
They did not love like thee.

I know thy tender heart, mother,
Still beats the same for me,
As when I left thee long ago,
To cross the dark, blue sea.
But still I love thee just the same;
I long to hear thee speak,
And feel upon thy balmy breath,
Upon my care-worn cheek.

But, ah! there is a thought, Mother,
Pervades this beating breast,
That thy fresh spirit may have flown
To its eternal rest;
And, as I wipe the tear away,
There whispers in my ear,
A voice that speaks of Heaven and thee,
And bids me seek thee, there.

Jealousy.

'Thank heaven for my safe return!' was the ejaculation that escaped my lips as I stepped from the deck of the Crescent City and once more found myself in the great commercial emporium of our western world.

'Three years ago, I left this very wharf a poor adventure, in pursuit of wealth amid the gold mines of California, and although thousands have fallen victims to pestilence or have been sacrificed to the malice and cupidity of man, yet I have returned in health, and possessed of a sufficiency of the "glittering dust," to enable me to pass the rest of my days in affluence.'

Twenty four hours subsequent to the above reflections, I found myself at a country inn, near the interior of the State, awaiting the arrival of the stage coach which was to bear me to the next town. While at Sacramento I had forwarded a few hundred dollars, in care of a firm in New York, to my widowed mother, but on my recent arrival I learned that it had not been ordered by her. Thus gave me some uneasiness, and was a cause of hastening my departure from the city, as I had a vague apprehension that some calamity had befallen her during my absence. Still I confess this was not the only cause of my anxious haste to reach my native town. It was there resided the loved one of my heart —the bright divinity of my soul, whose image had been with me through all the varied and eventful scenes I had encountered since my departure from R.

In the midst of reflections like the above, the diligence arrived, and I was soon on my way to my native town. One passenger was my only companion—a tall, genteel, well dressed personage apparently about my age, with whom I was soon engaged in conversation. Being somewhat communicative, he at length informed me that the place of his destination was the same as that of my own.

'Are you acquainted in R.?' I inquired of him.

'With only one or two families!' was the reply.

'Do you know widow H.?' inquired I with some anxiety.

'She that lives next to Squire Ellmore's?'

'The same.'

'I have seen her while on a visit to the Squire's.'

This answer in a measure relieved me from the anxiety I had felt concerning my mother's safety. After a short time, however, it began to awaken in my mind a somewhat perplexing inquiry. Why, said I, should this young, genteel appearing man be a visitor at Squire Ellmore's. I considered it, the more perplexing became the answer.

'You are acquainted, then, at Squire Ellmore's?' said I, with affected indifference.

'Yes sir' was the reply,' 'that is the place of my present destination.'

This answer, certainly, did not tend to allay my growing uneasiness. Yet as to entertaining any feeling of jealousy—pshaw! the idea was absurd! Still I considered there could be no harm in continuing my enquiries:

'A very pleasant and agreeable family, that of Squire Ellmore's observed I.

'You are quite right, sir,' he responded: "the Squire and his lady are a very agreeable old couple: and as for Miss Julia, she is a perfect model of beauty and excellence.'

Now all this I know to be true, but what right had he to know it? Could he be a rival in Miss Julia's affections? Nonsense! Impossible! I knew her too well to doubt her constancy for a moment. Yet the thought that my mother had failed to apply for what I had sent her from the land of gold, suggested the idea that perhaps my letters to her had not been received; and if her's had failed why might not those I had written to Julia have shared the same fate? Still I cannot and will not doubt the constancy of my dear Julia. As for my travelling companion, he is probably some relative. Who knows but he may be my cousin-in-law, or some other future relative.

'May I inquire, sir, if you are related to Squire Ellmore's family?' was the next query.

'Related! oh no, sir, not at all; I'm merely an acquaintance. I am expected there this evening; I promised Miss Ellmore I would come without fail.'

This answer only increased my agitation but fearing lest I should betray my feelings. I leaned my head on my hands, and feigned fatigue. The more I reflected on the subject, the firmer hold did the 'green-eyed monster' gain over me. Still I determined that I would not thus distrust my Julia.—Perhaps thought I, this fellow is only a conceited coxcomb, and wishes to pass himself off as an accepted lover.

I raised my head, and assuming a jocular tone, asked my companion if he thought Miss Ellmore really handsome?

'I will leave you to judge for yourself,' said he, 'as I happen to have a fac simile of herself with me.' Saying this he drew forth a neat gold locket from his vest, and handed it toward me.

Heavens! how the blood rushed to my face It was my last parting gift to Julia. I took it in my hand—I knew it well. It was a double case, and I remember that my own miniatnre had been set in the reverse. After gazing a moment at Julia's well-known face, I turned the locket, opened the opposite side, and found it empty.

How I managed to keep my temper I know not; but I returned the locket to my companion and became comparatively calm just as we stopped in the front of Squire Ellmore's residence. Julia was seated on the verandah in front of the dwelling, and as my companion alighted, I heard the exclamation. He's come!' fall from her lips.

What a change had the last hour wrought in my feelings! Had not the incidents above mentioned transpired, I would have hastened to embrace the whom I had hitherto supposed a model of constancy. As it was, I thanked my stars that I had learned her perfidity in time to save myself the mortification that might otherwise have ensued.

My reflections were now interrupted by a request on the part of my companion that I would alight from the coach, while he should take a roll of canvass from beneath my seat. I complied, taking especial care, however, not to be observed by the perfidious Julia. Had she ill luck would have it, Squire Ellmore's gardener saw and recognized me and at the time exclaimed:

'Here, Julia! good news! George H. has come!'

Confound the fellow's impudence! I could have strangled him. I turned to regain my seat in the vehicle, but in an instant Julia had flown to my side, thrown her arms around my neck, and almost smothered me with kisses! I was thunderstruck.

'Why, Julia—what means—indeed Miss, said I, hesitating and stammering; 'you forgot you had a friend and visitor present.'

Julia blushed, and turned to my companion—'You will pardon such manifestations in your presence, Mr. Martin, when I inform you that this is George H., the original of the portrait I have employed you to paint.'

I comprehended in an instant. Mr. Martin was only an artist, who had been intrusted with my minature to transfer a copy on canvass, and that he might accomplish his design, it had been temporarily taken from the locket. I soon accompanied the party into the house, and as the canvass was unrolled, and I beheld my own self faithfully represented thereon I confess that all my jealously oozed out at the end of my fingers.

Instead of parting as I will towards my fellow traveller, I complimented him highly on his professional skill, and, at his request gave him a 'good recommendation' to the public in general, and all my friends in particular.

Just one week from that day. Miss Julia Ellmore became Mrs. George H., and since that time we have had more than one hearty laugh at my jealous indignation toward a poor innocent portrait painter.

TERRIBLE COLLIERY EXPLOSION—ONE HUNDRED AND TWELVE LIVES LOST.—An explosion occurred on Tuesday last, in the collieries of Messrs Insols & Co., at Cymmer situate in the Rhondda Valley about four ten miles above Cardiff, which has produced consequences hitherto unparalleled in the melancholy history of colliery accidents in South Wales. The fearful occurrence took place between the hour of eight and nine o'clock in the morning, and at that time it is supposed that there were about 130 men at work in the pit, of whom only fifteen have been got out alive. Up to ten o'clock last Wednesday morning, no less than 110 bodies have been brought out. The dismay caused by this dreadful occurrence may be well imagined. In one house are lying five bodies, and of a choir of singers who had attained considerable local celebrity, under the name of the "Porth Choir," only one male member is left alive. At present, of course, no cause can be assigned for the explosion, but the barometer at the time was falling—a circumstance which has attended every former occurrence of the kind, and which should impose on the overlookers extra caution whenever atmospheric alterations may be expected.

The spectacle in a great majority of cases, was frightful, the major part of the unfortunate deceased having met their deaths from the fire, not the choke damp, the former causing the body to become charred and scorched almost to a cinder, while the "damp" causes death by suffocation, and leaves but little trace upon the countenance, except an expression like that of sleep.

It appears that on Tuesday morning, 116 or 117 men and boys went down into the Cymmer pit. The two firemen, whose duty it was to examine the pit, reascended about 6 o'clock, pronouncing the pit safe. In less than an hour after the gas exploded. and the slumbering people ran hither and thither for a few moments. Then one fell in the dark, and others stumbled on their dead companions, and fell dead also. Here some were struggling amid the tortures of the fire; there a tram full of boys all dead; and in other places, in siding or inches in the level, men sat down to await their fearful doom, and had died with their faces buried in their hands, and their elbows resting on their knees. Some had struggled forward, no doubt hoping to reach the airways and possibly escape.

All day long the brave fellows ventured down, almost in the face of death, to bring up the bodies of the unfortunate men and boys who had perished, and when these were brought to the surface the recognition of a beloved husband or darling child awoke harrowing cries.

Workmen were immediately put on to supply coffins for the dead. There they were working hastily with the saw and plane, to construct rude sheils, in which to deposite the unfortunate dead in their untimely graves amid the crowds of eager people, still gathering in for the last of the dreadful catastrophe. —English Paper.

Mr. Gunn's Machine Shop.

If anything were wanting to demonstrate the rapid progress of Upper Canada, it would be found in the establishment of such works as those now under notice. A day or two since we had an opportunity of inspecting the machinery now in operation, as well as the plans in progress, which will complete one of the most extensive and capable shops west of New York.

The site of this new establishment is at the eastern limits of the city of Hamilton, between the track of the Great Western Railroad and the bay, and comprises about fifty acres. The building, which is most substantially built of stone, was erected by Mr. Williams, for the purposes of his contract with the Great Western Railroad Company; it is a most commodious work-shop. The various machines are driven by a forty-five horse power engine which works just as if it were propelled by the breath of life. There are all sorts of lathes, shears, punches, drills, planing machines, &c., which almost instantly convert rude blocks of iron into the well-proportioned, polished portion of some leviathan of power and labor. And then, those wonderful contrivances, hatched by the fertile inventive genius one Nasmyth, of Manchester, what shall be said of them? Capable of beating scrap-iron into steamboat shafts into fingernails, yet they may be so nicely regulated as to give the rat-tat on the head of a kettle-drum, or put the last touch on the point of a horse-shoe nail.—Mr. Gunn has one or two of these steam blacksmiths' ready for work, and others are only awaiting the erection of a suitable building for their accommodation. When all are completed, it would be hard to say what they could or could not do.

These extensive works are under the management of a gentleman who must be well known in the mechanical world, by his connection with a leading work-shop in Dundee, formerly, and subsequently as conductor of works in Montreal.

Three locomotives are now being constructed, giving employment to upwards of fifty men.

Mems. of the Palmer Case.

Some very curious facts anent the Palmer case have recently transpired. I hear Sir Alexander Cockburn is said to have stated that he could not conceive any person in Palmer's position showing the firmness and nerve that he did, when he knew that, were he acquitted for Cook's murder there was not the smallest doubt about his being convicted for the murder of his wife. The Attorney General declares that, for reasons which he does not care to divulge, he took the most doubtful case first, but that, from his thorough investigation of at the circumstances connected with the death of Cook, Palmer, he had never the least doubt as to his power of convicting Palmer for that murder. Another curious thing is that, during his trial, while Lord Derby was seated on the bench, a note was accidently dropped by Palmer on to the floor, and handed by one of the gaolers to Mr. Wetherhead, the governor of Newgate. On perusing it Mr. Wetherhead found it to be from Lord Derby's head trainer, disclosing several secrets of the racing stable to Palmer, and hinting at the consideration that was to be paid for the information. Mr. Wetherhead immediately gave the letter to Baron Alderson who glanced at its contents, and, with a smile, handed it to Lord Derby. It is needless to say that the trainer has since been dismissed. I have heard it stated that the private diary of Wainwright, the insurance poisoner, (an elaborate account of whose case was given in this journal some months ago,) in which, in his own handwriting, was a deliberate account of all his murders, or attempt to murder, was lying in a house within five minutes' walk of the Old Bailey while his disciple, Palmer was being tried for a similar crime; for Wainright was a strychinine poisoner, knowing how he had escaped punishment, imitated his practice and hoped for similar result.—Illustrated News.

THE MARCH OF IMPROVEMENT.—We understand that a gentleman, well acquainted with Colonial affairs, and at present connected with the press of Upper Canada, has lately made a proposition to the owners of the Leviathar Steam ship, the "Great Eastern" to establish a Printing office on board, and issue a daily paper on the voyage. A reading room supplied the principal Colonial Newspapers, and a Land Agency office, we are informed, are also intended to be connected with the printing department, so that the enquiring emigrant can at once obtain correct information respecting farms, lands, &c., for sale in any part of the Province. The perusal of a newspaper published in the wide expanse of the Atlantic Ocean and furnishing us with the latest European intelligence, will, no doubt, be considered a novelty even in these days of progression—but it is anticipated, that the idea, if carried into execution, as our friend proposes, and sanctioned by the Colonial Government, will prove a benefit to the Province at large, and produce the good effect of inducing many emigrants to remain in a healthy country, where excellent land can be obtained on more moderate terms than in the far west. If our friend's proposition be accepted, we guess he may calculate on a very excellent advertising patronage, and subscriptions paid up in advance. The Great Eastern we are informed can accomodate with [illegible] wards of two thousand passengers, the greater portion of whom, probably, will be subscribers to the Marine Journal,—she will, we understand, make eight or ten voyages during the season, so that there will be no lack of new names on the subscription books Kemptville Progressionist.

LIGHT HOUSE APPROPRIATION FOR THE LAKES.—The annual light-house appropriation bill, pow before Congress, contains the following appropriation for the lakes:—For rebuilding the beacon light at Erie, Penn $5,250; for rebuilding the beacon light at Huron, Ohio, $4,850; for rebuilding the light-house at Black River, Ohio, £7,300; for a channel range light at Maumee Bay, Ohio, $3,500; for additional buoys on the Detroit River, and to mark obstructions to navigation on the St. Lawrence and Niagara Rivers, and on the Lakes Ontario and Erie, $5,000; for a light-house on Traverse or Charity Island, in Saginaw Bay Michigan, $5,000; for a light house at the mouth of Bu Sable River, on Lake Huron, $5,000; for a light-house on Point Pemenah, between Big and Little Bay de Noquet, Lake Michigan, $5,000; for a beacon light at Sand Point, on the west side of Little Bay de Noquet, $1,000; for a lake coast light at Grand Port an Sable, Lake Michigan, $6,000 for rebuilding the light-house at Port de Mort, Wis., $6,000; for a light on the outer end of the outer pier at Kenosha, $1,000; for a lake coast light on the west shore of lake Michigan, at or near Portage, opposite the head of Big Sturgeon Bay, £5,000; for a light-house at Beaver Dam, lake Superior, Minnesota, $6,000; for a light-house at Grand Marias, lake Superior, Minnesota, $6,000. Total, $71,630. The following lights are discontinued:—At Silver Creek and at Barcelona, (or Portland) on the south-east shore of lake Erie, New York; at Port Clinton, in Sandusky Bay, Ohio, at Cleveland, east side of entrance to Cleveland, (on the hill,) Ohio.—Chicago Press.

Political institutions which leave men free to do what they choose, are fit only for those who choose to do what is right.

Rise early to your business, learn good things and oblige good men. These are three things of which you will never repent.

☞ We once hea d a rich man who was badly injured by being run over. 'It isn't the accident,' said he' that I mind, that isn't the thing; but the idea of being run over by an infernal swillcart, makes me mad."

ROYAL ETIQUETTE.—Rogers tells the following anecdote of royal etiquette:—Once when in company with William IV., I quite forgot that it is against all etiquette to ask a sovereign about his health and on his saying, "Mr. Rogers, I hope are you well? I replied, "Very well I thank your Majesty; I trust that your Majesty is quite well also.' Never was a king in greater confusion—he didn't now where to look, and stammered out, Yes—Yes—only a little rheumatism."

BEAUTIFUL WOMAN.—Dr. Beeswax, in his' Essay on woman,' remarks, with some truth, that 'beauties generally dieplid maids.' They set such value on themselves,' he says' they don't find a purchaser untill the market is closed. Out of a dozen beauties who have come out within the last eighteen years, eleven of them are still single. They spend their days in working green dogs on yellow wool, while their evenings are devoted to low spirits and French novels.'

A Greek maiden being asked what fortune she would bring to her husband' replied in the following beautiful language; "I will bring what gold cannot purchase —a heart unspotted and virtue without a stain —which is all that decends to me from my parents."

A great contest will be visible in America about this month.

THE WORM AND THE CORE.—There was a rich man at the court of King Herod; he was his high chamberlain, and was clothed in costly apparel and lived in the greatest state and magnificence. And there came to him from distant lands a friend of his youth, whom he had not seen for many years. Anxious to do him honor, the high chamberlain made a great feast and invited all his friends; the tables was laden with the most delicate viands on dishes of gold and silver, and many costly vessels filled with wines of all kinds.—

The rich man sat at the head of his table; on his right hand sat the friend who had come from distant lands; and they ate and drank, and were satisfied. Then said the stranger to the King's high chamberlain, "I have never seen such magnificence as this in my native land." And he praised all he saw, and esteemed his friend as the happiest of men. But the rich man, the King's high chamberlain, took an apple from off a golden dish; the apple was large and smooth and rosy as the cheek of a sleeping infant, and as he handed it to his friend, he said, "Behold this apple; it lay upon a golden dish, and it is lovely to look upon." And the stranger, the friend of his youth, took the apple, and cut it through; but, alas! at its core was a worm! Then the stranger gave a glance towards his host. But the high chamberlain looked down and sighed.

Alcohol was first invented and used to stain the cheeks of the ladies of Arabia, 950 years ago. It still reddens portions of the human face.

Why is it that a young lady looks so pleased when the arm of her lover encircles her waist? Because "a fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind."

To ascertain the length of the day and night, any time of the year, double the time of the sun's rising, which gives the length of the night, and double the time of setting, which gives the length of the day. This is a little method of "doing the thing," which few of our readers have been aware of,

HOW TO MAKE A SHIFT.——A commercial traveller lately left an article belonging to his wardrobe at an inn, and wrote to the chambermaid to forward it to him by coach; in answer to which he received the following:

'I hope, dear sir, you'l not feel hurt—
I'll frankly tell you all about it.
I've made a shift with your old shirt,
And you must make a shift without it.'

ADVICE TO YOUNG PEOPLE. Keep good company or none. Never be idle. If your hands cannot be usefully employed, attend to the cultivation of your mind. Make few promises. Live up to engagements. Speak the truth. Never listen to your if you have any. When you speak to a person, look him in the face. Good character is above all things else; your character cannot be essentially secured except by your actions. If any one speaks evil of you, let your life be such that none will believe him. Every night when you retire to bed think over what you have been doing during the day. Make no haste to be rich, if you would prosper; small and steadygains give compatency with tranquility of mind. Never play at any game of chance. Avoid temptation through fear you may not withstand it. Earn money before you spend it. Never borrow if you can possibly avoid it. Never speak evil of any one. Be just before you are gener. ous. Keep yourself innocent, if you would be happy. Save when you are young, to spend when you are old.

USELESSNESS OF AVARICE.—Lord Bracco was his own factor, and collected his own rents in which duties he is said to have been so rigorously exact, that a farmer being one rent day deficient in a single farthing, he caused him to trudge to considerable distance to procure that little sum, before he would grant a discharge. When the business was adjusted, the countryman said to his lordship:

"Now, Braco, I wad gie ya a shillin' for a sight o' the gowd and siller ye hae."

"Weel, mon," answered the miser, "it's no cost ye ony man," and accordingly he exhibited to the farmer several iron boxes full of gold and silver coin.

"Now," said the farmer, "I'm as rich as yourself, Braco,"

"Ay, mon," said his lordship," how can that be?"

"Because I've seen it," replied the countryman, "and ye can do nae mair."

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ELECTIONS.—We believe that E. Malloch, Esq., is a candidate for Rideau Division, E. Griffin, Esq. of this city is spoken of as a candidate for the same Division, but we h rdly think it is Mr. Griffin's intention to contest the election. We have reason to believe that the Hon. Mr. Yankoughnet will not be a candidate for this Division at the coming election, nor will George Hyndman Fellower, Esq., either. We understand that it is the intention of a portion of the electors to nominate Alex. Moffat, Esq., of Pembroke; and we are satisfied Mr. M. would poll a strong vote in this Division. We believe we can with confidence state that J. B. Lewis, Esq., Mayor of this city, has concluded not to stand for this Division. Reasons of a private business character have caused this change of intention. Were Mr. Lewis a candidate, we are of the opinion it would be hard to beat him.

We see it is stated that Col. Prince, and the Hon. H. J. Boulton are candidates for the Western Division. They are able men and experienced politicians, and we presume the contest will be a hard one.—Ottawa Citizen.

Wonderful Escape.

(From the Dundas Tribune)

On Saturday last, one of the most miraculous cases of escape from death occurred at West Flamboro', which we have ever seen recorded. A correspondent—an eye witness to the scene—describes the occurrence as follows:—

"On Saturday last, Mr. Wm. Symington farmer, aged 18, nephew of John Wenn, Esq., of West Flamboro', was engaged in cleaning out an old well, about 45 feet deep. Having got a few buckets-full out, he went to push in a stone which was projecting out too far. In doing so, how ever, it fell out, and one or two more; when in an instant the whole well fell in from top to bottom, covering him with 45 feet of earth and stones. The alarm was instantly given, and great numbers flocked to the place, and commenced hauling up the stones, &c. They all expected he had not survived the crash five minutes, but about two o'clock on Sunday morning, when they were down about 15 feet, they heard him groan beneath him moan. After a little they spoke to him, and he answered—told them how he felt, and that he was in a bent position, and from that time till he was taken up, he continued at intervals to speak to them. After they had been at work some time, the well began to cave in from the sides. Stays having to be made to prevent the recurrence, it caused considerable delay; so that, notwithstanding the most indefatigable exertions, it was not till half past ten on Sunday night that he was extricated from his dreary abode, having been buried eight hours and a half under the earth. When the earth and stones were taken off him, he was able to drink a glass of beer with his own hands, but when he came to the top he fainted away. Doctor Hamilton was early in attendance, and did everything possible to relieve his sufferings. No bones were broken, but he is severely bruised in several parts of his body. He is, however, progressing favourably."

It is seldom that journalists have to record such a miraculous escape as a man living for upwards of 28 hours, with 45 feet of earth and stones upon him. We are informed the cause of escape was owing to the fact that the large stones near the bottom of the well had formed a sort of arch over him, his head being bedded between two of them. The poor fellow, after he had a little recovered, in answer to enquiries, said that he believed he had been three days under, and that for the first two he had been able to breathe freely, but on the third it became difficult. Mr. Wenn, who appeared three long and dreary days to him. Much excitement prevailed in the vicinity, and seldom less than 1000 persons were present, at any time of his dreary confinement. Great exertions were made, and great praise is due to the inhabitants who congregated there, for their efforts to relieve the poor sufferer from his living tomb.

THE development of the proceedings of the Great Western party in regard to the Southern railroad becomes every hour more startling and interesting. The utter unscrupulousness with which they have pursued their object is now revealed. The startling announcement that they offered Mr. RANKIN £50,000 for his support, is of itself quite sufficient to cover their whole proceedings in regard to this enterprise, with infamy.—This is not a case in which a charge of attempted bribery is made from malignant motives, on mere suspicion, or upon doubtful testimony. Mr. RANKIN, a member of the Canadian Parliament, to whom this offer of £2,0,0 0 for his interest was made, is himself the witness. Having scorned the bribe, he takes an opportunity of exposing in the most public manner, by what means the Great Western party seek to carry their ends. Mr. RANKIN's testimony as to the offer of the £50,000 bribe it unimpeached. No motive for malice has not been put with so much as a denial, although several days have elapsed since it was made. It seems indeed that the Great Western party have no reply to make to this damning charge; and it is very certain they can have no defence to offer for such a procedure.—They are therefore silent. The public, although ever so charitably inclined, have no option—they must accept the only conclusion which the disgraceful facts warrant.

With so startling a fact as the offer to Mr. RANKIN of £50,000 for his influence established, the public is now prepared to discuss as to the whole of the remaining proceedings of the Great Western party, in regard to their attempt to get control of the Southern Railroad. Take, for instance, the question as to when and how they subscribed the £50,000 stock. Mr. BROWN says, in reply to a question put by Mr. SOUTHWICK, the other day at the St. Thomas meeting —why the Great Western Company did not subscribe before Mr. ZIMMERMAN's friends had taken the necessary amount of stock to secure the organization of the Anglo-Company—seems to have admitted that they could not claim a priority, in point of time. And if they give up the question of priority, we should like to be informed what they have to stand upon. The stock book has been shown to and it bears upon the face of it evidence which, we feel confident would settle the whole matter before any Court, Under the head "No. of Shares," there is no entry. The amount put down, £500,000, is in the name of Mr. WALLACE. The figures are both in pounds and dollars; and in each case, the three right hand figures bear evidence of having been put down, at a different time, and in a different colored ink; from the other figures. There is still further evidence that the amount originally written up was Mr. WALLACE'S name was £500 and not £500,000. The pound column is filled with the three figures £500 and the remaing ciphers, in a different ink, are put into the shilling column. So in the case of the £2,000,000; the dollar column filled with the four figures $2,000, and the three remaining ciphers are cowded into the cents column; so that, literally interpreted, the amount, as it stood, is now really £500 and not £500,000. The following copy of the entry will make the matter more plain:

No. of Shares	£	s.	d.	$	c.
—Wallace £	500	000		2,000	000

It will be seen that both in the pound and dollar column, space in needlessly thrown away to the right. The matter is a very simple one. Everybody knows that when he has five figures to put in the pound column he does not fill it with three of them and throw the other three over into the shillings column. Our own opinion is, decidedly, that no unprejudiced person, upon oath, seeing the entries as they stand, but would give it as his opinion that the three right hand figures were, in each case, entered after the others. And this is only of a piece with the offer to Mr. RANKIN of a £50,000 bribe for his influence. The Court of Chancery would put the matter to rights in a very short time.

And we are justified in asking whether Mr. WALLACE be a millionaire: good for the two millions of stock, against which his name is written? Now it is no libel to say in reply that Mr. WALLACE is not a millionaire. He might possibly be able to pay up $200 of stock; but $2000,000! The thing is too ludicrous to be talked of before we have done with this affair, we promise our readers that we will show how the ten per cent. deposit has been paid; and it will be seen that this in the proceeding was of a piece with the rest of the swindle.

The people of St. Thomas and other places along the line appreciate fully the position in which they would be placed, handed over to the tender mercies of the Great Western. It is notorious that the latter have, from the first, been the greatest opponents the Southern line have encountered, and that they are overtly so still, no one who looks calmly at the matter can doubt. They have still the same adverse interests; and if they could get the control of the work, how easy it would be to damn it in the English market! And even if they took the opposite course and countenanced the line of Railway, in this city is a great and important consideration. The Great Western Railroad was taken to Hamilton, at an unnecessary expense to the English shareholders of £300,000; but this extravagant folly, to call it by no milder name, was nothing to the sublime project of bringing all the traffic of the South of the Peninsula back to Hamilton. It is a project which could only have originated with the solons of the Great Western, who seem to imagine that there is no other place in the world fit for a railway terminus, and that place is—Hamilton. —Leader.

Progress of the Country.

As a minor but by no means insignificant mark of the advancement of Western Canada we notice the fact that no less than eight towns and villages attained Acts of Incorporation during the last session of Parliament.

Their names and localities are as follows: —Galt, in the county Waterloo; Sydenham, on the shore of Lake Huron, in the county of Grey; Elgin, in the county of Welland; and Sarnia, county of Lambton. These four villages are on and after the first of January next, constituted towns, provided, of course, the necessary legal measures be taken by the local auth rities. In reference to Sydenham, we cannot avoid expressing our great regret that its present euphonious name is to be changed for the stupid and double-worded appellation of Owen Sound. A more unhappy change could scarcely have been hit upon. The village of Elgin has been more fortunate. It is to be the town of Clifton. Woodstock, the county town of Oxford is to be incorporated at the same time. It is to be divided into five wards, named and described in the bill for its incorporation.

A tract of land in the townships of Nicholl and Pilkington, in the county of Wellington, and another in the township of Oxford, county of Glenville, have been respectively incorporated as villages under the names of Newcastle and Kemptville; while in our own neighbourhood, the village of Newcastle, in the township of Clarke, has received the same privilege, with permission to afford assistance to the Bond Head Harbor Company, now known as the "Newcastle Harbor Company." This village is to "consist of lots 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, and 30, in the broken front and first concession of the township of Clarke, and the south halves of the lots bearing the same numbers in the second concession of the said township."

Three Acts were also passed for the separation of counties, viz: Huron from Bruce, Lincoln from Welland, and Victoria from Peterborough.

It is worthy of notice that all these changes, so indicative of healthy enterprize and progress exist in UPPER CANADA. The only case of the kind in Lower Canada, is the bill of Mr. Bellingham, "To erect part of the township of Chatham, in the county of Argenteuil into a separate municipality"; and this is only just across the river Ottawa. It is not therefore improbable, that even this step in advance may be the result of Anglo-Saxon energy.—Cobourg Star.

Frightful Earthquake in the Moluccas.

Three Thousand Lives Lost.

(From the London Times.)

The Indian mail brings advices of another of those dreadful earthquakes for which Ternati and the adjoining localities in the Moluccas are proverbial. An eruption of the active volcano on the Island of Great Sangir, in longitude 125° 50' E., and lat 3° 50' N., has occurred. The northwestern part of the Island of Great Sangir is formed by the mountain Awn, which has several peaks, the highest being about 4,000 feet above the sea. On the west side the mountain runs very steep into the sea—at the height of the large village Kandbar, however, falling away to a low promontory.

Between 7 and 8 o'clock on the evening of the 21 of March, a sudden and altogether indescribable crashing noise was heard, which, indicating to the Sangirese an eruption of the volcano, filled with them consternation. Simultaneously with this, the growing lava streamed downward with irresistible force in different directions, bearing with it whatever it encountered on its destructive course, and causing the sea to boil wherever they came in contact. The hot springs opened up and cast out a flood of boiling water, which destroyed and carried away what the fire had spared. The sea, obedient to an unusual impulse, lashed the rocks with fearful violence, dashed upon the shore and heaved itself in wild haste against the land, as if it strove to overmaster the fiery stream.

The frightful picture of destruction, the horror of which was increased by the shrieks of men and beast, the wild roaring of the tempest and the crashing of thousands of trees torn up and carried away was followed, about an hour later, by peals of thunder which shook the ground and deafened the ear. A black column of stones and ashes then shot up from the mountain to an immense height, and, it fell, illumined by the glare of the lava, like a shower of fire upon the surrounding country below, producing a darkness that, only now and then momentarily broken by the flashes of lightning, was so intense, that people could not discern their hands before them. And which fearful confusion and despair. Large stones were hurled thro' the air, crushing whatever they fell upon. Houses and crops, which had not been destroyed by fire, sunk and disappeared beneath the ashes and stones, and new hill streams, stopped by these barriers, formed lakes, which breaking over their banks soon proved a new source of destruction.

This lasted some hours. About midnight the raging elements sunk to rest; but on the following day, about noon, they again increased to the work of destruction, with renewed violence. In the meantime, the fall of ashes continued without intermission, and was so thick on this day that the rays of the sun could not penetrate through it, and an appalling darkness prevailed.

The earthquake, the only symptom of its working was seen the smoke rising up in all directions from cracks and fissures in the ground.

The streams of lava on the slopes are still so slightly cooled that people dare not venture to any great distance from the shore. According to the accounts of the natives, the top of the mountain does not appear to have undergone any notice ble alteration.

On the other side of Kandbar, on the extreme north part of the island, the appearance of the devastation which has been caused is, if possible, more frightful than what has taken place at Taruna. For here, where formerly there were to be seen extensive fields bearing all kinds of crops, and thickly planted and endless groves of cocoanuts, we now find nothing but lava, stones and ashes. The liquid fire against at this point to have flowed from the mountain with irresistable force and in prodigious quantity. Not only has this fearful flood, as it were, buried the whole district and all that was upon it, but after having caused this destruction over an extent of several miles, it was still powerful enough on reaching the shore to form two long tongues (capes) at places where the depth of water formerly consisted of many fathoms.

A number of other districts and places have been, some wholly destroyed, others greatly injured by the lava.

The loss of life has been great. It is estimated as follows, in the under-me tioned districts:

Taruna, men, women, and children, 722: Kandbar, men, women, and children, 45; Tabukan, men, women, and children, 2,039; total, 2,806.

The greater number met their death in the gardens. They fled in all directions but were overtaken and swallowed up by the fatal fire-stream. Some tried to save themselves in the trees, but were either carried away by the flood, or killed by the scorching heat. At Kalangan and Tariang, the houses were filled with people, who were stopped in their flight by the lava streaming down on all sides, and the streams of boiling water, and who met their death unless they were completely swept in the tumbling houses. Many, who had reached the shore and thought themselves safe, became a prey to the furious waves, and many died through sheer despair and agony.

Condition of Affairs in Lawrence—Citizens assaulted on the Highway—Outrages upon Free-State Men—Developement of Squatter Sovereignity.

LAWRENCE July 29, 1856.

Movements of great importance to the peace of our Territory are on foot, and your readers must not be at all surprised to be soon informed of another developement of Squatter Sovereignity. The great Pro-Slavery machine for grinding out our liberties, under color of law, is just at the present time inactive. Yet life and property are threatened all the while, as killed by the scorching heat. At Kalangan and Tariang, the houses were filled with people, who were stopped in their flight by the lava streaming down on all sides, and the streams of boiling water, and who met their death unless they were completely swept in the tumbling houses. Many, who had reached the shore and thought themselves safe, became a prey to the furious waves, and many died through sheer despair and agony.

LONDON, August 1st, 1856.

The House of Commons, after a session of one hundred and six days, extending over nearly nine hundred hours, and the House of Lords after having sat eighty-eight days, extending over two hundred and twenty-three hours, having adjourned to take refreshments of various kinds and degrees. They did not manage to get off on Saturday as was expected, but gladly bade each other farewell on the afternoon on Tuesday. The town is now broiling, and every body who can get into the country is glad to do so. A cabinet council sat for a long time on Monday, discussing the phraseology of the Royal Message to Parliament, and it is said that Ministers were divided in opinion on several points it was intended to introduce: the paragraph concerning America being the chief matter in dispute. The words finally agreed upon are meagre enough certainly, but perhaps it was unnecessary, to say the least, to multiply the n at the present stage of affairs. There is a statement, by-the-bye, that terms have been come to between the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Dallas on the points of negociation, but if so the precise nature of the terms is doubtful to the general public. The story is that the Bay Islands are to be given up to Honduras, which claims them as a portion of the State of Honduras, and pledges itself not to give them over to any other power, or to allow any other power to interfere in their affairs. There is to be a tripartite treaty to secure this arrangement, between England, the United States and Honduras; and France, if necessary, will add her signature to the instrument.

You will have observed that the Queen in her speech to Parliament, does not forget to thank her colonial subjects for the support which they rendered towards the carrying on of the war, and for their munificence in the manner of the Patriotic Fund.

Our Queen has not yet left her retreat in the Isle of Wight, where for some weeks past she has been entertaining in a most queenly manner a succession of foreign, chiefly German, visitors. The Daily News a few days since announced as authentic that the Count had resolved to make a voyage to Lisbon and Ireland; but the Globe says that the Queen will confine her extraordinary ovalizing to Balmoral. This week, again, her Majesty has been engaged in reviewing troops at Aldershot. It is said that the display of Wednesday surpassed everything in the nature of a military show ever witnessed before in this country. This newly manifested disposition of the Queen for military spectacles is looked upon with undisguised dissatisfaction by the ultra-pacific portion of the country, represented by the Morning Star, the property of Mr. Bright and others of the Manchester school. In other ways, too, we have been very military this week. Yesterday, the Corporation of the City of London were engaged in the presentation of a valuable sword, and a burgess ticket in a gold box from the southern part of the Territory. They said they had been driven from their claims which they had been on about a year and upon which they had made considerable improvements. They had left corn growing in the field, and had gathered their short stock and household goods, and were then on their route for Iowa. They had some thirty head of cattle along with them. They said the Pro-Slavery ruffians had given them notice to leave, and threatened them with death if they returned; in camp, in the southern part of the Territory, and were out nightly committing depredations.

STILL ANOTHER OUTRAGE.—An old man by the name of Gleason, some eight miles south of us, had both his horses taken last week, and received word next day from Coleman, that unless he sent them in the camp above referred to, that he, Gleason might get them if he could. This rascal Coleman has been a lion with the Ruffian Party and the Territorial officers ever since he killed Dow. He now heads one of the guerrilla bands which is harassing the settlers.

Goaded on by these and similar outrages, a party of men a few nights since waited upon one Lahay, whose house has been the head-quarters of the Ruffians on the Wakarusa, and where it was understood a lot of the stolen property of the sack of Lawrence was housed, and demanded a full delivery of all arms and other property belonging to Free-State men then about the premises. Seeing that resistance would avail him nothing, he permitted them to enter his house, and they found and captured thirty stand of arms, including ten or twelve of the rifles taken in the Spring, at Franklin, from the teamster taking them to Lawrence.

Lahay was so terrified that the next day he had a company of troops stationed around the house to see how the army is used. When a Pro-Slavery depot of stolen property is broken up, then the troops are on hand, but let a Free-State man be knocked down and robbed—even killed, all is right.

The Central American Question.

Important private despatches, says the New York Tones, have been received by the Atlas, dated on the day the steamer left Liverpool, to the effect that the difficulties between the United States and Great Britain have been satisfactorily adjusted on terms honourable to both countries. The following, from the London Morning Advertiser of Saturday, July 26 was telegraphed to Liverpool previous to the sailing of the steamer:—"The American question may now be regarded as virtually settled.—We believe we are not wrong in preparing our readers for an announcement to this effect in the speech of Her Majesty on the prorogation of Parliament on Tuesday next. The terms agreed on are—That the Bay Islands are to be given over by us to Honduras." In return for our handing them over to the Republic of Honduras, the government of that Republic pledges itself never to give them over to any other power, or to allow any other powers to interfere in their affairs. America heartily acquiesces in this settlement of the question, and joins us in a tripartite treaty with the government of Honduras for carrying the conditions of agreement into effect. France is also a contracting party to the agreement, and has expressed her readiness to sign the treaty if deemed necessary."

CITIZENS ASSAILED.—One of our own citizens—a daguerrean artist—while riding into town, last week just at dusk, having been out on business, was met by three ruffians, knocked off his horse, robbed of every cent about him—also of his pistol—and then stretched on the ground, two holding his hands and feet, while the third one jumped upon him, stamping his body in the earth and leaving him almost senseless.

ANOTHER.—On the day previous, another of our townsmen was out some six miles, and noticed a band of several men on horseback making for him. They overtook him, and, with little or no ceremony, took his horse and pistols away and what change he had and then let him go.

Last Tuesday week, a neighbor of mine, whose house is some two miles distant from my own, was awakened from his sleep by noise outside. Upon getting up and striking a light, he discovered a ruffian's face at a pane of glass in one of the front windows, and at the back window, another. He then got his boys up and began to get his arms ready, when they cloped, not till they had attempted to steal his horse, but were prevented. This matter of horse stealing has become an alarming evil. Our Free-State friends are actually obliged to watch, by night and by day, their horses.—No one of them hardly has escaped losing one or more horses, taken by our enemies prowling about all the time. Last Sunday, the 27th inst., three families passed through town from the southern part of the Territory. They said they had been driven from their claims which they had been on about a year and upon which they had made considerable improvements. They had left corn growing in the field, and had gathered their short stock and household goods, and were then on their route for Iowa. They had some thirty head of cattle along with them. They said the Pro-Slavery ruffians had given them notice to leave, and threatened them with death if they returned; in camp, in the southern part of the Territory, and were out nightly committing depredations.

STILL ANOTHER OUTRAGE.—An old man by the name of Gleason, some eight miles south of us, had both his horses taken last week, and received word next day from Coleman, that unless he sent them in the camp above referred to, that he, Gleason might get them if he could. This rascal Coleman has been a lion with the Ruffian Party and the Territorial officers ever since he killed Dow. He now heads one of the guerrilla bands which is harassing the settlers.

Goaded on by these and similar outrages, a party of men a few nights since waited upon one Lahay, whose house has been the head-quarters of the Ruffians on the Wakarusa, and where it was understood a lot of the stolen property of the sack of Lawrence was housed, and demanded a full delivery of all arms and other property belonging to Free-State men then about the premises. Seeing that resistance would avail him nothing, he permitted them to enter his house, and they found and captured thirty stand of arms, including ten or twelve of the rifles taken in the Spring, at Franklin, from the teamster taking them to Lawrence.

Lahay was so terrified that the next day he had a company of troops stationed around the house to see how the army is used. When a Pro-Slavery depot of stolen property is broken up, then the troops are on hand, but let a Free-State man be knocked down and robbed—even killed, all is right.

The Central American Question.

Important private despatches, says the New York Tones, have been received by the Atlas, dated on the day the steamer left Liverpool, to the effect that the difficulties between the United States and Great Britain have been satisfactorily adjusted on terms honourable to both countries. The following, from the London Morning Advertiser of Saturday, July 26 was telegraphed to Liverpool previous to the sailing of the steamer:—"The American question may now be regarded as virtually settled.—We believe we are not wrong in preparing our readers for an announcement to this effect in the speech of Her Majesty on the prorogation of Parliament on Tuesday next. The terms agreed on are—That the Bay Islands are to be given over by us to Honduras." In return for our handing them over to the Republic of Honduras, the government of that Republic pledges itself never to give them over to any other power, or to allow any other powers to interfere in their affairs. America heartily acquiesces in this settlement of the question, and joins us in a tripartite treaty with the government of Honduras for carrying the conditions of agreement into effect. France is also a contracting party to the agreement, and has expressed her readiness to sign the treaty if deemed necessary."

From the London Corredsondent of the Globe.

LONDON, August 1st, 1856.

The House of Commons, after a session of one hundred and six days, extending over nearly nine hundred hours, and the House of Lords after having sat eighty-eight days, extending over two hundred and twenty-three hours, having adjourned to take refreshments of various kinds and degrees. They did not manage to get off on Saturday as was expected, but gladly bade each other farewell on the afternoon on Tuesday. The town is now broiling, and every body who can get into the country is glad to do so. A cabinet council sat for a long time on Monday, discussing the phraseology of the Royal Message to Parliament, and it is said that Ministers were divided in opinion on several points it was intended to introduce: the paragraph concerning America being the chief matter in dispute. The words finally agreed upon are meagre enough certainly, but perhaps it was unnecessary, to say the least, to multiply the n at the present stage of affairs. There is a statement, by-the-bye, that terms have been come to between the Earl of Clarendon and Mr. Dallas on the points of negociation, but if so the precise nature of the terms is doubtful to the general public. The story is that the Bay Islands are to be given up to Honduras, which claims them as a portion of the State of Honduras, and pledges itself not to give them over to any other power, or to allow any other power to interfere in their affairs. There is to be a tripartite treaty to secure this arrangement, between England, the United States and Honduras; and France, if necessary, will add her signature to the instrument.

You will have observed that the Queen in her speech to Parliament, does not forget to thank her colonial subjects for the support which they rendered towards the carrying on of the war, and for their munificence in the manner of the Patriotic Fund.

Our Queen has not yet left her retreat in the Isle of Wight, where for some weeks past she has been entertaining in a most queenly manner a succession of foreign, chiefly German, visitors. The Daily News a few days since announced as authentic that the Count had resolved to make a voyage to Lisbon and Ireland; but the Globe says that the Queen will confine her extraordinary ovalizing to Balmoral. This week, again, her Majesty has been engaged in reviewing troops at Aldershot. It is said that the display of Wednesday surpassed everything in the nature of a military show ever witnessed before in this country. This newly manifested disposition of the Queen for military spectacles is looked upon with undisguised dissatisfaction by the ultra-pacific portion of the country, represented by the Morning Star, the property of Mr. Bright and others of the Central American Question.

NEW ORLEANS, August 13

The steamer D. Webster arrived to day from San Juan, with California dates to the 21st

The news from Central America is meagre.

Rivas holds Leon against Walker, and in conjunction with Guatamelians; thus fortifying it with a force of 300 men.

Walker was soon to attack it with an effectual force of 1,000 troops.

Costa Rica was preparing for another invasion of Nicaragua.

More had put down the revolution against him; but was to attack again.

A fleet of seven British ships were in the harbor of San Juan, under Erskine

From California.

A fire broke out on the 21st July, at Grass Valley, causing a loss of $15,000 to the whole town. Loss variously estimated from two to three million dollars. Several person were burnt to death.

DREADFUL DEATH FROM A RATTLESNAKE BITE.—On Wednesday afternoon of last week, Mrs. Blakely, wife of Geo. Blakely, residing about two miles from this village, was bitten by a rattlesnake, and after suffering untold pain from thee ffects of the bite, died on the following day.

The particulars of this melancholy death are as follows:—On the day above mentioned Mrs. B., with her little son, went into the woods, about a mile distant from her dwelling, for the purpose of gathering wortleberries, and while so engaged was bitten on or near the ancle. She repaired at once to the house, where remedies were applied, and physicians sent for immediately. Drs. Johnson and May, of this village, repaired to her home upon the instant, and gave all the skill in their power to arrest the effects of the venom. Every effort was used by them to save the unfortunate woman, but the reptile's venemous sting and effects e q d not be o terated. The poison had diffused itself through the vains; swelling and inflamation ensued, and the patient died, after twenty-four hours of dreadful suffering.—Bath(N. Y.) Advocate.

A DISGRACEFUL AFFAIR.—Several Companies of firemen, from Toronto, who were visiting the Falls, on Monday last, became involved in a shameful riot, which resulted in the serious injury of Booth, the inoffensive proprietor of the Museum, near Table Rock, and the destruction of some of his valuable property. A Buffalo Company, No. 1, was present, and endeavored to protect the unfortunate man, but several of their number were badly pounded, and but for the strict orders of their officers, the whole Company would probably have gone in to aid their comrades and been overpowered by numbers.—The Buffalo Fire Department is highly spoken of by the Drummondville Reporter in terms of praise, while that of Toronto fireman is represented as having been in every way disgraceful. Mr. Booth has applied to the Grand Jury of Toronto for the indictment of the rioters, and it is said that their conduct will be made the subject of representations to the Governor General.—Ontario Reporter.

A hundred and fifty swindlers have been caught at the Astor House alone, by one of the waiters, within the last six months, trying to leave without paying for their meals.

DROWNING.—We regret to have to record another case of drowning. In Scarboro, on Wednesday the 6th inst. a very interesting little boy, about three years of age, son of Mr. James Lowrie; while attempting to follow his father on a plank placed across the mill-race, near his residence, fell in, and was not observed until some ten minutes after, when our little fellow was taken out quite dead.—Markham Economist.

BURNING OF THE WELLAND.—We learn by telegraph that the fine steamer Welland was burned yesterday morning at Port Dalhousie to the water's edge. The fire commenced in the forward part of the boat. Loss, $6,000; insurance, £5,000 or £6,000.

The telegraph on Saturday evening alluded to an accident which had happened to the steamer Arabia, without giving particulars. We now learn that between Rockport and Halifax, she experienced a thick fog, and touched ground on Thursday morning near Seal Island. She leaked considerably, in consequence, but on her arrival at Halifax, it was ascertained that the injury was not very serious.—Globe.

The Whitby Reporter has been telegraphed by the Toronto officers of the company, that the Grand Trunk will be opened from Toronto to Oshawa, on Monday, the 25th instant.—Globe.

SHERIDANS FORGIVENESS.—Sheridan once said in company that he never harboured resentment. Speaking of a person who had published a pamphlet against him, "I suppose Mr. A. thinks I am angry with him but he is mistaken, for I never harbor resentment. If his punishment depended on me, I would show him that I can rise supe rior to vindictive feelings. Far should I be from wishing to inflict capital punishment upon him, grounded on his attack on me. No gentlemen; yet on account of his general character and conduct, and as a warning to others, I would merely order him to be publicly whipped three times, to be set in the pillory four times, to be confined in prison seven years, and then, as he would enjoy freedom the more after so long a confinement, I would have him transported for life."

Arrival of the Baltic.

NEW YORK, August 17.

The steamer Baltic arrived this morning at 7 o'clock, bringing Liverpool dates to the 6th of August and London to 5th.

The steamship Africa arrived the morning of the 3rd August.

Cotton firm, closing with an upward tendency.

Panic continued in breadstuffs, and there had been a material decline in flour and corn.

Corn remains firm.

Provisions generally unchanged.

LATEST BY TELEGRAPH.

LONDON, Tuesday evening.

English funds opened firm to-day at yesterdays's improved quotations, but subsequently experienced a decline of ¼ per cent, owing partially to increased demands for money and unfavourable accounts from Paris Bourse. The demand for money was active.

The silk crop of France has turned out so deficient that manufacturers have made large contracts in foreign raw silks.

LIVERPOOL, 16.—The steamer brings exceeding little interesting news. Saragossa surrendered to the Queen's troops under Gen. Dulce on the evening of the 1st. The Royal troops entered the city without opposition, and disarmed the citizens. No definite particulars yet known, but the whole seems to have been effected without bloodshed.

All Spain has now submitted to O'Donnel —His future policy is not known, but it is reported that he is attempting to make up matters with the liberalists.

France.—No news excepting the return of Marshall Pelleseier, who is made Duke, also a rumor that the Emperor is suffering from a spinal disease.

Italian affairs remain as unintelligible as before.

There are reports of a remonstrance to Sardinia made by France in favor of Austria.

The Emperor of Austria and King of Prussia are having an interview at Teplitz.

Denmark proposes to fortify the Sound. It is said that Prussia advises this.

A fire and explosion in Salonica, Turkey, had caused great loss of life and property.

The governorship of Jamaica is offered to Mr. Darling, Governor of New Foundland. Weather very warm.

Sir Astley Cooper's Pills

Have acquired much of their celebrity from the fact that they soothe the system, destroy latent diseases, impart cheerfulness, and that conscious feeling of restored health and power, which inevitably leads to the actual possession of health and strength. Sir Astley Cooper's Pills immediately eradicate any vicious, acrid, or dangerous matters which may have accumulated in the system, and the moment the tone of the stomach is restored, the patient finds new life and vigor, the appetite comes back again, and with a little perseverance, even the oldest man discovers that he has a chance of living a little longer.

Sir Astley Cooper's Pills will prove highly efficacious in bilious complaints, scorbutic disorders, liver complaints, affections of the nervous system, lowness of spirits, palpitation of the heart, rheumatic pains in the head, limbs, and other parts of the body; oppression of the chest, indigestion, loss of appetite, redundancy of bile, dizziness of the eyes, violent pains in the temple and forehead, impaired memory, sick headache, tremulous action of the whole frame, restlessness and bad dreams, stupor ific dozing, flatuleney, costiveness.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—Observe that on the top of each box of the Genuine Pills there is a correct likeness of Sir Astley Cooper, from the celebrated painting by Lawrence; also the fac-simile of the signature of the Proprietors, McPhail & Co., London and New York, on each box, and on the directions Without these marks they are spurious and an imposition.

Sold at 25 and 50 cents per box, and in Family boxes at $1 each. There is a great saving by purchasing the larger sizes.

For Sale by Simpson and Dunspaugh, Druggists, Toronto; John M. Thornton, Dundas; Andrew Oliver Galt; A. H. Cook, Brantford, General Agents, by whom Country Druggist Merchants will be supplied at London and New York prices.

CATHARTIC PILLS

OPERATE by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, and, by restoring their irregular action to health, correct, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first causes of disease. An extensive trial of their virtues, by Professors, Physicians, and Patients, has shown cures of dangerous diseases almost beyond belief, were they not substantiated by persons of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Their certificates are published in my American Almanac, which the Agents below named are pleased to furnish free to all inquiring.

Annexed we give Directions for their use in the complaints which they have been found to cure.

FOR COSTIVENESS.—Take one or two Pills, or such quantity as to gently move the bowels. Costiveness is frequently the aggravating cause of PILES, and the cure of one complaint is the cure of both. No person can feel well while under a costive habit of body. Hence it should be, as it can be, promptly relieved.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, which is sometimes the cause of Costiveness, and always uncomfortable, take mild doses—from one to four—to stimulate the stomach and liver into healthy action. They will do it, and the heartburn, headpains, and soulburn of dyspepsia will rapidly disappear. When it has gone, don't forget what cured you.

FOR A FOUL STOMACH, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take from four to eight Pills at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until activity and strength is restored to the system.

FOR NERVOUSNESS, SICK HEADACHE, NAUSEA, Pain in the Stomach, Back, or Side, take from four to eight pills on going to bed. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more the next day until they do. These complaints will be swept out from the system. Don't wear these and their kindred disorders because your stomach is foul.

FOR SCROFULA, ERYSIPELAS, and all Diseases of the Skin, take the Pills freely and frequently, to keep the bowels open. The eruptions will generally soon begin to diminish and disappear. Many dreadful ulcers and sores have been healed up by the purging and purifying effect of these Pills, and some disgusting diseases which seemed to saturate the whole system have completely yielded to their influence, leaving the sufferer in perfect health. Patients! your duty to society forbids that you should parade yourself around the world covered with pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores, and all or any of the unclean diseases of the skin, because your system needs cleansing.

TO PURIFY THE BLOOD, they are the best medicine ever discovered. They should be taken freely and frequently, and the impurities which sow the seeds of incurable diseases will be swept out of the system like chaff before the wind. By this property they do as much good in preventing sickness as by the remarkable cures which they are making every where.

LIVER COMPLAINT, JAUNDICE, and all Bilious Affections arise from some derangement—either torpidity, congestion, or obstructions of the Liver. Torpidity and congestion vitiate the bile and render it unfit for digestion. This is disastrous to the health, and the constitution is frequently undermined by no other cause. Indigestion is the symptom. Obstruction of the duct which empties the bile into the stomach causes the bile to overflow into the blood. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternate costiveness and diarrhœa, usually prevails. Feverish symptoms, languor, low spirits, weariness, restlessness, and melancholy, with sometimes inability to sleep, and sometimes great drowsiness; sometimes there is severe pain in the side; the skin and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow; the stomach acid; the bowels sore to the touch; the whole system irritable, with a tendency to fever, which may turn to bilious fever, bilious colic, bilious diarrhœa, dysentery, &c. A medium dose of three or four Pills taken at night, will, follow it by two or three in the morning, and repeated a few days, will remove every trace of all these troubles. It is wicked to suffer such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

RHEUMATISM, GOUT, and all Inflammatory Diseases are rapidly cured by the purifying effects of these Pills upon the blood and the stimulus which they afford to the vital principle of life. For these and all kindred complaints they should be taken in mild doses, to carry the bowels gently, but freely.

As a DINNER PILL, is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has been made more effectual to the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

FOR AUGUST, 1856.

The Wheat Fly--Midge.

We regret to find that this destructive insect is greatly extending its ravages in Upper Canada. In the Lake districts, or that part of the country bordering the Lakes and Niagara River, its ravages appear to have been most severe. It is much to be regretted that none of our Agricultural Organizations, from the Bureau of Agriculture down to the Township Societies—appear to think the subject of most depredation worthy of their notice. At least we are unaware that any systematic plan for observing the numbers, orders or families, habits, times and modes of propagation, territorial extent, destructive powers, parasites, &c., &c., of those insects that prey upon the farmer's crops, or for discovering the remedies that have been or may be employed to prevent their ravages, has yet been suggested or adopted by our Agricultural Boards or Societies. As a journalist we are left entirely to our own limited observation, to imperfect newspaper accounts, and the occasional remarks of a correspondent who has found the "weevil," or "grub," or "worm," or "little yellow maggot" in his wheat, and wants to know where it came from, or how it can be got rid of. The subject is still further involved in doubt by the contradictory statements of wheat speculators—the party declaring that the "fly" has done immense injury; and the other, that it's all "a bugbear to keep up prices."

What could more properly engage the attention of our Bureau and Boards of Agriculture than to collect and disseminate authentic information on a subject like this? The N. Y. State Agricultural Society, aided by a grant from the Legislature, have employed a distinguished entomologist, (A. Fitch, M.D.) to examine and report upon the noxious, beneficial and doubtful insects of the State. The results of that examination will no doubt benefit us as well as our neighbors, but there are facts peculiar to Canada that ought to be ascertained and made known. We trust a hint will be sufficient, and that next season systematic and well conducted observations will be made under the proper authority.

We have in previous volumes of the Agriculturist explained the habits and appearance of the Wheat Midge, and also of the Weevil. There is still, however, much confusion among writers and correspondents in regard to names, and this is another reason for such an examination of the subject as we have hinted at. The insect generally spoken of at present as preying upon the wheat in the ear, is the Midge, or Wheat Gnat (Cecidomyia Tritici). It is found in the kernels of wheat in its chrysalis or pupa state, the egg having been deposited by the parent fly upon the ears while the grain was yet soft or milky. There is a very wide distinction between this insect and the Weevil (Curculio granaria). The former is of the dipterous, the latter of the coleopterous order. The true weevil preys upon the grain after it is harvested and when stored in mills, &c. The larva of the Midge is most destructive while the grain is yet soft in the ear. Indeed it is said that it cannot eat though the skin of the ripened grain, and therefore is not to be dreaded in the granary.

REMEDIES.—To the wheat-grower the most interesting part of the subject is now to prevent the depredations of this insect. We believe the perfect remedy has not been discovered, but so far as we can gather from the experiments and observation of others, as well as our own, we recommend early sowing and early varieties. We made a tolerably close inspection of our own fields this season, in which both the Hessian Fly and Midge were found, and the result confirmed the wisdom of the above advice. In a field of blue stem, sowed 12th September on a warm clay loam, summer fallowed and manured, we find the Midge in about every fifth ear, and from one to three kernels affected. In a field of Red-chaff, sown a fortnight later and after a crop of peas, on good soil, not manured, four out of every five heads were affected, and from two to six grains in each. A strip of this field was blue-stem, sown at the same time as the red-chaff, and was not affected than the latter, though there was no perceptible difference in the time of ripening.

Fall Ploughing wheat stubble has been recommended, and if it were generally practiced, would no doubt, with early sowing, prove nearly, if not entirely successful. An experiment, which ought to be repeated in several localities this fall, was made last year by an intelligent gentleman in one of the Western States.

We cut out this statement for insertion in this number, but it has been unfortunately mislaid.

The experiment, however, was as follows: He made two square boxes of wood, of equal size, and placed them in his wheat-stubble. Under one the ground was dug up and inverted to the ordinary depth; the other was placed on the stubble undisturbed. Both were covered with mildnet (a kind of gauze,) which allowed heat and moisture to penetrate but prevented the fly from escaping.' He kept a close watch during June and July, and found that the Fly or Midge appeared in the unspaded box from two to three weeks earlier than in the other. This proved that turning the larvæ under ground in the fall retarded the appearance of the fly, and, combined with early sowing, shows the wheat grower a method by which he can "get ahead" of his dreaded enemy. We may revert to this subject in our next number. Its importance no one will deny. To the farmer it stands in the same question of life or death. A Committee of the N. Y. State Legislature reported that they had "full proof that a single insect (the Midge) last summer (1854) destroyed property to an amount exceeding fifteen millions of dollars" in the State of New York alone.

We have no data from which to estimate our loss in Canada, but even at a guess we may set it down this year at two or three millions.—Canadian Agriculturist.

CURRANT DUMPLINGS.—Pick and wash a pound of currants, dry them, and lay them on a plate before the fire. Chop a pound of suet very small and put it into eight pounds of flour, with two tea-spoonfuls of salt, and three of ginger; now add the currants and mix all well together, then beat up four eggs with a pint of milk, and this by degrees to the other ingredients, and make it into a light paste; roll it up into balls as large as a turkey's egg, with a little flour; flatten them a little and put them into boiling water; move them gently, that they may not stick together. Half an hour will boil them.—Germantown Telegraph.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,
AND JOURNAL OF SUBURBAN ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the United States.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced. The growing interest with which the rising generation view the science of Horticulture, renders such a Journal as "The Illustrated Horticulturist" imperatively necessary to the progress of Rural affairs.

Rural Architecture forms one of the principal features; each number contains from two to four engravings of model cottages, from designs by eminent and skilful architects. Space is also assigned to the tasteful art of Landscape Gardening, engraved plans of gardens in every style, and adapted to the peculiarities of different orders of architecture, beautifies the work.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and to all who can boast the sovereignty of a square foot of Earth, "The Illustrated Horticulturist and Journal of Suburban Art" will prove an invaluable companion. The extraordinary low price at which it is afforded; together with its really superior execution, both in regard to typography and editorial ability, must make it the most popular work of the kind in America.

"The Illustrated Horticulturist" is printed on the finest quality of pearl surfaced paper, manufactured expressly. It is issued regularly the first of each month, commencing with July, 1855. The following gentlemen, eminent for their ability in the science of Horticulture, are engaged to conduct the Editorial department: H. P. KNIGHT, JAMES SWOMEN and D. W. RAY.

TERMS: Two Dollars per annum, payable invariably in advance; a liberal discount to the Trade, Postmasters, and getters-up of Clubs.

Advertisements inserted at the rate of Ten Dollars per page.

N.B.—Newspapers inserting the above prospectus, and directing attention editorially to the same, will be forwarded the ILLUSTRATED HORTICULTURIST for one year, a copy containing the advertisement should be sent in all cases to ensure attention.

NEW VOLUME OF THE
AGRICULTURIST

SUBSCRIPTION REDUCED FROM 25 TO 50 PER CENT.

The Canadian Agriculturist

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by its present proprietor in 1848, and is too well known to the leading farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us. The undersigned have made arrangements with the proprietor to publish the next, and probably succeeding volumes, and have resolved to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE
Illustrated with Engravings

Such as Farm Implements, Portraits of Animals, designs of Farm Buildings, New Inventions, &c., &c., interesting to the Farmer, and also portraits of some of the most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM MACDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the practice of Agriculture with all its details. The active promoter of the various improvements made in our Agricultural Legislation since 1847, and having also been connected with the Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and writings in behalf of Canadian Agriculture are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to its columns as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to extend the correspondence on subjects of a practical kind.

THE AGRICULTURIST IS NOT LIABLE TO POSTAGE.

Lines Written in a Calm.

BY T. E. NELMES.

Ho! Æolus, arise, arise,
And ope thy fabled caves—
Let Boreas flap his wings, and break
The slumber of the waves.
The dolphin drags his languid frame,
The sea-bird feebly flies,
And the sun's fierce meridian flame
Saps our own energies.

Ho! Boreas, plume thy wings for flight,
And leave thy fabled caves,
And stir the blue and burning deep
Till rise the crested waves.
Then will not waste thy grateful breath
On ocean's fairest bribe—
Our bark is swift, and we would try
Thy fleetness on the tide.

Joy, joy! he hath some courage left,
Our challenge tempts him forth—
For lo! his cloudy chariot looms,
It cometh from the North.
His breath is dimpling o'er the sea,
It kisseth every sail—
Despair ye Tritons on the lee,
Our race is with the gale.

The Intrepid Passenger.

BY LIEUTENANT MURRAY.

I TOOK passage from Liverpool on a fine looking English liner, and we hoped to make the run to New York inside of twenty days. It was during the Irish exodus which was at its height some five years since, and we had at least two hundred passengers of that nationality in the ship, with about twenty cabin passengers. The ship, however, was a large and well found vessel, and I saw no reason, on a casual examination, why she would not prove reasonably comfortable.—I had made the outward trip in a steamer, and chose a sailing vessel on my return, for sake of variety; it would be filled.

Scarcely had we discharged the pilot and fairly laid our course, before I saw unmistakable evidence that in my choice of a vessel I had probably been unfortunate. From a somewhat extensive experience with the sea and the belongings of a ship, I naturally found myself at the outset inclined to observe the character of the captain, officers and crew to the safety of whose management so large a number of human beings had entrusted themselves. The captain alone seemed to possess a degree of intelligence which his station demanded, for in his mates I saw not one who looked outwardly as though fitted for a station of trust. Indeed, the first officer I was satisfied was three fourths intoxicated from the very outset, and continued so the end of the voyage.

The crew were honest enough, as such ships' companies go, and under proper lead & discipline would doubtless have done well under any ordinary circumstances. To balance this apparent want of excellence in the crew and officers, the ship itself was a staunch old six-hundred ton liner, of a fine model, nearly new, and this only her second voyage. Everything about her worked easily, and she steer like a pilot boat. Consoling myself with these reflections, I resolved to be watchful and hope for the best, but would much have preferred to be on dry land than taking passage in a ship the skill of whose officers I distrusted.

The cabin passengers were soon pleasantly acquainted with each other, and the time passed agreeably for some eight days in the playing of games, cards, chatting, etc. I was particularly pleased with the appearance of one couple, a lady of some nineteen years, and a gentleman of perhaps twenty-two.—From casual observation, I could easily make out a story connected with them. The lady and her father, a wealthy New York retired merchant, were on their way home after a few months' travel upon the continent and the young gentleman, also an American, who had doubtless made their acquaintance somewhere abroad, was returning in their company exercised with the tenderest sentiments towards the daughter. Further than this, it was also easily discernible that the father from some cause looked coldly upon the advances that were respectfully but tenderly made by the young lady's companion.

On the passenger list, displayed in the cabin, the young man's name stood plain Mr. Hammond, and without making further inquiry of the other than simply to settle the name and identity of each, we had, with travellers' privilege, fallen into an agreeable intimacy with each other as well as the rest of the cabin passengers. Young Hammond seemed to be seriously affected in his spirits after a few days of the passage had transpired, evidently on account of the restraint which the father's coolness placed upon his intercourse with the lady already referred to, and who on her part, at least, exhibited the most lively interest in his pleasant attentions. With unobtrusive perseverance, he was still her companion at her morning and evening walks upon the deck, and by pleasant and intelligent conversation seemed to make himself agreeable at times even to the father.

Mr. Edwards was an individual of much character, evidently proud of his daughter, whose appearance showed her to have been reared in the most aristocratic manner, and I could easily divine that it must be from want of property and position on the part of young Hammond that his suit did not thrive with the father. All this at the time was, of course but surmise on my part, but it was true, as I have since then chanced to discover.

It was a very fresh morning on our tenth day out of port, when Mr. Edwards and his daughter finding the weather rather too boisterous for comfort upon deck, were about to go below. Young Hammond was regretting this, as it would deprive him of the few moments of private conversation which he had anticipated at this period, and which could hardly take place in somewhat crowded cabin. Captain Goss had for some object gone quite forward, and with one arm resting over the starboard cathead, was making examination of the ship's "fore foot," when suddenly the cry of "man overboard" started us all, and looking forward to where the captain had just stood, we observed that he had disappeared.

Instead of either of the ship's officers immediately taking matters in hand, there at once arose a Babel of voices, each one suggesting some expedient, and two or three foremast hands jumping into a quarter boat began to prepare for lowering it into the sea. I hastily looked towards the first mate; a glance was sufficient. He seemed to be stupid, either half drunk or fogging it. Perhaps he did not know what to do; if he was as stupid as he appeared, this was the case. I saw young Hammond seize hold of the after boob-hatch, and together we threw it into the sea, while he exclaimed:

"Never fear, Captain Goss. We will pick you up!"

"Let go the grips of that boat," shouted young Hammond in a tone of command such as we had not yet heard on board. "No boat can live in this sea."

The men instinctively obeyed, and seemed at once inspired by the confidential tones in which they were addressed.

"Cast adrift a dozen of those life buoys," continued he who had thus unhesitatingly taken command of the ship.

"Ay, ay, sir," said a score of ready voices.

"Now lay aloft, one of you, and keep the run of that hatch;" for we could already discover the captain making himself fast to it by means of his neckcloth and handkerchief. "Mr. Reed," continued young Hammond, addressing the first mate, who seemed to partially arouse, "all hands on deck sir; call up the watch."

"What would you do, sir?" asked the mate respectfully, for spite of the apparent impropriety, he was awed into obedience by the prompt manliness of young Hammond.

"We must work the ship to windward and come down upon him. Brace her sharp up, and bring her close by wind. With a will, sir, with a will—there's no time to lose."

Whether the obvious propriety of these orders struck the mate, I cannot say; but they were instantly obeyed. Young Hammond himself, seizing a deck trumpet, issued the necessary directions in detail, and with that firm and calm decision that inspired every soul with entire confidence.—The ship was at the time of the accident under double-reefed topsails, reefed courses, jib and spanker, running at the rate of twelve knots the wind abaft; consequently, before these orders were accomplished the hatch on which the captain was floating was nearly two miles dead to windward of the ship, which had drifted to leeward.

As we have seen, the sea was too rough to lower a boat, and the only choice, therefore, of saving the captain was to work to windward of him; and now it was that our intrepid young passenger exhibited a skill and ability in handling the ship that amazed the oldest tar on board. He accomplished it in beautiful style, while the mates and men obeyed him without a moment's hesitation. Before the ship was hove about the captain was on the weather quarter three miles distant. We could not fetch him on the next by nearly a hundred yards, but as we passed, we could see him distinctly amid the breaking spray, and young Hammond jumping into the main shrouds, hailed through his trumpet:

"Hold on, captain; we'll be back in a few minutes."

Whether he could hear these encouraging words or not, he understood the motions of the ship perfectly, and taking off his tarpaulin which fastened beneath his chin, waved it over his head! Another tack of three miles, and we weathered him.

"Haul up the mainsail," was the brief prompt order of young Hammond at the appropriate moment.

"Ay, ay, sir."

"Throw the main topsail to the mast now, Mr. Reed."

"Ay, ay," said the mate.

And the ship drifted gradually down upon the captain.

"Range along here, a dozen of ye, on this lee side, with lines and hooks, to grapple the lubber," ordered Hammond.

"Ay, ay, sir," was the intelligent answer of the men.

"Two of you rig a running bowline, and stand by throw it round the captain. Steady, now, steady all of ye."

He was implicitly obeyed. In ten minutes after, Captain Goss was safely in his cabin, and in a few hours was again at his station on deck.

The moment that Captain Goss was carried below, young Hammond walking towards the first mate, handed him the deck trumpet, to signify, in nautical etiquette, that he once more yielded him the command; but as he did so, there arose from the entire company three deafening cheers for his gallantry and the skill he had displayed, that made the ship fairly tremble in every timber!

"By the heavens above us," said the mate as he took the insignia of his office, "you are a man, every inch of you, and there's Jack Rose's hand upon it, be ye who you may!"

Young Hammond made no reply, but gently sunk into his former position, and returned to the cabin.

I know not what passed between him and Captain Goss, but I overheard the end: "Not ten men in the British service could have saved me, though from the first moment I heard your voice on deck, I knew there was a hand on board that understood what was necessary."

As much as the manliness of young Hammond's conduct delighted me, its result upon Mr. Edwards was to me quite as gratifying. There was no longer any coldness on the part of the father of that beautiful girl towards her new friend. Both father and daughter had witnessed the entire scene which we have so hastily described, and young Hammond was admitted to their confidence and intimacy, as he also became the idol of the whole ship's company.

The confidence thus remarkably inspired ultimately resulted in an engagement which terminated in a most happy and appropriate marriage.

Arrived at New York, after we were dressed for landing, and as young Hammond was handing Miss Edwards over the ship's side, I observed that he wore the undress uniform of an officer of the United States Navy!

Miscellany.

THE TWINKLING OF THE STARS.—According to M. Arago, astronomers and others have failed to arrive at a satisfactory explanation of the twinkling of stars on account of their failure to give an exact definition of the term scintillation. He affirms that this, in so far as looked-eye observers of the heavens are concerned, scintillation, or twinkling, consists in very rapid fluctuations in the brightness of the stars. These changes are almost always accompanied by variations of color and certain secondary effects, which on the immediate consequence of every increase or diminution of brightness; such as considerable alteration in the apparent magnitude of the stars, and in the length of the diverging rays, which appear to issue in different directions from their centres. It has been remarked from a very early age that the phenomenon of twinkling is accompanied by a change of color. It is asserted that the name of Barakeach, given by the Arabians to the star Sirius, signifies the star a thousand colours. M. Arago also asserts that the planets twinkle.

The English and French officers in the Crimea who have sold their horses and other property to Russians have made very sorry bargains wherever they have taken bank notes in payment. Out of Russia the notes are valueless, for there is an order prohibiting the exportation, and if they leave the country and are openly sent back again, the Customs-officers confiscate them! The French and English were not aware of this, and have been disagreeably surprised by the discovery of the fact. An appeal to the Russian Government is talked of.

RETURN OF THE JEWS TO PALESTINE.—At the annual meeting of the London Society for promoting Christianity among the Jews, the Earl of Shaftesbury stated that owing to long-sighted and well laid plans of secrecy, he might declare that as long as two years ago a despatch from the Foreign Office, written with Lord Clarendon's own hand, had been sent to Constantinople, urging upon the representative of the British Empire there to aid all in his power to effect the emancipation of the Jew, allowing them to hold land and to enjoy every civil privilege in Palestine.

FREMONT A NATIVE OF CANADA.—Under this head the New York Citizen, of Saturday last, on the authority of a reliable correspondent says:—

"There seems to be the most positive information that the black republican party have made a blunder in their nomination of Fremont. A gentleman, residing in the neighborhood of Detroit, knew his father, and himself, when a lad, in Montreal, Lower Canada, of which city he is supposed to be a native. Further information anon."

At Paris, a well, which it is intended to bore a depth of 2,300 feet, is now being sunk for the purpose of supplying water to the artificial lakes in the Bois de Boulogne. It was commenced in August last, and has already reached a depth of 980 feet. By the 1st of May it is expected that the bore which is conducted on the new principle involved by Mr. Kind, will have extended to the enormous depth of 2,360 feet, which is 490 feet lower than the Artesian well of Grenelle. The sole motive power employed is a steam engine of twenty-four horse power; and it is calculated that a daily supply of water delivered by the Seine at the Point de la Tournelle, will be obtained. From a paper read by M. Dumas to the Academie it appears that the daily average progress through the various strata of chalk marl, and sand is about sixteen and a half feet.

EVACUATION OF ROME BY THE FRENCH.—The assertion in Parliament that the French and Austrian Governments are disposed to withdraw their garrisons from the Roman States so soon as the Government of his Holiness is ready to maintain order in the Papal dominions without their assistance derives some slight confirmation from a recent occurrence in the French medical depart ent in this city. Two army surgeons being rather deficient in number for the present requirements of the garrison, application was recently made by the head of the medical staff for an increase in their number, but the answer obtained from the Minister of War was that it would be unnecessary to send out more doctors from France, and that the aid of Roman medical men could be easily had for the next few months if required. Octoberis mentioned as the period fixed on for the French evacuation.—Letter from Rome.

A KISSING ITEM.—A young gentleman, residing in the neighbourhood of Richmond, had occasion, a short time since, to drive his pretty cousin Fanny down to Windsor in a gig. Little Charlie, a brother of Fanny's, accompanied and sat between them in the gig: but as he was only five or six years of age, was considered nobody. Unfortunately, however, the lit'e fellow had got a new suit that very day of which he was very proud. Finding, on his arrival at Windsor, that it had sustained some injury during the journey, he rushed to his mama to complain: "I declare mama," he cried, "I'll never ride in a gig between sister Fanny and cousin George again!" "Why so my dear?" inquired mama. "Because," he replied, "they've crushed my new hat all to pieces with leaning over to kiss each other all the way from Richmond."—Lynchburg Virginian.

NIAGARA ECLIPSED.—The river Shirha wati between Bombay and Cape Comorin, falls into the Gulf of Arabia. The river is one-fourth of a mile in width, and in the rainy seasons, some thirty feet in depth. This immense body of water rushes down a rocky slope, three hundred feet, at an angle of forty-five degrees, at the bottom of which, it makes a perpendicular plunge of eight hundred and fifty feet, into a black and dismal abyss, with a noise like the loudest thunder. The whole descent is, therefore, eleven hundred and fifty feet, several times that of the Niagara. The volume of water in the latter is some what larger than that of the former, but in depth of descent it will be seen there is no comparison between them. In the dry season, the shirhawati is a small stream, and the falls is divided into three cascades, of surpassing beauty and grandeur. They are almost dissipated and dissolved into mist before reaching the bed of the river below.

Punch says that the gentleman denied admission to the Queen's Opera was an American "attired in nankeen trowsers, a striped waistcoat like a livery servant, a blue fogie handkerchief, and had on a pea green cut-a-way coat with brass buttons as big as cheese plates."

A vagrant called at a house on a Sunday, and begged for some cider.—The lady refused to give him any, and he reminded her of the oft—quoted remark, that she might entertain an angel unawares." Yes," said she, "but angels don't go about drinking cider on Sunday."

SOLD OUT.—While stopping at the Sutter House in Sacramento, California, I overheard a conversation between two gentlemen, one of whom was from New York City, and had been in the country nearly a year, and the other had just arrived. The new comer was inquiring his folly in leaving an abundance at home and especially two daughters, who were just budding into womanhood—when he asked the New Yorker if he had a family? Yes sir I have a wife and six children in New York—and I never saw one of them. "Was you ever blind sir?"—No, sir. "Did you marry a widow, sir?"—No, sir. A lapse of silence. "Did I understand you to say, sir, that you had a wife and six children in New York, and had never seen one of them?" I so stated. "How can it be, sir, that you never saw one of them?"—Why, one of them was born after I left. "Oh! ah!" and a general laugh; and after that the New Yorker was distinguished as the man who had "had six children and never saw one of them."

HOW RIFLES ARE MADE.—Nearly every part of the Sharp rifle is made by machinery. The barrel, after the ordinary manner, is made out of wrought iron, a piece some eighteen inches long, about two and a half wide, and half an inch in thickness, being doubled together upon a rod thus forming a spinder of the same length as the iron slip from which it is constructed. The calibre of this sage of the process is quite too large, but it is soon diminished in size, and the barrel at the same time is drawn out to its proper length, by the strokes of trip hammers, which when in full operation, strikes no less than one thousand blows a minute. After this process this calibre is very small, not more than one-fourth of an inch in diameter. The barrels are then subjected to a boring process, by which a proper size of calibre is secured. The stock is composed of two seperate parts, the breech and gun stock proper, are fastened together at the point where the lock is inserted. The lock is an ingenious contrivance, putting on the percussion itself as often as the gun is cocked.—London Free Press.

READY WIT.—Quin's professional profession al trips were attractive and profitable. It was during one of these that the stage coach was stopped by a highwayman. His only fellow traveller, a taciturn old gentleman, had fallen fast asleep. "Your money!" exclaimed Turpin's first cousin. Quin assuming the dialect and manner of a raw country lad, replied, with a stare of astonishment, "Money zur! Uncle there" (pointing to the sleeper) "pays for I, twinepikes and all." Thereupon the highwayman awoke "Uncle" with a sharp slap on the face, and (in classical phrase) cleaned him out leaving chuckling comedian in quiet possession of bumper benefit.

THE GREATEST WONDER YET.—Calvin Edson and all the other fat women, dwarfs and giants, are eclipsed by a man now on exhibition at Havanah, who was born without either legs or arms, but who having tenaciously set himself to work to conquer the inconveniences naturally consequent upon such deprivation, has made himself a wonder by the variety of his feats.—Among other things he announces that he is able to spin a top with such perfection that it will hit any spot named, to spin a dollar over a table, to throw a sling, to take a sixpence from a table, and put it into his left ear, and take it out again, to make a knot with a halter, to thread a needle, to uncork a bottle with a cork screw, load a fowling piece and kill any thing designated, or put out a candle with a single wad—quite wonders enough for a man without either legs or arms.

The Richmond Enquirer says that Mr. Brooks, on his recent tour to Cape May made another attack on a northern abolitionist, and but for the interference of some ruffians would have inflicted a chastisement as just as that upon Mr. Sumner.

PRINCE ALFRED.—Prince Alfred having chosen the navy for his profession, his whole time is spent in the requisite preliminary studies, and his only four is that he may not be prepared to join the examination when the terms of age shall arrive beyond which admission into the naval service of England is forbidden by the Admiralty regulations. With this view it is, we understand, intended that the young prince shall retire to Windsor, and there devote the next eighteen months especially to those literary and scientific studies which are the necessary prelude to a creditable examination for admission to the royal navy.

The Dublin Medical Express details a case which confirms the opinion that the toad can eject a venomous fluid from its mouth. A boy, aged six years, while throwing stones at a large toad, felt something spirted into his eye. He was attacked soon after with a spasmodic pain in his eye—then with coma; insensi ion attired in many drowsers, a striped waistcoat like a livery servant, a blue fogie handkerchief, and had on a pea green cut-a-way coat with brass buttons as big as cheese plates."

A SMART REPORT.—A celebrated dandy was one evening in company with a young lady, and observing her kiss her favorite poodle, he advanced, and begged the like favor, remarking that she ought to have as much affection for him as she showed to a dog. "Sir," said the belle, "I never kissed my dog when he was a puppy." The fellow took the hint and was off.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.—On Thursday last Mr Bugg, farmer on the 1st concession Westminster set light to a pile of old stumps which had been collected on the farm. The fire smouldered all night and on Friday the wind freshening blew some sparks which set light to one of the fences, The flames rapidly spread, consuming the whole of the grass crop growing. The wind fortunately lulled, and the buildings were saved. Had the wind continued north-west, the whole of the buildings of Mr. Pencombe and Mr. Robert Abbot must have been sacrificed, and 30 stacks of corn and hay. As it is the loss is estimated at $500. A CAPITAL STORY—The Hawkeye and Iowa Patriot tells a capital temperance story.

A farmer belonging somewhere in Iowa, bought a keg of whiskey and carried it home. Well knowing that his better half occasionally took a "drop or so" if it came in her way and now and then would take a drop at all events, he then endeavoured to conceal the keg from her by suspending it in the barn, near the ridge pole.

The Eagle eyed or rather "hawk eyed" wife got sight of it, however, and she resolved on obtaining a taste. At length she hit upon the following expedient, which worked to a charm.

Takin; down her husband's rifle, she put in a charge win a good ball, and taking deliberate aim at the keg, tapped it with a hammer right close to the bung, and then fire shot! Having a tub previously prepared, she was thus enabled to catch all, without losing a drop, and left her poor husband to weep over and wonder at the loss of his whiskey.

The Ottawa Citizen gives the following gratifying proof of the benefits derived from the Canada Line of Steamers:—

"We are indebted to Mr. W. Hunton, of the firm of T. & W. Hunton, of this city for Liverpool papers of the 26th ult. Mr. H. sailed from Quebec per steamer of the 8th June, to purchase goods in the British markets, a part of his purchases reached Montreal on the 16th July, a second portion he brought with him in the Indian. To show the advantage of our Canadian steam line to importers, we may mention that on the 17th ult. Mr. Hunton received a letter in England, from his brother, here, for an increased quantity of goods; he made his purchases in Manchester, had them forwarded to Liverpool, put on board the Indian, and they will be to hand to-day,—only 17 days from Manchester to Ottawa."

Administrative Reform.

Referring to to subject of Administrative Reform in England, the Times of the 3rd of August says:—

One part of the reform may now be considered as achieved; the victory is half won; the service is or will be, completely opened, and we doubt not that in a year or two the event will exercise much influence on the habits and education of the country. It remains to perfect but what has been begun; the internal organization of the departments must be modified in accordance with the spirit of the new system. Attentive inspection of conduct, conscientious promotion of desert, selection of the best men for important places without regard to party considerations, are among the duties of the statesmen who will superintend the various departments. In no branch of the service will a deficiency in these duties fail to be hurtful; but we may cite the Colonial-office as a department where there is the widest field for a bold and judicious hand. Hitherto it cannot be doubted that the distribution of the highest patronage has been distinguished neither by patriotism nor judgment. The frequent changes in the office of Colonial Secretary, coupled with many of the appointments made, would almost seem to indicate that such Minister was only anxious to embarrass his successor by giving him the most narrow and impracticable men in the country to deal with. Lately the necessity of conciliating independent colonists has led to the substitution of better men in certain places; Canada, Jamaica, and the Cape have had good Governors, and now, we believe, Sir H. Barkley is to be succeeded in Jamaica by Governor Darling of Newfoundland, a gentleman who has acquitted himself ably at several posts, and who commenced his career in the colony he is now to govern. But still it cannot be said that the vast machine of colonial government has been worked on any sound and intelligent principle.

We are gratified to observe that at the last Meeting of the Middlesex Agricultural Society, Christopher Tankard, being one of the Prizes awarded to him for the best field of Oats in the County. The system of awarded prizes for growing crops is a vast improvement on the practice of awarding prizes for grain after being submitted and carefully prepared for competition; because, no matter how valuable such grain mightbe for seed, having been carefully cleaned, and in many instances the small seed picked out seed so prepared could hardly be considered a fair sample of the whole crop besides this, the Judges having to go through the County, would be enabled to prepare by observation statistics that would be highly useful, not only to the locality, but to the Province.—The competitors would not exhibit one good field surrounded by others of slovenly or bad husbandry, but would endeavour to satisfy the Judges that their entire farm was equally deserving of notice. The report of the Judges this year was good, but we hope for a great improvement next. Mr. Coombs displayed good taste in selecting a cup as a permanent memorial of his success, rather than its equivalent in money, and in naming that he should say, "grateful as he felt of gaining such a prize, it was much enhanced by the kind manner in which it had been presented, and that he would rather be the possessor of that cup than twenty times its value in money, he would never part with it, but trusted his children would keep it in memory of him, and strive to gain others to place by its side."

The Tankard was manufactured by Messrs. Morphy Bros., of this place, of the purest silver obtained from Canadian Mines.

The principal emblem was a sheaf of oats and underneath the inscription.

"Presented to Christopher Coombs,
By the Middlesex Agricultural Society,
For the best field of Oats in the County, for 1856.
JOHN B. ASKIN, President.

This was surmounted by a wreath of grapes and vine leaves, the effect of which was very pretty.

The capacity of the cup was well tested in doing honor to the health of Mr. Coombs, and the London Beer was said never before to have been so fragrant of genuine Hops and Malt.—London Herald.

The expectation is that, on the 1st October, the Grand Trunk Railway will be completed from St. Mary's Portland. The Victoria Bridge will, it is true, still remain uncompleted and the Western extension have to be made. But as the river is passible at Montreal there will be no break in the line from St. Mary's to the seaboard. Already there are symptoms that the completion of this great national work will change the direction of commerce and travel between the seaboard and the Great West.—In New York fears of this result are entertained; and some of the journals of the city write as viciously respecting this great national work as the most slavish advocate of the Great Western in Canada. Already there are three lines of steamers which will bring passengers upon the Grand Trunk; but it is understood that the Great Eastern, by far the largest steamer ever built, to make at least one experimental trip to Portland The line of steamers subsidized by the Canadian Government has been eminently successful this season. Every one of them has supplied news for the whole continent of America in advance of its rivals, and with any other line. These steamers are invariably crowded with passengers; and as the experiment has been so eminently successful the line is becoming a favorite with the Canadians, who heretofore were the great support of the CUNARD line. This latter line is not so managed as to make it very attractive to the public; and the mishaps which have befallen the COLLINS' steamers prevent that line from being preferred when there is as much choice as now exists. Two steamers have been lost—the Arctic and the Pacific—the Atlantic was once out thirty-six days and made land with a broken shaft; besides innumerable derangements of machinery, causing delays of several hours on the Atlantic and panic among the passengers. A strong national penalty is added to the excellent management of the cuisine, causes Americans to stick by this line; but it is no unfrequent thing to meet with Americans who admit that this is not the most desirable line on the ground of safety. What the new lines which are to come to Montreal and Portland will accomplish, remains to be tested.

The shortest route, in point of time, is the one that will ultimately be adopted. The value of a couple of days to commercial men may be and often is very great; and those who are not situated for time never want motives for desiring a quick ocean passage. Those who travel for amusement or instruction generally regard the ocean trip as the great drawback of the journey; and are anxious that it should be as short as possible. Those who have never yet made the conditions being very favorable to the Woodstock Company, and nothing but the formal consent of the rate-payers of the Municipalities interested, is now needed to implement the agreement. By-Laws for this purpose are at this moment advertised in the newspapers, and it is hoped that the Municipalities will be wise enough for their own sakes, not to refuse to ratify the covenants which have been made by their delegates. Nor do we see how they could honorably get free from their engagements, even if they desired. But we doubt there is much danger of Rankin & Co. failing. As far as the Directory is concerned, that Company has suddenly changed two of its Directors, and elected Mr. Isaac Buchanan in the interest of the Great Western Company, as its President! who has transferred the books and office of the Woodstock Co. to Hamilton, where it is to be purely controlled." We copy from the Woodstock Gazetteer, some account of this part of the grand coup d'etat, which is calculated to make people aware, that a power has set itself up in Canada, greater than either Crown Ministry or Parliament. Thus it is. An enormous power, not a railway monopoly, has undertaken to defeat the acts of Parliament passed last session, for the construction of an Independant Southern line.—It sets self above all law by falsifying official records of Stock, and seeks to gain its objects by the use of enormous offers of bribery over heard of in this Province. This Great Western depotism aims at nothing less than absolute monopoly in Western Canada. It will crush all rivals, and place its arbitrary taxation upon every inhabitant of the Province. Parliament and people say that the competition of the Independant Southern line is best, for both the interests of commerce and the due development of the Southern section of the Peninsula. The Great Western Company stamps law and public interest to the ground, and tries to grasp in its own clutches, in order to stifle or crush out every attempt at that fosters competition with its present monopoly. This tyranny will not be submitted to we are confident, and if the Courts do not settle the matter previously, the House of Parliament will be called on to stop the monstrous pretensions of this Company, to "control" all the railways of the Province.—Mail.

SANDWICH, AUGUST 28, 1856.

We must claim the indulgence of our readers for our shortcomings this week, owing to the editor's absence on important business.

THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ELECTION.

The candidates for representation of our Counties in the newly constituted Legislative Council, now being fairly in the field, it becomes us to express our views as to the proper men to fill that important office.—Col. Prince and Mr. Dougall, for all that at present appears, will have a single handed fight, for notwithstanding the declaration of the erratic Planet, that he has chosen Mr. Rankin, we cannot see that any one else has, nor consequently that that gentleman will resign his office in the Assembly on the chance of a more lasting sent in the Council.

For both Messrs Prince and Dougall we have great respect, to which both are certainly entitled, from the length of time during which they have resided in our neighbourhood, and the upright course of conduct which each has pursued in the various spheres of action, but something more than respect is needed in a man to whom we are to confide so important a trust to be exercised for so long a time as the discharge of the duties of our representative in the Council.

Mr. Dougall is untried in politics, unaccustomed to public life, new to the strife of party and to the allurements of office. Mr. Prince is the reverse of all this: well versed by a Parliamentary experience of eighteen years in the chances and changes of Canadian politics, and having preserved during the whole of that time, that character so difficult to support, and which is the certain rule of any man of inferior talent, i. e., that of an independent member. We conceive him peculiarly fitted to fill to our advantage the post under consideration; unprejudiced by party bigotry, and undinfluenced by party passions, he can surely bring a calmer judgment to bear on the consideration of the question, should the returning power be exercised or not, than the High Tory or the red-hot Radical, the out-and-out Clear Grit, or his so-called Moderate, but too often impassioned Conservative.

That Colonel Prince will be elected, we think no reasonable man can, by this time, entertain a doubt; and we beg to assure Mr. Rankin and those electors whom he addressed last week in the lower townships that we are not actuated by the hostilities which he imputed to us, and that although most men might deem it a not unreasonable cause of complaint that two respectable magistrates should be dismissed on the false complaint of a convicted felon, yet we have long since determined to let that rest until its injustice should be more immediately made the subject of inquiry.

A person named Geo. Sunter, who lectured in Windsor on Sunday week last, on a supposed lustrumone disease called "Colorphobia," announced his intention of giving, last Sunday, a second lecture, on the "Art of keeping out of Mischief and Misery,' concluding with a sequel to Colorphobia. The meeting was pretty well attended by all classes of people and of all colors. Shortly after Mr. Sumer had commenced his lecture, S. S. Macdonell, Esq., Warden of this County, came forward, and requested Mr. Sunter to desist and the people to disperse, stating that if he wished to lecture, he might do so, either in the Council Chamber or elsewhere, and that in an audience like the one congregated he could do but little good, and most likely be the cause of much mischief and trouble, as the result might be a breach of the peace, which should always be avoided, more especially on the Sabbath. In spite of this friendly warning he persisted in going on, although occasionally interrupted by howls, cheers and a few rotten eggs.

At length he announced the second portion of his lecture viz., a sequel to Colorphobia. At this point all the colored people (who had previously been sitting on the ground) rose en masse, armed with thick sticks, and surrounded the lecturer. The white people did the same, and a scene of confusion ensued, in which no one could scarcely be heard.

Mr. Sunter, after being pushed off his chair several times, finding that he could not proceed, thanked his audience for the polite attention he had received, at the same time blaming the authorities for the violence of some of his audience, stating that had not Mr. Macdonell interfered, the people would have been quiet. Mr. S. then took up his chair and marched away, accompanied by about a dozen "outlered pussons" as a body guard. After his departure the attentive and quiet (?) audience dispersed to their homes.

We not only disagree with Mr. Sunter in blaming the Warden for the interruptions he received, but think it an ungrateful return for the kindness of the Warden in advising him to desist, as we are informed that several persons had provided themselves with a large supply of rotten eggs, with the intention, if he commenced lecturing again on Colorphobia, they would let him see, taste and smell; indeed, we heard some remarks about a coat of tar and feathers. Of this, we believe, he was fully aware.

While condemning Mr. Sunter's attempt to set the white and colored people at variance, we do not think that the Windsorites used the best mode of expressing their disapproval, as, in our opinion, instead of egg-throwing, it would be far better to stay away altogether. We hope however, that this will be the last of Mr. Sunter's attempts, as his only qualification as a lecturer seems to be plain cheek.

In conclusion we may add, that while we are willing to lend a helping hand to rid them from slavery, we are strongly opposed to an amalgamation of the two races, which, we believe, is Mr. Suntor's sole object. The country is open to them, and such of the colored people who choose to work honestly for their own living, will always find plenty to assist them. This is well understood by the colored people themselves, several of whom have become rich, while others are rapidly becoming so.

☞ We have much pleasure in referring our readers to the advertisment of Master Nicholas Goodall, who is, without doubt, the most extraordinary boy of this or any other age. He visited us last fall, but the night being wet and unfavorable, our families could not embrace the opportunity of hearing him. Since then he has acquired fame and renown, and is acknowledged to be the best violinist living. This visit will be fully appreciated here, and we expect to see a larger audience than we have ever seen in the Court House. Parents and Guardians of youth, we say take all your children, and thus be convinced what patience and perseverance will do.

☞ We beg to direct the attention of our readers to the advertisment, in another Column, of the Sandwich Branch Bible Society, which will hold its anniversary meeting in the Wesleyan Church in this town, on Thursday next the 4th September. Mr. Johnson, the agent of the Upper Canada Bible Society, and other Speakers, will address the meeting. We hope to see a large number of the friends of this useful society in attendance on this occasion.

First Steamers from London to Canada.

We learn from Messrs. Buchanan, Harris & Co., who are acting as the agents for the projected steamers between London and Quebec—the first vessel of the line sailed upon the day advertised. We are pleased to add that she has a full cargo. The gentlemen who have made this experiment in London, express a hope that it will lead to a regular line, being sent from that port to Canada by means of steamers; and that they have at their disposal sufficient vessels of the same class as the 'Chester' to perform sufficient and regular service, if they meet with the good encouragement which they hope for. We are informed that no effort is made of competing in speed with the line of steamers now running between Liverpool and Montreal. The vessels to be employed are fitted with what are called auxiliary engines, and of course are not expected to make the first rate runs of vessels built with speed as their first object.—What the proprietors hope to effect, however, is to enable merchants to know with certainty what time they may expect their goods, and at the same time to reduce the length of time now occupied in voyages by sailing ships, while a very slight advance on ordinary freights will be made. If goods can be forwarded from London to Montreal in from twenty to twenty-eight days, at a rate little, if at all, exceeding that charged by sailing ships, the proprietors of this line think they will merit encouragement, and will receive it. We are requested by the agents here to mention, that very much of the success of this, the first experiment, will depend upon the despatch which the Chester may meet with here. They therefore request gentlemen who may know that they have goods on board, to prepare as much as possible to expedite the Chester's discharge upon her arrival, which is looked for during the present week.—Montreal Herald.

The Commercial Prospects of England.

(From the London Times, Aug. 5.

The declared value of our exports during the first six months of 1854 was £49,000,000; in the same period of last year they were £43,000,000, and now they have again risen to £54,000,000. These exports, it ought to be explained, are entirely of articles either produced or manufactured in the United Kingdom and to show how unprecedented is this return let it be added that the annual average of exports for 1847 to 1849 inclusive, was for a half year as above, but for the whole year, was only £66,500,000. How rapidly the increase is made may be judged by looking at the single item of cotton manufactures. Here we find one species alone of these products, an export growing annually in value by a million of money. Of woolen and worsted yarn the export has increased in a couple of years from £500,000 to 1,200,000; and so of almost every other item. Everywhere the same energy and progress and the happy art of seizing an opportunity. Peace is concluding and in a few days 140 ships will have entered our ports from Russia. But in the same time not less than 456 have cleared for that country. And it may be worth nothing, for the benefit of those who saw in the repeal of the Navigation Laws the destruction of the mercantile marine, that the British coasting vessels which entered or cleared different ports, numbered 70,000, the foreign vessels scarcely numbered 100.

It is not without trembling that one traces the steps of this marvellous progress—a trembling which is not unlike that of the owner of a Derby favorite who sees his horse making all the running, and wonders how it will be at the winning post. We have hitherto been comparatively alone, in our commercial achievements. Now a host of rivals are in our track, and countries that scorned us as a nation of traders are coming to buy our wares ample and to share in our greatness. With competition thus increasing on every side—France transferring its enormous energies from political to mercantile speculation, America chasing the dollar over the world as much for love of excitement as for the love of gain, Russia anxious to foster its shipping and extend its commerce, our own colonies following in the footsteps of the parent; and taking to the water as naturally as ducklings—a croaking politician might ask, "What will become of us "a few years hence?" The answer is not far to seek. Even if commercial rivalry were dangerous, England, in whose markets there is a greater elasticity than in those of any other country in the world, has nothing to fear. We have felt in England some severe enough twinges of gout, that have rudely interfered with our daily occupations, but that aristocratic malady has attacked as yet no vital part. If there is rotteness and senility anywhere, it is not in our commerce, which combines all the liveliness of youth with all the stability of age, and invites rather than suns competition; for it is the glory of mercantile competition that it does not kill, but invigorates. If France, therefore, let Russia, let America, prosper; England will prosper still more.

Fears of an Insurrection at the Cape of Good Hope.

Advic s to the 7th of May had been received in England from the Cape.

Up to that date the state of affairs on the frontier in the free State (late Sovereignty) was without change. Letters had been received by the Governor Sir Geo. Grey from the President of the free State, that it was his intention to move out in a few days for the purpos- of chastising a predatory chief, ally to the Basutah nation, who had committed or connived at robbing and cattle stealing, and who refused restitution or satisfaction, that the said chief was prepared to defend himself, and had been promised assistance by one of the relations of Moshesh, the chief of the Basutahs, who, at the request of the President had remonstrated with his kins man on his conduct; that it was apprehended that other tribes would join the refractory chiefs, and fears of a wide-spread rising were generally entertained.

The President also desired aid from Governor Grey, and the Governor had made a communication to the Cape Parliament on this matter, tending much to allay the excitement caused by a knowledge of the receipt of the above letter to him, but a very uneasy feeling prevailed, and only one sentiment was uppermost throughout the community. In precautionary measure all the available troops—about 500 only—had left in the ship Castor frigate for East London, and her Majesty's steam frigate Penelope had been dispatched to the Mauritius with an earnest request from Governor Grey for the loan of 1,000 soldiers from that Island, if it was to be conveyed direct to East London in that vessel.

The "commando" of the free State was to have commenced its march in three columns by as many different routes converging on the chief's place of residence some days before the 7th of May. Much mistake prevails as to the result. The Basutahs, as is well known, can bring from 10,000 to 12,000 well trained and well armed fighting men into the field.

American Affairs.

There is nothing like a good example. It is only a couple of months since our Upper House threw out the Supply Bill, sooner than assent to what they considered an iniquitous appropriation in it. Now, we do not mean to say that this Province has, as yet attained that degree of eminence in its Legislative proceeding, that our Yankee neighbours, in all their grer tness, should condescend to take a lesson from us. But, somehow, these things are catching, and, to make a bull, if it were nothing but to furnish us with a sort of precedent after the fact, we look with some vanity on the spirit of the United States Senate, which has marked a dying Session. That body "finished off" with the rejection of the Army Estimates, in preference to giving validity to one single resolution embodied in them. Here, however, the parallel ends, and for the rest, the advantage is altogether with us. The appropriation to which our Council refused to assent was in itself a very bad one, and as every body knows and feels, fully justified the course to which they resorted.

In the States it has been exactly vice versa. The resolution which a Buchananite Senate could not digest was about the best thing in the whole measure which contained it, but it was therefore too strong a dose for the week nerves of Border Ruffianism. It was simply a proviso that none of the United States force should be paid over their violence, in assisting the Missourian Pro-Slavery party in Kansas. This proviso the republican Lower House had previously passed; but as we have said, the Senate did not like it, and accordingly did the only thing they could do to get rid of it, they threw out the whole bill.

Hence the difficulty, and a rather serious difficulty it is for Brother Jonathan. The matter has not shown itself to be so easily arrangeable as its antecedent in Canada. Both Houses stand on their dignity, and a Conference has utterly failed. Consequently Franklin Pierce finds himself in a fix. He calls together the Judges of the Supreme Court and other Councillors, and there is a grand conclusion. The upshot of their fertile imaginings, amid the groans of the New York Herald, is an extra session. But how this will solve the difficulty, it is hard to conceive. As far as the extra session has yet gone, the Lower House has adhered to its determination thus practically to mark its disapproval of Border Ruffianism, whilst the Democratic Senate appears equally bent on perseveringly holding its own,—coute qui coute. The question is, which body will cry "Enough!" first, and in the meanwhile, the army must go on "tick," as best it may. That fine force of thirteen thousand strong which, some day or other, is to "chaw up" creation, and squelch Canada with one hand, whilst it seizes Central America with the other, is left to provide for itself. Its pay remains as to its pat to the most practical test by stopping the supplies; and the friends of Buchanan may have cause for rejoicing by and-bye, when they see its members reduced to the honorable condition of Falstaff's recruits. One more facile method of relieving the dilemma, however, suggests itself. If a paternal Government will not pay its troops, it is a fair conclusion that it can dispense with their services. "The smartest nation in all creation" has inaugurated the grand invention of making conquests by its wits. What, then, is the future use of soldiers? And as for the soldiers themselves, they have a plain course before them. Men fought on their own hook at Bunker's Hill, and why shouldn't they do so again! There's Nicaragua—a splendid field. Why should not the United States Army go there lustily? By the last accounts Mr. Dictator Walker was in distance badly, and if he don't get it, stands a good chance of being sent home, like Imperial Pompey, minus his beard. Why, we ask again, should not the "great unpaid" of thirteen thousand strong go to the rescue? If Nicaragua they will be enabled, individually and collectively, to exemplify the foreign policy of their (late) employers. There they can follow the "good old rule," which the Americans have not yet quite introduced into their domestic affairs, and be missionaries extraordinary for the development of that very excellent, very national (where others are concerned,) and admirably—

——"simple plan
That those should take who have the power,
And those should keep who can!"

But the rejection of the army estimates is not the only financial legacy which the defunct Congress has left to an anxious country. The New York papers are in ecstacies of rage at the fatuity which unaterially reduced the grant to the Collins steamers, at the moment when the Adriatic was about to whip the whole Cunard line out of time. What a time to choose for such base economy? The point has been gained in Central America without a fight, and therefore it is not so much matter that the army should be put on nothing a day. Their power can be well appointed now, but why stop the "chaw" of the Adriatic before the battle? Mr. Marcy's trickery won't make a steam-engine work without a due supply of fuel. Since the Ericsson went to the bottom, that's a start beyond even Yankeedom, and though Britannia's day on land is gone by, she must still contrive to rule the waves. The Persia is not to be beaten yet.

As the depreciative tendency in the Collins line goes on, we in Canada may have a change of making something out of it. The Anglo Saxon lately made the passage from Liverpool to Quebec in a little over ten days, and outward was only six days from land to land. The line to which the vessel belongs bids fair to be as expeditious and as well appointed in every way as any other. With additions to the number of its trips, a very great amount of transatlantic traffic with the "Far West" might be diverted through Canada; but as this is an article on "American affairs," and has already reached a legitimate length, we shall not now further pursue this subject.—Globe.

Arrival of the Niagara.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.—Halifax, Aug. 25.—The Cunard steamship Niagara arrived here at 9 o'clock this evening, with Liverpool dates to the 16.

THE steamship Persia arrived out on the evening of the 25th, making the passage in 9 days and 5 hours.

LIVERPOOL BREADSTUFFS MARKET.—A regular state of demand exists for all descriptions of Breadstuffs, and prices were generally a shade higher on the week. The weather had been quite favorabl , and the crop accounts were of a satisfactory character.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.

The steamer Hermann sailed from Southampton for New York on the 15th inst., and the City of Manchester left Liverpool for Philadelphia on the same day, with 180 passengers.

The screw steamer Canadian, from Quebec, arrived at Liverpool on the 16th.

A lamentable accident occurred on board the Canadian on her homeward passage.—The Rev. Mr. Mash drank, by mistake, a quantity of burning fluid. Every exertion was made for his recovery, but without avail. His body was taken to Liverpool and an inquest held thereon.

The Cunard steamship Persia, from New York the 6th inst., arrived off the bar at the entrance to the river Mersey at 5:15 P. M. on Friday, the 15th—the passage being called 8 days and 23½ hours, mean time.

GREAT BRITAIN.—From every part of the United Kingdom the harvest reports are of a favorable character, and but little doubt is entertained that the grain crop will be at least a fair average in quantity and quality. In Scotland, the crops are very heavy. In Ireland, the potatoes, there is a general concurrence of evidence that crops, though not entirely free from disease in some portions of England, Ireland and Scotland, promises to be abundant.

Excellent harvest operations are now general, and no more labor is wanted than farmers have to enroll railway contractors, who find themselves compelled to suspend for the present all but their pressing contracts on the public works.

In the political world there is nothing worth reporting.

Miss Nightingale has returned to her home in Derbyshire, avoiding all public demonstrations of welcome.

Marshal Pelissier's title is Duke of the Malakoff, with a pension of one hundred thousand francs per annum.

BLACK SEA.—The English war ship Gladiator has conveyed from the Isle of Serpents to Constantinople, and reports on the Island five hundred Turkish soldiers and eight Russians.

There was no armed seizure of the Island as it was reported. The Island is nothing but a bare rock of very limited size and dimensions, and the Russians which the Turks and Russians live in together and the latter are treated by the former as their friends.

SPAIN.—The news from Spain is wholly uninteresting. We have a report in the Gazetee de France, but which requires confirmation, that disturbances had arisen at Cadiz in disarming the national guards, but with this exception the disarming is carried out without resistance. The fears entertained of a scarcity in the crops were diminishing.

PORTUGAL.—The Government has sent a war steamer with a cargo of provisions and warlike stores to Lisbon. The cholera was circulated in the Paris bourse that there had been an attempt at insurrection in Naples. It was not however true and from the precaution taken to depress any attempt at rising is not likely. The secret liberal presses has however just issued another proclamation to the people, calling for them to agitate firmly and quietly.

The Gladiator had left again for the Black Sea with new instructions of a more positive nature. The remainder of the allied fleet has not yet left and France and Turkey having no disposable ships for English ships have joined Admiral Stewart's squadron now cruising before Bentzenik—The evacuation of the Turkish territory, by the French troops terminated on the 18th.

The Archbishop of Cheron and Tavirla has formally consecrated the south sided of Sebastopol. Its accessory is to be finished.

It is confirmed that Russia is constructing a first rate naval arsenal on the Island of Kasko, in the Gulf of Bothnia.

The harvest in Asia is bad, but considerable stores remain from last year.

Latest by telegraph.—Saturday, August 13.—Her Majesty and the Royal family retired to Osborne from Plymouth yesterday

The Divan has received a formal renunciation of the Russian government's claim to the Isle of Serpent.

Kars will be delivered up immediately to the Turks.

FALL FROM SUSPENSION BRIDGE—A WONDERFUL ESCAPE FROM DEATH.—A man named Joseph Cowsland, who resides at 72 Joiner street, fell from the Genesee Suspension Bridge last night, narrowly escaping instant death, and remained under the Bridge ten hours unable to move. The circumstances of the case are as follows. Cowsland went to the Lower Falls last evening to carry a package to one of the paper mills On his return he attempted to cross the Suspension Bridge in order to reach home by a nearer route. The contractor had fenced up the ends of the Bridge near the towers so that the people could not cross on Sunday. This man undertook to get around the end of the fence, and so fell to the bank below, a distance of sixty feet, striking near the foot of the towers. Had the fence been removed as it was he would have fallen into the awful chasm, 240 feet, and of course met instant death. As it was it is remarkable that he was not killed. Unable to move or obtain help, the poor man lay upon the ground, exposed to the chilly atmosphere these cold nights for ten hours, until the workmen came to the Bridge at 7 o'clock this morning. It does not appear that any bones were broken, but he was frightfully bruised. He says that persons crossed the Bridge last evening after he fell, but he was too much injured to make himself heard. He was taken to some house in the vicinity and medical aid administered. It is thought that he will recover.

SHEEP STEALING.—A dull stupid looking man lately came down from the neighbourhood of London, C. W. with a large flock of sheep, and, after procuring pasture for them of a farmer in the township of Ancaster, he sold most of them to a butcher in Dundas, receiving part of the money down, but at such a low price as to excite suspicion that all was not right. He was then arrested, and the money, except what he had spent, taken from him. The constable kept him in charge and locked him up that night, taking his clothes out of the room, next morning it was discovered that the stupid looking boy had escaped.—Markham Economist.

Special Notices.

Sir Astley Cooper's Pills

Have acquired much of their celebrity from the fact that they soothe the system, destroy latent diseases, impart cheerfulness, and that conscious feeling of restored health and power, which inevitably leads to the actual possession of health and strength. Sir Astley Cooper's Pills immediately eradicate any vicious, acrid, or dangerous matters which may have accumulated in the system, and the moment the tone of the stomach is restored, the patient finds new life and vigor, the appetite comes back again, and with a little perseverance, even the oldest man discovers that he has a chance of living a little longer.

Sir Astley Cooper's Pills will prove highly efficacious in bilious complaints, scorbutic disorders, liver complaints, affections of the nervous system, lowness of spirits, palpitation of the heart, rheumatic pains in the head, limbs, and other parts of the body; oppression of the chest, indigestion, loss of appetite, redundancy of bile, dizziness of the eyes, violent pains in the temple and forehead, impaired memory, sick headache, tremulous action of the whole frame, restlessness and bad dreams, stupor fic dozing, flatulency, costiveness.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—Observe that on the top of each box of the Genuine Pills there is a correct likeness of Sir Astley Cooper, from the celebrated painting by Lawrence; also the fac-simile of the signature of the Proprietors, the Mother & Co., London and New York, on each box, and on the directions Without these marks they are spurious and an imposition.

Sold at 25 and 50 cents per box, and in Family boxes at $1 each. There is a great saving by purchasing the larger sizes.

For sale by Simpson and Dunspaugh, Druggists, Toronto; John M. Thornton, Dundas; Andrew Oliver Gait; A. H. Cook, Brantford, General Agents, by whom Country Druggists and Merchants will be supplied at London and New York prices.

The Grist Mill is situated in the Township of Sandwich, and a portion of the Town Lots and an excellent House and Lot are situate in the Town of Amherstburg; the remaining Town and Villa Lots in the Town of Sandwich, the County Town of Essex and on the beautiful river Detroit. The Wild Lands are situate in different parts of the County of Essex and are very valuable.

The Town Lots are large with fine broad streets, and close to the business part of the Town.

The Great Southern Railway Terminus will be within a very short distance of these Lots.

The Villa Lots have a most beautiful situation, being high and well adapted for gentlemen's residences, having a fine broad avenue laid out, on which they front; and are not surpassed in respect to beauty and position by any in the Province.

There are a greater number of prizes in proportion to the number of tickets to be sold than in any similar scheme yet offered to the public. The drawing will take place under the superintendence of a committee of gentlemen, to be appointed on the day of drawing by the holders of Tickets.

☞ Parties remitting to the subscriber one hundred dollars will receive a package of twenty-eight tickets in return.

THE undermentioned lots which form a part of the Northern and Southern portions of the Island of St. Joseph, Lake Huron, will be offered at Public Auction, at the office of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, in the City of Toronto, on Monday, the Fifteenth September next, at the hour of noon Upset prices as shillings and pence per acre; one fifth to be paid down at the time of Sale, the remainder by four yearly Instalments with interests on each as it becomes due, or the Patents may issue forthwith as the purchase money shall be paid up in full.

The map of the Island may be inspected during business hours, up to the day of Sale.

A valuable portion of the Island of St. Joseph is of a good quality, well timbered, and the soil adapted for Agricultural purposes, and the waters around it abound with excellent fisheries.

The Mining regions will afford a favorable market for the surplus Agricultural produce raised upon the Island, which lies in the course of, and possesses stopping places for the American and Canadian Steamers, proceeding to the Sault St. Marie.

CATHARTIC PILLS

OPERATE by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, and, by restoring their irregular action to health, correct, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first causes of disease. An extensive trial of their virtues, by Professors, Physicians, and Patients, has shown cures of dangerous diseases almost beyond belief, were they not substantiated by persons of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Their certificates are published in my American Almanac, which the Agents below named are pleased to furnish free to all inquiring.

Annexed we give Directions for their use in the complaints which they have been found to cure.

FOR COSTIVENESS.—Take one or two Pills, or such quantity as to gently move the bowels. Costiveness is frequently the aggravating cause of Piles, and the cure of one complaint is the cure of both. No person can feel well while under a costive habit of body. Hence it should be, as it can be, promptly relieved.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, which is sometimes the cause of Costiveness, and always uncomfortable, take mild doses—from one to four—to stimulate the stomach and liver into healthy action: They will do it, and the heartburn, bodyburn, and soulburn of dyspepsia will rapidly disappear. When it has gone, don't forget what cured you.

FOR A FOUL STOMACH, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take from four to eight Pills at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until activity and strength is restored to the system.

FOR SYMPTOMS OF COSTIVENESS, SICK HEADACHE, NAUSEA, Pain in the Stomach, Back, or Side, take from four to eight Pills on going to bed. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more the next day until they do. These complaints will be swept out from the system. Keep your clothes and their hundred disorders because your stomach is foul.

FOR Fevers, Intermittents, and all Diseases of the Skin, take the Pills freely and frequently, to keep the bowels open. The eruptions will generally soon begin to diminish and disappear. Many dreadful ulcers and sores have been healed up by the purging and vivifying effect of these Pills, and some disgusting diseases which seemed to saturate the whole system have completely yielded to their influence, leaving the sufferer in perfect health. Patients! your duty to society forbids that you should parade yourself around the world covered with pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores, and all or any of the unclean diseases of the skin, because your system needs cleansing.

TO PURIFY THE BLOOD, they are the best medicine ever discovered. They should be taken freely and frequently, and the impurities which are the seeds of incurable diseases will be swept out of the system like chaff before the wind. By this property they do as much good in preventing sickness as by the remarkable cures which they are making every where.

LIVER COMPLAINT, JAUNDICE, and all Bilious Affections arise from some derangement—either torpidity, congestion, or obstructions of the Liver. Torpidity and congestion vitiate the bile and render it unfit for digestion. This is disastrous to the health, and the constitution is frequently undermined by no other cause. Indigestion is the symptom. Obstruction of the duct which empties the bile into the stomach causes the bile to overflow into the blood. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternately costiveness and diarrhœa, prevails. Feverish symptoms, languor, low spirits, weariness, restlessness, and melancholy, with sometimes liability to sleep, and sometimet great drowsiness; sometimes there is severe pain in the side; the skin and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow; the stomach sick; the bowels sore to the touch; the whole system irritable, with a tendency to fever, which may turn to bilious fever, bilious colic, bilious diarrhœa, dysentery, &c. A medicine dose of three or four Pills taken at night, followed by two or three in the morning, and repeated a few days, will remove the cause and make these troubles. It is wicked to suffer such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

RHEUMATISM, GOUT, and all Inflammatory Fevers are rapidly cured by the purifying effects of these Pills upon the blood and the stimulus which they afford to the vital principle of Life. For these and all kindred complaints they should be taken in small doses, to move the bowels gently, but freely.

As a DINNER PILL, this is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has been more effectual to the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

Weather Proverbs.

A rain bow in the morning,
Gives the shepherd warning.

A rain bow at night
Is the shepherd's delight.

Evening red, and morning grey,
Are certain signs of a beautiful day.

When the glow worm lights her lamp,
Then the air is always damp.

If the cock goes crowing to bed,
He'll certainly rise with a watery head.

When you see the gossamer flying,
Be ye sure the air is drying.

When black snails cross your path,
Black cloud much moisture hath.

When the peacock loudly bawls,
Soon we'll have both rain and squalls.

When ducks are driving through the burn
That night the weather takes a turn.

If the moon show like a silver shield,
Be not afraid to reap your field.
But if she rises haloed round,
Soon we'll tread on deluged ground.

When rooks fly sporting high in air,
It shows that windy storms are near.

Useful if not Ornamental.

AN OLD RECEIPT.

When Onions abound,
Take the small white and round,
And peel off the outer brown skin;
Then with some wifery art
Make some water boil smart
In a little saw pan or tin.

When the water boils fast,
Your Onions in cast
'Till they cover the surface quite nice;
And when they appear
On the outside quite clear,
Then quick take them out with a slice.

On a cloth that is clean
And fit to be seen,
Lay them neatly and nicely by rule;
Put another cloth over
By way of a cover,
And so let them be 'till they cool.

Meanwhile scald a set,
And repeat this till you get
As many as you wish, or near,
If the outer skin shrivel
This is a vexatious evil;
Peli it off 'till the Onions look clear.

Next put them in a jar,
And pour wine vinegar
Just hot but not boiling upon them;
Cover close when they are cold,
And they'll keep a year to hold.
As though a Cook-major had done them.

Do all this remember
In the month of September.

The Florida Potato--China Thrown into the Back Ground.

Hardly had the new Chinese potato (Dioscorea Batatas) had a chance to begin to speak for itself, or the enterprising introducers to realize the expected returns for their great outlays in securing a monopoly of the same, when another benevolent purpose of "benefitting the country," ere a presuming "Native" comes forward with a claim sufficient not only to drive out the good old Irish potato, but even to overwhelm and smother all hopes of success for the new comer into the field. The cause, reason, if what is said of the "Florida Potato" be only half true, it must certainly become the potato of the country, provided always that it prove sufficiently hardy to withstand the rigors of our Northern winters—a matter of no little uncertainty, however. We commend the new comer to the immediate attention of Mr. Brown,—him of the Patent Office Agricultural Department.

Mr. Wm. F. Robertson, of Tallahassee, Fla., says of it: "It grows in the sandy soil of our pine woods, near the Gulf Coast, is perennial, with a climbing vine, and flower somewhat resembling that of a convolvulus or morning glory." What a change to combine utility and beauty! "It appears to be very prolific, the root or potato attaining a growth in the first year of four or five inches in diameter, and ten or twelve inches in length. A specimen before me has been planted about three years, and the root is more than thirteen inches in diameter, with numerous offshoots or radicels and would probably weigh from thirty to forty pounds." Think of that!—a potato, and we behold them in the material use, acceptable alike at the table of the rich and poor and, from their exceeding productiveness, carrying plenty where perhaps gaunt famine would otherwise carry off its thousands annually. May we not be permitted to hope something from this new species! We hope so. They should be planted in slight soil, in drills and about a foot apart, and suffered to run on poles.—New York Tim s.

GREEN CORN OMELET.—The following receipt for this seasonable delicacy is said to be excellent: Grate the corn from twelve ears of corn boiled, beat up five eggs, stir them with the corn, season with pepper and salt, and fry the mixture brown, browning the top with a hot shovel. If fried in small cakes with a little flour and milk stirred in to form a batter, is very nice.

☞ PINEAPPLE JELLY.—Pare and grate the pineapple, and put into the preserving pan with one pound of fine white sugar to every pound of fruit; stir and boil it until well mixed and thickened sufficiently, then strain it, put it into jars, and when it has become cool, cover the jellies with papers wet with brandy, cover the jars tightly and treat them as apple jelly.

☞ CURRANT AND RASPBERRY JELLY.—Pick over a quart of red currants, a quart of white currants, and a quart of raspberries, put the whole over the fire, stir them and boil them about ten minutes, then rub them through a sieve; strain the liquor while hot through a jelly bag, add a pound of fine white sugar to every pint of the liquor, boil and treat as directed for apple jelly.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,
AND JOURNAL OF SUBURBAN ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the United States.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced. The growing interest with which the rising generation view the science of Horticulture, renders such a Journal as "The Illustrated Horticulturist" imperatively necessary to the progress of Rural Affairs.

Rural Architecture forms one of the principal features; each number contains from two to four engravings of model cottages, from designs by eminent and skilful architects. Space is also assigned to the tasteful art of Landscape Gardening, engraved plans of gardens in every style, and adapted to the peculiarities of different orders of architecture, beautifies the work.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and to all who can boast the sovereignty of a square rod of tillable earth, "The Illustrated Horticulturist and Journal of Suburban Art" will prove an invaluable companion. The extraordinary low price at which it is afforded; together with its really superior execution, both in regard to typography and artistical ability, renders it one of the most popular work of the kind in America.

"The Illustrated Horticulturist" is printed on the finest quality of pearl-surfaced paper, manufactured expressly. It is issued regularly the first of each month, commencing with July, 1855. The following gentlemen, eminent for their ability in the science of Horticulture, are engaged to conduct the Editorial department: R. P. KNIGHT, JAMES SNOWDEN and D. W. RAY.

TERMS: Two Dollars per annum, payable invariably in advance. A liberal discount to the Trade, Postmasters, and getters-up of Clubs.

Advertisements inserted at the rate of Ten Dollars per page.

N.B.—Any person inserting the above prospectus, and drawing attention editorially to the same, will be forwarded the ILLUSTRATED HORTICULTURIST for one year, a copy containing the advertisement should be sent in all cases to ensure attention.

NEW VOLUME OF THE
AGRICULTURIST

SUBSCRIPTION REDUCED FROM 25 TO 50 PER CENT.

The Canadian Agriculturist

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by its present proprietor in 1848, and is too well known to the leading farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us. The undersigned have made arrangements with the proprietor to publish the next, and probably succeeding volumes, and have resolved to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE

Illustrated with Engravings

Such as Farm Implements, Portraits of Animals, Designs of Farm Buildings, New Inventions, &c., &c., interesting to the Farmer, and also portraits of some of the most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM MACDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the practice of Agriculture near Toronto, where he intends to test the various improvements made in our Agricultural Legislation since 1847, and having also been connected with this Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and writings in behalf of Canadian Agriculture are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to its columns as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to render the Correspondence on subjects of a practical kind.

THE AGRICULTURIST IS NOT LIABLE TO POSTAGE.

The Childhood Scenes.

BY BLANCHE D'ARTOISE.

The tide of memory sweeps along—
Now backward rolls, to life's young spring;
While time and death drift slowly on—
A song of childhood's days I sing.

The guileless days of childish glee,
Those winsome days of summer hours,
When hope was busy as the bee,
Life's path lay through a vale of flowers.

Afar, 'yond, o'er the fields, where ran
Through toll-tale grass a limpid stream;
By mossy stone its fountain sprang—
A diamond set in emerald sheen.

That haunted spring—O years agone,
Three sisters clustered by its wave;
Where are they now? Each one is gone,
And one is tottering toward the grave.

Yes, haunted was that toll-tale stream,
By three bright joyous, happy girls;
Anon, gray hairs usurped the gleam
Of their bright, bonnie auburn curls.

Our mother, whose high, stately mien
Subduing time could scarcely bow,
Now slumbers in yon churchyard green,
And soft turf waves o'er her brow.

Our only brother long hath died;
Deserted is our home of yore;
How often, often have I sighed—
That homestead hall is ours no more.

The sod is deepening in the glen,
Spring bursts with bright violets glow;
But ne'er the sisters three again
Will haunt the nook where wild flowers blow.

Then happy home of childhood's days!
Deserted for life's thankless call—
Ah, how my yearning spirit prays
To breathe once more in homestead hall!

How a Honeymoon Terminated.

Miss Ellis was formerly a resident of New Hampshire. She was a very fine looking young woman, and for a long time was considered one of the best looking ladies in New England. In August last Mr. Ackerman of Utica went down to Newport, to spend the summer and indulge the sea-breezes.—Among the guests then stopping at that fav-[illegible] was Miss Ellis, of New Hampshire" and her uncle Benjamin. Her uncle is a shrewd man of the world, and can see as far into the wants and peculiarities of the people as the next man. Mr. Ackerman of Utica saw Miss Ellis, and was so taken with her contour that he immediately made up his mind that if her beauty rested on a "golden basis," he would go in and win.—To ascertain how Miss Ellis stood in regard to the precious metals, Mr. Ackerman came to the conclusion that the best thing he could do was to "pump" her uncle Benjamin. To get Uncle Benjamin under the "pump" Mr. Ackerman invited him into his parlor, and they partook of iced champaign for several days in succession. During one of these sociable sit-downs, Ackerman broached the subject in the following manner:

"That young lady who sat at the table near you this morning, is a magnificent creature. Do you know her name?"

"Do you mean that young lady with black ringlets?"

"The same. Are you acquainted with her."

"Certainly. Her name is Ellis; she resides in New Hampshire."

"An old family, the Ellises, I believe,"

"Yes, sir; and they have the rocks, too."

"Possible? and is Miss Ellis worth anything in her own right?"

"I rather think she is. She owns more land than I can see over from the top of a flagstaff. In addition to this, she holds some thirty thousand dollars' worth of government securities."

"Is it possible?"

"True every word of it. I am her uncle, and ought to know."

"Uncle! I beg ten thousand pardons for my rudeness. Had I supposed you were in any way related to the young lady, our conversation would have taken a very different direction. You will overlook the impropriety, I hope?"

Uncle Benjamin promised to do so, although he knew that Mr. Ackerman was dealing in falsehood and duplicity the whole time. Mr. Ackerman and Uncle Benjamin shook hands and parted. The latter walked towards the beach to have a smoke; the former went to the barbershop and ordered Mr. Pomatum to dress his hair a la Sullivan. Mr. Ackerman put himself "on his shape" at the earliest possible moment. He got it through her uncle Benjamin. The introduction ripened into a flirtation, the flirtation into a courtship, and the courtship into a marriage. The latter came off two weeks ago last Monday. The next day they started on their honeymoon. They visited Boston, and remained there until Thursday of last week. They then started for Albany. They arrived here on Friday morning, having spent the previous night at Springfield where they laid over. On their arrival in this city, they drove to Stanwix Hall, where they engaged a suit of rooms at the rate of sixty dollars per week. On Monday of this week Mr. Ackerman informed his wife that, owing to the non-arrival of funds, he would have to trouble her for a small loan.

"How much, dearest?"

"No great sum, my duck—a couple of hundred will do at present."

"A couple of hundred! Why, my dear, that is more money than I have seen in the last five years."

"What becomes of your interest money, my love.

"What interest money, my soul?"

"Why, that interest money you derive from those government securities."

"Government securities! I don't know what you mean."

"Don't know what I mean! Why, your uncle Benjamin informed me that you owned thirty thousand dollars' worth."

"If he did, he should be written to, and made to explain. It is all a riddle to me."

Mr. Ackerman admitted that Uncle Benjamin should be written to. He dropped him a letter that very hour. On Wednesday he received Uncle Benjamin's answer. We annex it:

"DEAR NEPHEW,—In answer to yours of Monday last, I send you this. I fear you have put a construction upon my language not warranted by the facts. I said that Miss Ellis's family was one of the oldest in the state, and that they had lots of 'rocks.' This is literally so. Miss Ellis's parents live on a fifty acre farm, nine tenths of which is covered with boulders of all possible magnitude.—If by rock you imagine money, you have, and pained to say, deceived yourself. I said that Miss Ellis owned more land than I could see over from the top of a flag-staff. I admit I used this language, and the statement is true.—As I am very near-sighted, the quantity of land I can see from the top of a flag-staff is limited to half an acre; I am sorry if you understood me to mean more than this, I also mentioned that my niece held some $30,000 worth of government securities; true, every word of it.—The securities aforesaid were issued by the first Congress, and are known as the far famed continental money. It sells in Boston at the present time, at the rate of ten cents a peck. Should it bring more than this in York State, please drop a line at your earliest convenience. With love to self and niece I close with best wishes for your prosperity.

Yours, B. S. V. ELLIS.

The first thing Mr. Ackerman did when he received Uncle Benjamin's litter was to tear it open. The next thing was to tear his hair and stamp upon the floor. He asked Mrs. Ackerman what it all meant. Mrs. Ackerman replied that she did not know, but supposed it all came from that love of fun which Uncle Benjamin inherited from his grand father—[illegible] uncle Benjamin, and paid the same compliment to his grandfather. Having done this, he pronounced the whole marriage "a cussed swindle."—Mrs. Ackerman retorted and charged Mr. Ackerman with being "a mercenary adventurer." Mr. Ackerman said he would permit no woman to question his honor. Mrs. Ackerman retorted by saying that he "could not help himself." This so irritated Mr. Ackerman that he walked up and slapped Mrs. Ackerman's face. Mrs. Ackerman, not liking thissort of thing, pronounced her husband a brute, soon after which she repaired to the Police Office, and swore out a warrant against him for assault and battery. It was issued by Justice P. Room.—When the officer went to serve it, however, it was discovered that Mr. Ackerman had flown. It is supposed that he has gone either to Utica or Boston. If the latter place, Uncle Benjamin should expect an early visit from a Meertzek moustache and a duelling pistol.—Albany Police Tribune.

Taken at his Word.

A laughable illustration of practice following theory and precept occurred lately in one of the Royal Dockyards. The superintendent, who had undertaken the disciplinarian, who is admitted to be thoroughly acquainted with the most insignificant details of his noble and gallant profession from the duties of the energetic boatswain to those of the dignified Commander-in-Chief, was passing a sentinel on his way to his official residence, when he turned upon the stalwart guardian of the Royal establishment and demanded the reason why he had not challenged him. In vain the sentry declared that he knew him to be the superintendent; he was emphatically told his duty was to challenge everyone who approached him and warning with excitement, the gallant, superintendent exclaimed, "Challenge all, Challenge me, Sir." "Well, then," said the sturdy pupil, lowering his musket, and bringing it to the charge, "I do challenge you; give parole, Sir," and the worthy superintendent having, in the course of his practical instruction, allowed the parole to slip his memory, was forthwith made a prisoner, and driven into the sentry box; so situated, the worthy preceptor was soon allowed another opportunity of esteeming the effects of his own teaching. A policeman passing demanded why the sentry had imprisoned the gentleman. "You foolish fellow," said he, "why it is the superintendent;" but the only reply from the sentry was the vociferous demand, "give the parole." The policeman deeming discretion to be sufficient and authority for passing the sentry, had also forgotten to learn the parole and he, too, was ordered into the sentry box, from which he and his distinguished fellow prisoner were only rescued when the sentry was relieved from his post.—English Paper.

Lord Erskine having lived a bachelor to an advanced age, finally married his cook, for the purpose of securing her services, as she had frequently threatened to leave him. After she became Lady Erskine, she lost all knowledge of cookery, and it was a mortal affront to hint the possibility of her knowing how any sort of eatable was prepared for the table.

Miscellany.

LOSS OF LIFE ON THE G. W. R.—On Monday last, as the train running eastward from Woodstock at 11,34 was within about 3 miles of Paris, the engineer observed an object on the track which he thought to be a dog; but as it did not move he let off steam to frighten it. On nearer approach he discovered it to be a child quietly watching the approaching train. The alarm whistle sounded, the breaks let down, and every effort made to stop the engine; but it could not be done in time. The child—about three years old—was struck on the temple, leaving no external wound beyond the appearance of a severe bruise on the forehead, but the skull was entirely crushed. On removing it a few minutes afterwards, a portion of the brain dropped from its nostrils and mouth; yet life was not actually extinct for an hour afterwards. The first person on the spot to render assistance—but too much alarmed to do so—was Mrs. Shinners, whose husband was killed a short distance from the spot about three weeks since. The sufferer, whose name was Scalley, had wandered from the house unobserved, the family being engaged preparing dinner, and descended a steep bank of probably 40 feet to the track. —Woodstock Spirit.

INDIAN TREATY.—The tripartite treaty, between the Creeks and the Seminoles, residing west of the Mississippi, is considered one of the most important ever concluded with the aboriginal tribes. The Senate recently ratified it, with amendments, to which the delegation in this city have assented. It appropriates $899,000 for which a bill has passed the Senate, and awaits the action of the House. These Creeks and Seminoles surrender lands to such Seminoles in Florida as may remove West; while the treaty secures to the last, on that condition, country, and all their annuities, and permits them to enjoy their own—a Seminole, government, independently of association with any other tribes; a failure to obtain which, has been a prominent objection heretofore, to their immigration. This, it is supposed, will have a tendency to forever quiet Indian disturbances in Florida, an important consideration in view of the millions of money expended on account of Indian hostilities in that state.—Leader.

THE BITER BITTEN.—A stranger was done out of $80 yesterday, on the Canada side by the patent safe game. The owner of the operation snatched the victim's money and started to run, but the stranger, who had plack if he was green, pursued and grabbed a gold chain from the rogue's neck. A watch came with it, and the stranger found himself possessed of more than an equivalent for his out money.—Buffalo Express.

A thousand men are now at work on the Levi-than steamer, the Great Eastern, and she is expected at Portland in May next. Mr. Bottis one of the directors of the Steamship Company, completed his arrangements last week, for the building of the wharf for the accommodation at Portland, which is to be furnished at the expense of the city.—Globe.

Widow Grizzle's husband died lately of the cholera. In the midst of the most acute bodily pain, after the hand of death had touched him, and while writhing in agony, his gentle wife said to him:—' Well, Mr. Grizzle you needn't skick around so and wear the sheets out, if you are a-dyin'.'—Very consolatory.

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST.—A gentleman, eminent for his wit, being hard pressed by one of his impatient creditors for the principal and interest of a debt, long incurred, made the following facetious reply to a letter received.

"Dear Sir—In answer to your obliging favor, I must take the liberty to inform you that, at present, it is not my interest to pay the principal, neither is it my principle to pay the interest.

OFFICIAL PRUDENCE.—A regiment being on the point of leaving a country town in England, and having to pass through a wood infested by robbers, the mayor insisted on sending an escort of three constables to protect them.

A KEEN BANKER.—A few days ago, a certain banker of Paris went with others of the faithful, to the church of St. Eustache, there to indulge in a little wholesome prayer. While devoutly engaged upon his knees, he all at once discovered that somebody had just picked his pocket of his watch. Judging that the thief was not far off, he exclaimed: "It is not fair to play such a trick as that upon one of the profession!" The pickpocket, who had not left the church, heard this; and believing that the banker was really what he intimated—a brother thief went and waited for him at the door, and as he came out, slipped the watch into his hands, saying, "Monsieur, please excuse my mistake!"

DECREASE OF CRIME.—The summer assizes of 1856 are not likely to be soon forgotten by the legal profession in all its branches. With one or two exceptions, the criminal business was, so far as the circuits have been completed, all but nil, and the lists of records to be disposed of as equally scanty and profitless. In Clonmel, the capital of South Tipperary, at one time the focus of crime and litigation, the criminal calender occupied three hours, and the trial of records six more, being the lightest commission which was ever held there. The exceptional cases are those of Westmeath and Mayo. At the former there was a terrible long array of prisoners, and at the latter Mr. Justice Keogh, in opening the commission, regretted to be obliged to state that the calender of prisoners for trial at these assizes, though not large in point of numbers, was heavy in regard to the nature and character of the offences charged, and therefore very unsatisfactory. His lordship said there were five cases in which the parties were charged with the crime of wilful murder, two for manslaughter, and others for felonious assaults on females, and burglary, and robbery, in all 30 cases, of which some appeared to be of an extreme character.

DISGRACEFUL CONDUCT.—We learn from the San Francisco Bulletin that the ship "Tartar," from Calcutta, put into that port in consequence of the crew refusing to work. The captain appeared at the police office, and demanded a police force to assist him in putting a number of the crew in irons. The police were sent, and they bound the boatswain who was conveyed on shore to the station, when he made known the cause of the crew refusing to work. They had received nothing to eat since leaving Calcutta except rotten herringsand rice, specimens of which he had brought with him. The editor of the Bulletin, who saw them, declares that the herrings were perfectly decayed, and very offensive, the rice, also, was loathsome, being dirty, yellow and rotten. If any human creature was ever compelled to eat such stuff, he must have been on the point of starvation; or it must have been crammed down their throat." The captain, first and second mate, are Americans. The case was undergoing investigation when the mail left.

THE GREAT ECONOMY OF THE REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT.—In addition to the state, county, and city taxes, the people of the United States haveto foot the fellowing bill ofthe Federal Government. The expenses the Pierce Administration for the last year, are as follows:—

$75,608,400 a year!—$6,307,200 a month!—$152,920 a week!—$207,560 a day!—$8,900 an hour!—$144 a minute!—2,40 a second!

If the last item in this computation be correct, it is truly second to no one heretofore in its career of progress. Trotting horses going a mile in 2 40, and an Administration spending money at the rate of $2,40 a second, are coincidences which they point to with pride.

A GOOD REASON—A man in New York purchased several puppies of a dealer, whose entire stock was labelled "Buchanan pups." Finding that they were of a very good breed, he went back in a few days for some more, and found them all marked Fremont pups." Why, how is this?" exclaimed he, "that these are now labelled Fremont? When I was here before, they were all marked Buchanan." "Oh said the dealer, with a waggish leer, " that was before their eyes were opened, Sir." The application is easily made.—Detroit Advertiser.

A YOUNG RUNAWAY MATCH—Two respectable families in this city have recently been thrown into a great state of excitement in consequence of the sudden and mysterious disappearance of two rather juvenile members thereof, who it appears, had concluded that they were quite old enough to get married. The gallant was a young gentleman who has seen the seventeenth summer and the lady a Miss of thirteen. They started off on their matrimonial tour in the early part of the present week, and have not since been heard of though anxious enquires have been put in circulation concerning them. A month's wages was have "something to cry about," he having frequently before reproached her for the unavailing tears which she shed in consequence of his father's death.—N. O Picayune.

Theodore Hook, once walking with a friend, passed a pastry cook's shop, in a window of which was the usual inscription—"Water Ices and Ice Creams." "Dear me," said Theodore, "what an admirable description of the effects of hycrophobia!" How can that be," said his friend," what have water ices and ice creams to do with hydrophobia?"—" Oh," replied Hook, you don't read it right. I read it thus: Water I sees and I screams."

NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.—The Nautical Magazine recommends iron bulkheads for wooden steamers, and it also states that the planking of a ship is its main safeguard from foundering. Iron plates have immense advantages over wooden planks for the out side covering of ships; their edges can be made with flanges fitting snugly into one author, and which, when riveted, makes the whole hull tight as a steam boiler, and far more of a homogeneous whole than it is possible to make the hull of a timber vessel. The London Mining Journal states that John Neilson, a Glasgow engineer, issued a pamphlet in 1824, for the formation of a company to build ships of plate iron, and he pointed out their superiority to timber built ships. Before that period he and others had built small iron vessels for canals. He failed to form a company, but he laid down the keel of a vessel of the kind he had proposed, in his own yard, in 1830, and completed it in 1833. It resulted in loss to him, but it gain to the public, for it claimed the attention of skilful engineers, and led to the construction of iron steamboats very generally in Scotland, and with marked success

TERRIBLE DEATH—MAN KILLED BY A BULL—On Thursday last Mr. Riach farmer, Curlusk, Bobairn, was killed by his own bull. The deceased had, on Thursday morning, done something to provoke the animal but left hoos to attend the Keith market. He returned in the evening entered the byre in which the bull was kept with the intention of fastening him to his chain. No sooner had he entered the byre than the animal, which had apparently kept up its anger rushed upon him and gored him in the most frightful manner. The cries of the unfortunate man brought some of the farm-servants to his assistance, but although they struck the bull repeatedly with an axe and other instruments at hand, it did not leave its unfortunate victim until a pitchfork had been knocked into its eyes. Even then after the poor man had been carried into the house, the infuriated animal came bellowing to the door as if again wishing to attack him. His body was wounded and lacerated in a most frightful manner, and one of his eyes knocked out. Dr. George Keith was in immediate attendance, and did every thing which medical skill could suggest, but with no avail. The poor man lingered in great agony, till 3 o'clock on Saturday morning, at which family to lament his loss.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY AT A PARISH FESTIVAL—A pleasant story is told among the inhabitants of Christ Church, Blackfriars, about an incident of rural treat which was given the other day by the Rev. Josiah Brown to a large number of his Sunday scholars, teachers, and other parishioners. It is said that, while the young people were very happily engaged upon the verdant turf of Addington-park, in the enviable pastime of "kiss in the ring," one of them, a frank bouncing girl, of the age of twenty-two, saw that a grave and venerable gentleman was approaching them, and exclaimed, who is that old gentleman? If he comes near here I'll throw the handkerchief to him, and kiss him. "Nonsense" said her companions, "you mustn't why, that is the Archbishop." "I don't care," she persisted "I have said it, and I'll do it." The next minute the most reverend prelate, who had passed that way with a benevolent desire to see how the party were enjoying themselves, found her arms about his neck, and received a good hearty, unmistakable kiss on his respected face. He took the compliment with a very good grace, and repaid it with a paternal smile. Honi soi qui mal y pense. The primate's dignity did not suffer one jot; the merry girl will have this achievement to boast of when she shall have become a grandmother.

FALL OF PRICE IN GRAIN.—We felicitate our citizens in this neighborhood—and elsewhere—for we do not suppose we can keep the benefit to ourselves—that the "staff of life" is now come to be handled a little more easily than of late. The highest price now paid by cash dealers is, we find one dollar! This will be good news for many a sore eye, and we trust our friends the millers and the bakers will be " art in part " in spreading to the greatest possible extent the blessing of this great economy over the district. We suspect that we have not yet "touched bottom" in regard to the price of this necessary of life. At Chicago, several weeks since, it was quoted far lower than the present depression. There is now a store of it, which long waited to touch the two dollars, or two and a half, which has to see the light, and we advise the holders not to wait for another European war, still less for an American, but to shell out the treasure manfully, and bring the hidden things to light. The curse of Scripture—and that is no light matter—is upon them. "Cursed be he that withholdeth corn: but blessings shall be upon the head of him that selleth it." Come shake off the curse, take, however late, the blessing.—Barley too, we find is falling. Farmers had better get the rhino for it before it drops beyond their reach.—Planet.

Ireland.

From the Correspondent of the Times.

DUBLIN, August 5.

THE IRISH HEROES OF THE CRIMEA.

The privilege of pronouncing a formal eulogy upon the services of the Irish regiments engaged in the recent war has worthily devolved upon the Earl of Carlisle. His Excellency is to present, in the name of the Queen, a stand of colors to the 18th Royal Irish, in lieu of those honourably ragged banners which they carried into Sebastopol on the 18th of June last year. The old colors of the regiment are to be deposited with solemn triumph in St. Patrick's Cathedral, as worthy trophies for the example of succeeding generations of Irishmen. The whole ceremony, it is said, will be conducted on a scale of splendour which cannot fail to gratify the national vanity at present unnecessarily irritated by well meant but injudicious reflections upon the honours paid by the people of England to their national corps. The reception given by the citizens of Sheffield to the Royal Irish Dragoon Guards does not look as if John Bull meant to monopolize in his own person the whole glory of the war in the East.

THE NAVAL SQUADRON AT QUEENSTOWN.

This morning's account from Cork announces that at about 4 o'clockon Saturday evening the squadron which left Queenstown about a fortnight since arrived in the harbour, and came to anchor in pretty nearly the same positions they had occupied before. It appears that their cruise has been, not towards the west of Ireland, as was thought, but in the Bay of Biscay. During the whole of Saturday crouds poured down in every successive train and steamer to visit those noble specimens of naval architecture, and were received with great politeness on board the Duke of Wellington, which, from the repute of its stupendous dimensions, proved the principal object of attraction. A large number of the sailors and marines got liberty, and went ashore in every kind of marine conveyance.

THE POTATO.

The Cork Examiner—a careful and reliable authority upon the subject—supplies the following information respecting the state of the potato crop in that extensive district:—"With regard to this crop we have had information from the district of Kenmare, Bantry, Skiddereen, Millstreet, Clonakilty, and Bandon. Between Cork and the latter town we can state, from personal observation, that everything is as promising as could be wished, but that between Clonakilty and Bandon there is considerable evidence of blight to be seen. In no case, however, that we have observed has the disease gone to any greater extent than the blackening of the leaves. In the immediate neighbourhood of the town of Kenmare we learn that the crop is quite healthy, but between that and Bantry evidence of disease have appeared. Again, about Bantry there are no indications whatever of blight, while between that town and Skibbereen, and in the immediate neighbourhood of Skibbereen, considerable manifestations of disease have appeared. About Millstreet nothing, we are told, could be finer or more healthy than the appearance of the crop."

In every part of the United Kingdom the harvest reports are of a favorable character, and but little doubt is entertained that the grain crops will be at least a [illegible]

THE MURDER AT FERMOY.

Charles McCready, the soldier who was convicted last week at the Cork Assizes, of the wilful murder of Sergent McGuinny, of the 68th Light Infantry, was yesterday afternoon put forward to receive sentence. The prisoner was perfectly calm and unmoved. Baron Greene, in a touching address, pronounced the last judgment of the law. During the course of the delivery of the sentence the prisoner seemed to be the only person in the court unaffected by the solemnity of the occasion and the touching address of the learned Judge, who himself was deeply moved during its delivery. At its conclusion the prisoner, without assistance stepped lightly and firmly from the place where he stood, and was immediately conveyed to the county jail, where he will await his execution. The usual formality of wearing the black cap was dispensed with by the learned Judge on this occasion. It is understood that the execution is to take place on Monday, the 22nd of September next.

Passage of the Army Bill.

The Army Bill shorn of the proviso has passed! In this announcement we record the success of the most dangerous combination of power against the representatives of the people yet exhibited in the operation of our government. The people's representatives have been confronted with the solid united slave interest of the South, and the swollen power of the Executive, and have been overcome. The Senate has been against them, the President has been against them, the army has been used against their wishes to oppress our brethren in Kansas, and there alone remained to them the power to stop supplies.—but now that power also has fallen before the great conspiracy against freedom. Now we shall behold riot and bloodshed in Kansas—that army which draws two thirds of its support from our industry will be employed to dragoon into submission to the diabolical laws of the Border Legislature, the free State men of Kansas. The glorious days of Border Ruffianism are come. The army of the whole Union waits, or hastens, as orders come, to obey its commands. Stringfellow and Atchison rule us. Let us look a moment at the Proviso which Congress has refused to pass. In the new Bill brought in by Mr. CAMPBELL last Saturday, it was simply this:

Provided, "That no part of the military "force of the United States, for the sup"port of which appropriations are made "by this act, shall be employed in aid of "the enforcement of any enactment hereto"fore passed in the body claiming to be the "Territorial Legislature of Kansas." Was this unreasonable or unjust or revolutionary? Nothing of the kind. A portion of these enactments the Senate itself had denounced as infamous and disgraceful to the age, and yet with these enactments unrepealed—with the brand of its own condemnation upon them—it places the army at the disposal of that high criminal FRANKLIN PIERCE, to enforce them. Because the laws are infamous in character, and fraudulent in origin, the people ask that they shall not be enforced. but the Senate confessing that our objections are valid, disregards our wishes, allies itself to the cruel tyranny of the slave power, and orders the army to aid in the subjugation of the people of Kansas.

There can be nothing plainer than the exact position of this question. The President and Senate either wanted to use the army to enforce the laws of the bogus Legislature, or they have purposely outraged and insulted the North by urging a barren victory in a matter upon which the North was so sensitive and excited. We discard the latter supposition as improbable, and this brings us directly to the consideration of the former. They intend to use the army to enforce the laws of the Kansas Legislature.

Then let the people remember, first, that it was elected by invading Missourians, who had no right to vote in the Territory.

Second' that the then Governor of Kansas pronounced it an illegal body, and declared it dissolved.

And that the above facts are abundantly established by the Congressional Investigating Committee, who went to Kansas and examined thoroughly into all the circumstances of the election, of this Legislature.

But it met and passed laws, among those laws are the following, which Congress have just empowered the President to use the army in enforcing.

Seven offenses against the slave interest are punishable with death.

Raising insurrection, punishable with death.

Aiding insurrection, death.

Inducing slaves to rebel, death.

Inducing slaves to freedom, death, or not less than ten years imprisonment at hard labor.

Assisting slaves to freedom, death, or not less than ten years imprisonment.

Taking slaves from any State into Territory, death or not less than ten years imprisonment.

Harboring escaped slaves, not less than five years imprisonment.

Printing incendiary documents, five years imprisonment.

Denying right to hold slaves, Two Years imprisonment.

No person opposed to holding slaves to sit as a Juror.

In addition to the above are the following which we select from the laws pertaining to the qualifications of voters &c.:

No person to vote or Hold Office who has violated the "Fugitive Slave Law," or who refuses to swear to support the Kansas-Nebraska law.

No person eligible to office who refuses to take oath to support Fugitive Slave law and Kansas-Nebraska act.

Every person offering vote to be presumed entitled to vote.

No evidence to be received contradicting challenged voter's claim to vote—if sworn, judges to receive vote or not.

The Accident to the Arabia.

To the Editor of the New York Herald.

SIR,—You will oblige me by publishing the following extract from a letter which I have just received from Halifax, respecting the Arabia:—

"She arrived here about eleven o'clock on Friday morning, having been detained water out of the fore peak, then removed the coal, and made a good and secure passage for the water under the coal. We also stuffed oakum in the leak from the inside, and shored the fore peak off as well as we could, and sent a diver down, who put oakum and tallow in the leak from the outside.

"Before she left we ascertained that one of her donkey engine pumps of 2½ inches, could keep pace with the leak, whereas she has four pumps connected with the engine, of 10 inches each, four deck hand pumps, of 7 inches, and two pumps which were put in the hold, of 2½ inches each, making in all six steam pumps and six hand pumps I got the Admiral to hold a survey on her; he sent the master of the flag ship and the foreman of the shipwrights of the Dockyard; before she sailed I read to the passengers a copy of their report to the Admiral.

"Its purport was, that "the ship was making about eighteen tons of water an hour, and this has been cleared by one donkey engine. There are very ample appliances to clear a much larger leak, if necessary, as well as six pumps, which can be worked by hand. From the mode adopted in-board to keep out the water, it will serve to strengthen the Lows; and from the mode adopted out-board, from allowing oakum to suck into the leak, it is probable that it will diminish; and we further think, from what we have seen. and the reports of the divers, that the ship can proceed to England in safety."

"After reading this to the passengers, I told them I would give them an hour to make up their minds; those who did not wish to go could have their money returned in full, or a passage in the Canada. They expressed themselves perfectly satisfied, and I believe about twenty-five landed here; I also put two more boats on board. I feel quite sure in my own mind she will go home all right."

I may add, from myself, that the pumping capacity of the Arabia is over one thousand tons per hour, by injecting from the ship instead of from the sea.

Your obedient servant,

E. CUNARD.

Narrow Escape of Britannia.

If we are to believe a circumstancial letter from Munich, Britannia's maritime power has had a very narrow escape from the total destruction which awaited it had a third naval campaign been opened this year in the Bay of Finland. From this letter we learn that a certain Bavarian corporal, named Bauer, who, in 1849, made some unsuccessful experiments with a diving vessel in Kiel harbour, has since then brought his labors to a successful result. The letter which he wrote home announcing this fact was indited 17 feet below the surface of the sea, off Cronstadt, June 24, and in the company of the writer, in his vessel, were at the time a Russian naval officer, eight sailors, and a smith. This experiment had been preceded by eight others for the purpose of testing the capacity of the vessels, and it was to be succeeded in a few days by a grand one in the presence of the Grand Duke Constantine and a committee named for the purpose. On the occasion there alluded to the crew of 11 persons remained eight hours without interruption, under water; and in addition to letter writing feat and the drinking of divers bottle of Rhine wine to the healths of various European potentates, they performed during that time all sorts of evolutions with the vessels, moving backwards and forward, rising and sinking, whether vertically or at an angle, whether rapidly or slowly, &c. In short, the only circumstances connected with the description that at all suggests an opening for scepticism is, that the letter was written by the inventor himself; when we have another description, written by an impartial person, we shall know better what to think about the matter.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ELECTIONS.—We believe that E. Malloch, Esq., is a candidate for Rideau Division. E. Griffin, Esq., of this city, is spoken of as a candidate for the same Division, but we hardly think it is Mr Griffin's intention to contest the election. We have reason to believe that the Hon. Mr. Vankoughnet will not be a candidate for this Division at the coming election, nor will George Byron Fellowes, Esq., either. We understand that it is the intention of a portion of the electors to nominate Alex. Moffat, Esq., of Pembroke; and we are satisfied Mr. M. would poll a strong vote in this Division. We believe we can with confidence state that J. B. Lewis, Esq., Mayor of this city, has concluded not to stand for this Division. Reasons of a private business character have caused this change of intention. Were Mr. Lewis a candidate, we are of the opinion it would be hard to beat him.

We see it is stated that Col. Prince. and and the Hon. H. J. Boulton are candidates for the Western Division. They are able men and experienced politicians, and we presume the contest will be a hard one.—Ottawa Citizen.

☞ Advertisments must be sent in for insertion before Noon on Wednesday in each week.

The Maple Leaf,

SANDWICH, SEPTEMBER 4, 1856.

Our readers may recollect in our last issue, that we intimated our views regarding the candidates then in the field for representation of the Western Division. Since that issue, however, it would appear that the contest will not be only between Colonel Prince and Mr. Dougall, for although we are not aware of any requisition to the present member for Essex, it appears from certain notices of meetings in Kent, to be held by Mr. Rankin, that that gentleman proposes to offer himself. We must offer, en passant our congratulations to the well-informed Planet, upon the correctness of its intelligence, and assure him that now we entirely disbelieve the hitherto generally credited rumour that he had been hired by Col. Prince's friends to abuse him. But "revenous à nos montons." We support Col. Prince, and why? Because we see in [illegible] lated to represent us in the body to which the United voice of his former constituents has called him. When the Col. immediately after the dissolution of the last Parliament refused to come forward for re-election to the Legislative Assembly, we were by no means among those of his constituents who urged him to recal his determination though fully alive to the important services which he had rendered to the County during his representation, we could not but consider that the length of those services, and the sacrifice of personal and private interests entailed by them, entitled him to demand from us repose from labors, which his greatest enemies never denied, had been devoted to the cause of his constituents alone. Why then, (it may fairly be asked of us,) do you wish him to renew them? We answer, because we desire to see the right men in their right places; because the legislative council retaining its function unaltered, though to be composed in part of men chosen by the people, to exercise those functions should rank among its members persons of qualities very different in many respects from what we are accustomed to seek in those we select to represent us in the Assembly: The duty of a similar body was well defined thus: "To curb the license of an assembly purely popular." We have hinted before what we say now, that no political partisan should be chosen for this office; the reason is plain: a partisan, or one who advocates a particular set of measures, merely because they are the measures of a set of men whom he knows as his party, though of eminent use as experience has shown in the lower branch of the legislature, would introduce into the higher an element fatal to the very purpose of its creation, the check upon popular fervor Col. Prince has been known throughout his whole political career as a man of measures, one who (as he tells us in his address) cares little for men, and the more suitable therefore for a place in the deliberations of a body whose sole duty is the consideration of measures already prepared for and laid before them in a tangible shape. But he has more than all this to recommend him; his learning is extensive, his talents undeniable, his experience of legislation second to none of our present legislators, and the best proof that can be adduced of his honesty, is the simple fact that after eighteen years of prominent Parliamentary life with a large amount of professional eminence at the bar, he remains (to use his own words) "plain John Prince" without title, office or employment, residing in the little town in which he first settled on his arrival in this Coutry, and satisfied to spend here amongst his friends the remainder of his days. These are reasons which, in our opinion, should induce the people of these counties (for he is as well know in Kent as in Essex,) for their own interests to select Col. Prince as their representative, but we cannot close without, another word as to the electors private feeling. We speak mainly to the men of Essex. We owe it to the Col. to elect him. He has served us faithfully in troublous times in the hand-to-hand strife of 1837 and 8, in the more important strife of mind against mind during stormy years in the Parliament of this Country in his private walks of life where no service in his power was ever refused to those who asked it. We hope and think that his old friends will feel as we do, that as none of his faults are unnoticed and undwelt on by his enemies, so we may fairly weigh them with his virtues, and see which assemblage of qualities will kick the beam.

TO THE

INDEPENDENT ELECTORS

OF THE

Counties of Essex and Kent.

GENTLEMEN,

THE time has now arrived when it becomes me to address you briefly upon the great change made in the Constitution of this Country by our Sovereign's gracious permission for us to Elect our Legislative Councillors, whereby she has been pleased to wave Her Royal Prerogative to create them as heretofore. For that boon we should be grateful; and I doubt not that, if properly treated and carried out, it will add to the increased prosperity of Canada as exemplified in those Elective Institutions which have so much contributed to our internal advancement and prosperity. It, however, behoves us to consider well and to reflect calmly upon what the qualifications of a Legislative Councillor ought to be, and what the duties of that Council are. It is or ought to be an honourable Body, in every sense of the word. It should consist of men not famed for being Party men, of violent political feelings, or prone to aid in factious opposition to the Government of the day; but men who are well known to the community as men of character and experience in the world, men who can be relied on as much for their honour and independence of demeanour in the Senate as for their ability, and of men too who, by their experience in Legislation, can bring their learning to bear upon those Enactments which come up to them from the popular branch of the Legislature for their deep and solemn consideration. To such men you may safely entrust your interests, and, in my opinion, at least, it would be dangerous to confide in any others. Moreover, the duties of the Council are most important. They are a check upon the vague, hasty, imperfect, and exuberant legislation which sometimes emanates from the Lower House; and their deliberations should be conducted with that dignity and cool reflection which in a popular assembly it is next to impossible to maintain. I do not address you as a stranger or as a new man soliciting your suffrages for the distinguished honour to which, by your favour, I aspire. But I address you as an old friend and neighbour, who has lived amongst you continuously for nearly twenty-four years, through good report and evil report, and who was your chosen representative in Parliament for more than eighteen years! And you have, by your requisitions, told me that I and I alone am your choice to represent you in the new Council that is to be. You know my abilities, [illegible] my experience in Parliament, and you know my character; and upon that knowledge you have been pleased to base your proposition that I become your Representative in that Council. I do not profess to be a Politician—a bigotted Partizan with any set of men—but I do profess to have and ever will maintain the principles of an honest and independent public character, wherever I am placed; and I will yield to no man in liberality of sentiment or action; and I point to my conduct for the last ten or fifteen years as a Member of the Legislature as evidence of the truth of these assertions. In fine, I shall ever consider it my duty to contend for the freedom and rights of all the inhabitants of this noble country, whatsoever may be their nation, creed, or colour. These are my Principles. To my antecedents you are no strangers; and it is most gratifying to receive your assurance that he who has been your friend and neighbour for so long a time, and your representative in Parliament for a longer period than any other man in Canada (save one) ever represented the same constituency, still enjoys your favour and your confidence, and that, "with all his imperfections on his head," you will confer upon him the greatest honour you can bestow—a seat in the first Elective Legislative Council of this Province.

That I shall, through your favour, be triumphantly placed in that high and honourable position I do not for a moment doubt. My visits through the Counties have entirely satisfied my friends as well as myself on that important point; and I pledge myself to serve you honestly, faithfully, independently, and diligently, and according to the best of my abilities and powers. And you shall find in me a strenuous advocate for an enlarged representation based on population at the proper time—for the promotion of Education upon the most extensive and liberal plan—and for the support and progress of all measures (I care little for men), which I may conceive will tend to the happiness and good government of Canada and the prosperity of the noble and enterprising races who inhabit it.

I remain, Gentlemen, as ever,
Your faithful Friend,
JOHN PRINCE.

Grand Trunk Railway.

The Leader argues prosperity to the Grand Trunk Railway, from the fact that Portland and Quebec promise to become the two great connecting points with Europe. The Collins steamers to New York have, owing to the line, fallen into disrepute; and the Cunard Vessels are not managed to the satisfaction of travellers. The result of this is that the Canadian line of steamers from Quebec have this year been well supported, and as long as they keep up quick and safe passages it is most probable their prosperity will continue to increase. The Great Eastern, (the monster ship now building in England) will make her first passage to Portland, and should she be so far successful as to shorten the passage between the two continents, by a day or two, there is every probability that the travelling public will withdraw their support from the New York lines, and bestow it upon this monster vessel; and this being the case she will no doubt be kept on this route, and will feed the Grand Trunk Railway at Portland. We hope these anticipations may be realised.—Berlin Chronicle.

TO THE ELECTORS

OF

The Western Division.

GENTLEMEN:

THE Legislative Council of Canada was originally intended to be an imitation of the British House of Peers, but from various reasons, unnecessary here to mention, the mere nomination of its members by the Crown has failed to secure for it the respect and weight which a branch of the Legislature ought to possess.

It has therefore been deemed expedient to render it elective, so as to secure for it a portion of the popular favor, hitherto accorded to the Legislative Assembly.

This change, when fully carried out, will invest the Council with an importance in some degree similar to that which attaches to the Senate of the neighboring Union, a seat in which is a position of greater importance than the Governorship of a State.

The Elective Council of Canada will however have this superiority over that of the Senate of the United States, that its members, instead of being appointed by local Legislative bodies, often by corrupt combinations and intrigues, will be elected directly to them; they will also represent nearly equal constituencies, instead of the gross inequality in this respect, which is found in the American Senate. Senators from N. York represent a population ten times as great as the same number of Senators from Delaware or California.

When it is considered that a Councillor will represent twice the number of Constituents of a Member of the Assembly, and for twice the length of time, it must be obvious that the selection of a proper person to fill so high an office is of the utmost importance to your interests, and to those of the country at large.

The weak point of all representative institutions is the disposition of the Executive to gain majorities by bribing the representatives of the people, and the facility with which the latter have too often sold themselves for considerations of private advantage

It is by appeals to private interests, by places and jobs, that party hacks are manufactured, and I can conceive no greater political calamity for a Country than to have a majority of its representatives composed of such venal and selfish politicians. It is under this evil that Canada has long groaned, and is now groaning, and against which every possible precaution should be taken by Constituencies, when called upon to exercise their invaluable privilege of electing representatives to Parliament.

To secure an object so desirable every thing depends on the personal character of the men chosen, and the two leading elements to be sought for in a Candidate are integrity and ability; without the first an able man may exert his abilities against you, and for his own selfish ends, and without the latter, an honest man may become the mere tool of a Ministry, hoodwinked by their plausible sophistries.

Having lived amongst you for twenty-seven years, you can judge from my antecedents, better than I can, whether or not I possess these essential requisites for your representatives; at all events, any more profession without the guarantee of previous character, should go for nothing.

My political convictions are entirely in favor of liberal measures, and should I be elected, I will give my most strenuous aid in carrying out the measures of so much importance to the prosperity of the country, such as

Representation by Population, so as to give Upper Canada its proper position in the Legislature.

Common School Education free from Sectarian influence, and the repeal of such acts [illegible] Schools now existing.

Opposition to all grants of public monies for Sectarian purposes, and also to all acts giving religious corporations power to hold real estate for the purpose of revenue, irrespective of creed or denomination, and the Retaining the seat of Government in Upper Canada.

If my views on these subjects meet with your approbation, and I should be honored with your confidence and support, I will endeavor, if elected, to serve you faithfully, to the best of my ability, with honesty of purpose, and a single eye to the good of this great Province, and to the special interests of the Division with which I am connected.

I remain, Gentlemen,
Your most obedient
and Faithful Servant,
JAS. DOUGALL.

Windsor, Aug. 27, 1856.

Herepath's Journal has some conjectures on the probable course of the Shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway in regard to the question of raising two millions preferential bonds, as authorised by the Act of last Session. The Journal contends that all that is wanted is £80,000 to finish the Victoria Bridge; and adds, that it might be "good policy for the Shareholders to meet "the Government halfway, by completing "the bridge and sanctioning the raising of "£800,000 perferential bonds in lieu of "the three millions withdrew." The Journal truly remarks upon this great national undertaking, that it would be difficult to point out any similar undertaking which has been so rapidly constructed, and at so small a comparative cost, considering the solidity of the bridges and the permanent way."

Mr. ISAAC BUCHANAN has been elected Director of the Great Western Railway in the place of MR. SMITH, M. P., who resigned because he could not persuade the English Directors to carry out Mr. BUCHANAN'S schemes. It is not to be supposed that Mr. BUCHANAN will meet any better success than the gentleman who has offered himself up a martyr for Mr. BUCHANAN'S sake.—Leader.

Col. Prince.

The gallant Colonel is a candidate once more for Legislative honors—to represent in the Legislative Council the Counties of Kent and Essex, and with great probability of success. As in all likelihood Colonel Prince will prove a troublesome thorn in the side of Ministers, the Leader, which like a dog going back to its vomit, has again become the organ of Government, makes a furious onslaught upon him, and uses language which ought to cover the conductors of that unscrupulous journal with shame, if shame they are capable of experiencing. Depend upon it they will be quiet enough when the Gallant Colonel comes to Toronto. —British Whig.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT. We regret to learn that Mr. Wm. F. Smith, of Warwick, met with a serious accident, while feeding a Thrashing Mill, on Saturday last. By some means his left arm got entangled in the machinery, crushing it so fearfully as to render amputation unavoidable. Fortunately two Medical men, (Dr. Mothersell of Bosanquet, and a Dr. Williams,) were within a short distance, at the time when the accident occurred, and the arm was amputated a little below the elbow.

Accidents of this kind are of frequent occurrence, and imply the use of the utmost caution by those who are engaged about these machines; for it becomes a serious matter thus to be maimed for life, even though the life itself should not be taken.

While on this subject, it reminds us of having ommitted to notice the death of a young man named Smith, a son of Mr. Daniel Smith of this Township, about two weeks ago, by an accident which happened him. The young man was driving a team with a load of piles to the Railway, when a short distance from Town was thrown off the load upon which he sat, and pitched before the front wheels of the waggon. These passed over his body, but the team stopped before the hind wheels reached him. He was seen by some people a short distance off, but when reached had scarcely sufficient strength or conciousness left, as to tell his name. Medical aid was immediately procured, but he died in the course of the afternoon.—Lambton Observer.

APPOINTMENTS.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Toronto, 30th August 1856.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL has been pleased to make the following appointments, viz:

Robert Pearson, of Toronto, Esq., to be Clerk of the Process, under the Act 19th Vict. ch. 43.

Horatio Nelson, of Sandwich, Esquire, to be Clerk of the County Court for the County of Essex in the room of John McEwan, Esquire, resigned.

William Herbert Campbell, of Brockville, Esquire to be Clerk of the County Court for the United Counties of Leeds and Grenville, in the room of T. D. Campbell Esq., resigned.

Francis Murphy, of Port hope, Gentleman to be Revenue Inspector for the County of Durham.

John Little, of the City of Ottawa.

Joseph G. Lesperance, of Ste. Anne des Monts and Edward Mann, of Carleton, District of Gaspe, Gentlemen, to be Landing Waiters and Searchers in Her Majesty's Customs.

Philip Low, of Picton, Esquire, Barrister at Law;

Francis Gore Stanton, of Simcoe, Esq., Barrister at Law;

James Agnew, of Kingston, Esq., Attorney at Law, to be Notaries Public in Upper Canada.

EXTRAORDINARY ADVENTURE OF TWO CHILDREN.—On Thursday evening two juveniles, footsore and weary, entered the yard of the Greyhound Hotel, Bath, and inquired if they could be accommodated with lodgings for the night. Their respectable dress and superior manners, as well as the unusual nature of their application, excited the surprise and curiosity of Mr. Clarke, the landlord, who took his would be guests into the hotel, and proceeded to interrogate them. Though exceedingly polite in their replies, they declined affording any information except that they were going to sea, and Mr. Clarke's suspicions were further excited by the light shoes which one of them wore and the shortness of the trousers; and he ultimately put himself in communication with the police. The children were then separated, and one of them conveyed to the central station and lodged for the night, the other remaining at the Greyhound. Their secret was preserved until Friday morning. when a livery servant rode into the Greyhound yard, and soon afterwards made known that he was in pursuit of a pair of fugitives. The whole story was then developed. The children were brother and sister, the latter 11, and the former scarcely 13, the offspring of parents in good society; and on Thursday they had decamped from their home at Road, near Frome. The boy had determined to go to sea, and entrusted his secret to his sister, whose ardent affection determined her to accompany him at all hazards. She accordingly dressed herself in some of his clothes, allowed him to cut her hair, which was then parted at the side, and thus attired and disguised, they set off to Bristol as the nearest seaport. As soon as they were missed, every effort was, of course, made to discover them, and the servant who so fortunately met with them, had ridden down three horses in the pursuit.—They were on Friday conveyed back to their parents.—Bristol Mer.

In our English files we find the following allusion to extensive forgeries on the Bank of France: "The alarming discovery has just been made that an immense number of forged notes of the Bank of France, amounting, it is supposed, to the value of many millions of francs, are in circulation.—The forgeries are so ingeniously executed that several of the most experienced clerks in the Bank were unable to detect them. It was only after a bundle of suspected notes had been minutely scrutinised by several persons that the minute difference between the false and the genuine paper was detected. It was then found that out of a parcel of eighty-eight notes eighty-seven were forged. The affair is so serious that orders have been given at the Government offices not to receive notes in payment at all unless they are first marked as good by the Bank. Instances have been mentioned to me to day of notes offered in payment of stamp duties being refused. As far as is at yet known, all the forged notes are of the denomination of one hundred francs.

TRADE OF MONTREAL.—We find in the Montreal Herald a statement of the imports at that port for the month ending July 4, 1856, compared with the corresponding period of the previous year. A very marked increase is shown. In June, 1856, the total value of goods imported was £546,963 against £409,255 in the same month 1855. While there was a falling off in the imports of free goods, from £220,231 to £138,365, the amount of the dutiable goods imported had more than doubled, being £189,024 in June, 1855, and £408,598 in June, 1856. The value of the goods entered for consumption during the two periods, was respectively £388,432 and 587,036. The amount of duty collected in June, 1855, was only £27, 880; in June, this year, it was £95805. Of the articles paying a mixed specific and ad valorem duty, including tea, coffee, spirits, tobacco, sugar, &c., the amounts entered for consumption this year in every case exceeded those of last year, except in the single article of refined sugar. The imports of goods paying 12½ per cent, and which are in future to pay 15, had increased from £88,596 to £217,196. Much of the increase is of course due to the desire to import goods and to take them out of bond, before the new tariff should come into operation.

MAID OF THE MIST.—This fair steamer met with an accident on Wednesday afternoon, causing her to leak badly. Messrs Bidwell & Banto were telegraphed to furnish shipcarpenters, who left the following morning for the Falls to repair damages.—Her trips therefore have been suspended. It is supposed that she struck a rock in one of her trips in the mist on Wednesday, which was not known at the time. The Maid runs in too deep waters to risk a hole perforated in her sides or bottom, while loaded with passengers, for we opine they would prefer to remain on the boiling surface of the water to going down some 500 feet in search of a rock bottom.—Buffalo Com. Ad.

A prize fight between a bear and a buffalo came off in Chicago, on Faiday last. The Buffalo got the worst of it. After receiving the first stroke, he turned tail, burst through the enclosure, and ran about two miles, before he was caught. On being brought back, the bear choked him to death, and immediately commenced eating him! The fight took place in presence of 2,000 spectators. We were not aware before that there was so much brutality in Chicago. Globe.

SLEEP.—There is no fact more clearly established in the physiology of man than this, that the brain expands its energies and itself during the hours of wakefulness, and that these are recumperated during sleep; if the recuperation does not equal the expenditure, the brain withers—this is insanity. Thus it is that, in early English history, persons who where condemned to death by being prevented from sleeping. always died raving maniacs: thus it is also that those who are starved to death become insane; the brain is not nourished, and they cannot sleep. The practical inferences, are three:—1st. Those who think most, who do most brain work, require most sleep. 2d, That time "saved" from necessary sleep is infinitely destructive to mind, body and estate. 3rd, Give yourself, your children, your servants, give all that are under you the fullest amount of sleep they will take by compelling them to go to bed at some regular, early hour, and to rise in the morning the moment they awake of themselves, and within a fortnight nature, with almost the regularity of the rising sun, will unloose the bonds of sleep the moment enough repose has been secured for the want of the system, This is the only safe and sufficient rule; and as to the question how much sleep any one requires, each must be a rule for himself; great Nature will never fail to write it out to the observer, under the regulations just given.—Journal of Health.

A glass has been discovered at Pompeii, about the size of a crown piece. with a convexity, which leads one to suppose it to be a magnifying lens. Now, it has been said that the ancients were not aware of this power, and the invention is given to Galileo, by some, to a Dutchman, in 1621, by others while a compound microscope is attributed to one Fontana, in the seventeeth century. But without a magnifying glass, how did the Greeks and Romans work those fine gems which the human eye is unable to read without the assistance of a glass?—There is one in the Naples royal collection, for example, the legend of which it is impossible to make out unless by applying a magnifying power. The glass in question was found with a stone ready cut and polished for engraving thereon, which stone is now also to be seen in the Museum of Naples.

Special Notices.

Sir Astley Cooper's Pills

Have acquired much of their celebrity from the fact that they soothe the system, destroy latent diseases, impart cheerfulness, and that conscious feeling of restored health and power, which inevitably leads to the actual possession of health and strength. Sir Astley Cooper's Pills immediately eradicate any vicious, acrid, or dangerous matters which may have accumulated in the system, and the moment the tone of the stomach is restored, the patient finds new life and vigor, the appetite comes back again, and with a little perseverance, even the oldest man discovers that he has a chance of living a little longer.

Sir Astley Cooper's Pills will prove highly efficacious in bilious complaints, scorbutic disorders, liver complaints, affections of the nervous system, lowness of spirits, palpitation of the heart, rheumatic pains in the head, limbs, and other parts of the body; oppression of the chest. indigestion, loss of appetite, redundancy of bile, dizziness of the eyes, violent pains in the temple and forehead, impaired memory, sick headache, tremulous action of the whole frame, restlessness and bad dreams, stuporific dozing, flatulency, costiseness.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—Observe that on the top of each box of the Genuine Pills there is a correct likeness of Sir Astley Cooper, from the celebrated painting by Lawrence; also the fac-simile of the signature of the Proprietors, McPhail & Co., London and New York, on each box, and on the directions Without these marks they are spurious and an imposition.

Sold at 25 and 50 cents per box, and in Family boxes at $1 each. There is a great saving by purchasing the larger sizes.

DETROIT MARKET.

Flour.—$4 25
Wheat.—No sales.
Corn.—Held at 53, without sales
Oats.—Held at 30c for old, 30c for new.

From the N. Y. Corn Exchange Reporter.

In answer to numerous letters sent to the interior to learn the result of the threshing per acre, we have information which really takes us by surprise, and we fear our readers will not believe it. In new York state the yield is not over 8 bushels an acre, which is but half a crop. In Ohio the yield is 8 to 9 bushels to the acre, resulting in half a crop. In Michigan the yield is 8 to 9 bush. to the acre, much below an average there, as well as in this state and Ohio, and farmers are much disappointed. There is no disappointment in regard to the quality. In Indiana, Kentucky and Missouri the yield is not far from eighteen bushels to the acre, and the same is true of Wisconsin and Iowa, but in Illinois it is not over fifteen bushels, or about 25 per cent less than we confidently expected in June and July. In the Southern States the yield is ten to twelve per cent below an average."

ESSEX BUILDING SOCIETY.

AUCTION SALE OF LANDS.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the following lands will be exposed for sale by public auction on Saturday, the 30th day of August next

at the office of the Essex Building Society in the town of Sandwich, the said lands being so sold by virtue of certain powers of sale in certain Mortgages thereof, to the said Society, to secure certain sums advanced thereon, by the said Society to the owners of the said lands, the particulars of which are as follows.

Lots numbered 19, 20, 25, 26, and 27, on the Russell Street: Lots Nos. 18, 27, & 28, on the East side of Russell Street aforesaid, and Lots Nos. 26 & 28 on the West side of Bedford Street, all in the Town of Sandwich in the County of Essex, and the West and Eastern half parts of Lot Number 17, on the Fourth Concession in the Township of Maidstone, in the County of Essex, containing Two Hundred Acres more or less.

Lots Numbered 7 & 8 on a plan of a field situate in the Town of Sandwich aforesaid, conveyed by one John Prince and one Louis Joseph Fleuit, to one Joseph Augus Verais, by deed dated 11 March 1851.

POSTPONEMENT.

The Sale on account of the Essex Building Society is postponed till Saturday, 13th September next, at 12 o'clock noon.

Office of the Essex Building Soc'y.
Sandwich, 1st Sept. 1856.

Crown Lands Department.

Toronto, 24th July 1856.

THE undermentioned lots which form a part of the Northern and Southern portions of the Island of St. Joseph, Lake Huron, will be offered at Public Auction, at the office of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, in the City of Toronto, on Monday, the 15th tenth September next, at the hour of noon Upset price two shillings and six pence per acre; one fifth to be paid down at the time of Sale, the remainder by four yearly instalments with interests on each as it becomes due, or the Patents may issue so soon as the purchase money shall be paid up in full.

The map of the Island may be inspected during business hours, up to the day of Sale.

A considerable portion of the Island of St. Joseph is of a good quality, well timbered, and the soil adapted for Agricultural purposes, and the waters around it abound with excellent fisheries.

The Mining regions will afford a favorable market for the surplus Agricultural produce raised upon the Island, which lies in the course of, and possesses stopping places for the American and Canadian Steamers, proceeding to the Sault St. Marie.

The Grist Mill is situated in the Township of Sandwich, and a portion of the Town Lots and an excellent House and Lot are situate in the Town of Amherstburg; the remaining Town and Villa Lots in the Town of Sandwich, the County Town of Essex and on the beautiful river Detroit. The Wild Lands are situate in different parts of the County of Essex, and are very valuable.

The Town Lots are large with fine broad streets, and close to the business part of the Town.

The Great Southern Railway Terminus will be within a very short distance of these Lots.

The Villa Lots have a most beautiful situation, being high and well adapted for gentlemen's residences, having a fine broad avenue laid out, on which they front; and are not surpassed in respect to beauty and position by any in the Province.

There are a greater number of prizes in proportion to the number of tickets to be sold than in any similar scheme yet offered to the public. The drawing will take place under the superintendence of a committee of gentlemen, to be appointed on the day of drawing by the holders of Tickets.

☞ Parties remitting to the subscriber one hundred dollars will receive a package of twenty-eight tickets in return.

MAIL CONTRACT.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the Post-master General and Marked "Tender for Mail Service" will be received at Toronto until 12 o'clock noon, on Saturday the 13th September, 1856, for the Conveyance of Her Majesty's Mails six times per week each way between Amherstburg and Windsor on and from the 6th October next.

The contract to be made in a Buggy, Waggon or Sleigh.

The computed distance between Amherstburg and Windsor is about 18 miles.

The rate of Travel to be not less than five miles per hour, including stoppages for all purposes.

The Days and Hours of Arrival and Departure to be as follows, subject to a right of the Post-master General to alter the same, should he consider it advisable so to do,

To leave Windsor every morning except Monday, and to leave Amherstburg every afternoon except Sundays, at such hours as may be required:

The Contract if satisfactorily executed will continue in force for a term not exceeding four years: The Post-master General reserving the right to terminate the agreement at any time previous to the expiration of the first years, should the service at any time require it upon giving the Contractor three months previous notice of his intention.

Each Tender to state the price asked in words at length, for the service required by the written guarantee of two responsible parties undertaking that in the event of the Tender being accepted the Contract shall be duly executed, by the party tendering for the price demanded:—undertaking also to become bound with the Contractor in the sum of two hundred and fifty pounds for the due performance of the service.

Forms of Tender may be had on application to the Post-masters of Amherstburg, Chatham and Sandwich, and no Tender will be entertained unless on a printed Form.

MARY HALL.

Sandwich, 13th May, 1856.

CATHARTIC PILLS

OPERATE by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, and, by restoring their irregular action to health, correct, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first causes of disease. An extensive trial of their virtues, by Professors, Physicians, and Patients, has shown cures of dangerous diseases almost beyond belief, were they not substantiated by persons of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Their certificates are published in my AMERICAN Almanac, which the Agents below named are pleased to furnish free to all inquiring.

Ahnexed we give DIRECTIONS for their use in the complaints which they have been found to cure.

FOR COSTIVENESS.—Take one or two Pills, or such quantity as to gently move the bowels. Costiveness is frequently the original cause of PILES, and the cure of one complaint is the cure of both. No person can feel well while under a costive habit of body. Hence it should be, as it can be, promptly relieved.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, which is sometimes the cause of Costiveness, and always uncomfortable, take mild doses—from one to four—to stimulate the stomach and liver into healthy action. They will do it, and the heartburn, bodyburn, and soulburn of dyspepsia will rapidly disappear. When it has gone, don't forget what cured you.

For a HEADACHE, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take from four to eight Pills at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until activity and strength is restored to the system.

FOR NARVOUSNESS, SICK HEADACHE, NAUSEA, Pain in the Stomach, Back, or Side, take from four to eight pills going to bed. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more in the next day until they do. These complaints will be swept out from the system. Don't wear these and their kindred disorders because your stomach is foul.

FOR SCROFULA, ERYSIPELAS, and all Diseases of the Skin, take the Pills freely and frequently, to keep the bowels open. The eruptions will generally soon begin to diminish and disappear. Many dreadful ulcers and sores have been healed up by the purging and purifying effect of these Pills, and some disgusting diseases which seemed to saturate the whole system have completely yielded to their influence, leaving the sufferer in perfect health. Patients! your duty to society forbids that you should parade yourself around the world covered with pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores, and all or any of the unclean diseases of the skin, because your system needs cleansing.

TO PURIFY THE BLOOD, they are the best medicine ever discovered. They should be taken freely and frequently, and the impurities which sow the seeds of innumerable diseases will be swept out of the system like chaff before the wind. By this property they do as much good in preventing sickness as by the remarkable cures which they are making every where.

LIVER COMPLAINT, JAUNDICE, and all Bilious Affections arise from some derangement—either torpidity, congestion, or obstructions of the Liver. Torpidity and congestion vitiate the bile and render it unfit for digestion. This is disastrous to the health, and the consequence is frequently undermined by no other cause. Indigestion is the symptom. Obstruction of the duct which empties the bile into the stomach causes the bile to overflow into the blood. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternately costiveness and diarrhœa, prevails. Feverish symptoms, languor, low spirits, weariness, restlessness, and melancholy, with sometimes inability to sleep, and sometimes great drowsiness; sometimes there is severe pain in the side; the skin and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow; the stomach acid; the bowels sore to the touch; the whole system irritable, subject to fever, which may turn to bilious fever, bilious colic, bilious diarrhœa, dysentery, &c. A medium dose of three or four Pills taken at night, followed by two or three in the morning, and repeated a few days, will remove the cause of all these troubles. It is wicked to suffer such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

RHEUMATISM, GOUT, and all Inflammatory Fevers are rapidly cured by the purifying effects of these Pills upon the blood and the stimulus which they afford to the vital principle of Life. For these and all kindred complaints they should be taken in mild doses, to move the bowels gently, but freely.

AYER'S DINNER PILLS, this is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has been made more effectual to the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

Gathering Clover Seed.

A writer in the Valley Farmer gives the following method of collecting clover heads.

"We once made and used for many years, a very simple machine for gathering clover heads with which a man and horse can go over and gather the seed from double the quantity of land in a day than he can cut over with a scythe; and when the heads only are gathered, they require no other labor, except drying, to prepare them to run through the hulling and cleaning machine. Any tolerable workman can make one of these machines in two days. It is upon the following plan: Make an ordinary sled with sides or runners 14 inches wide and 6 feet 6 inches long. These may be placed 5 or 6 feet apart, and secured together with two cross pieces only at the back end, leaving the forward part open to the length of 3½ or 4 feet; then a box is made to nearly fill the width between the runners. The box is 4 feet long and 15 inches deep, with the forward end open. To the cross pieces at the bottom of the box, at the forward end, teeth of hard wood are secured so as to project about 12 inches; they should be ¾ of an inch thick and 1 inch wide on the top and made a quarter of an inch narrower or beveling on the underside. These teeth are placed three sixteenths of an inch apart, so as to form a comb. If the upper side of teeth were capped with hoop-iron, neatly fitted, it would be better. This box is hung between the sides of the slade upon two gudgeons or pins two inches in diameter, just as a common is hung in its carriage. With two handles, four feet long, secured to the box and projecting behind, the box may be moved on the pins so as to lower or raise the teeth to adapt them to clover of any height. A man with a horse can trip the heads from four or five acres of clover in a day with this machine, and collect it in box. With one of these machines a farmer can gather as much seed in a day as would be required to seed forty or fifty acres. It needs no hulling or cleaning unless it is designed for market. Some prefer to sow the seed in the chaff to that which is cleaned.

SALT FOR WHEAT.—Theodore Perry says, in the Prairie Farmer, that he sowed one and a half bushels of salt upon one half of a ten acre field; just after seeding it with Spring Wheat; and the result was, that the salted portion was ready for the sickle five days earlier than the unsalted part: and not a particle of rust, scab, or smut could be found, and the increase of crop he estimated at five bushels per acre.

FRUIT.—A cultivator of fruit, whose good example is referred to in the New England Farmer, keeps a circle of several feet around the roots of every tree clear of grass, and encloses it with thin manure, and several other kinds of fertilizing substances. He has very large crops of most excellent fruit, which he states, brings him more money than any of the neighboring farmers obtain from all their crops.

TO CURE SCRATCHES IN HORSES.—Take three table-spoonfuls of common tar, two table-spoonfuls of lard; put them in a vessel, and warm them gradually, until soft enough to mix thoroughly; then add a teaspoonful of gunpowder—mix it well with the tar and lard. Put this mixture on at night, after washing and drying the horses feet well. If the weather is wet, keep the horse in the stable all night, or under shelter, to prevent the mixture from washing off. I have never seen a case that required more than one application to cure it perfectly.

THRESH OUT YOUR WHEAT.—We understand that the Weevil is making considerable ravages in the wheat in the snow and stack. We are informed that a farmer named Jacob Miller, in Willoughby, upon cleaning his present year's crop, recently thrashed out, found upwards of a bushel of the insect among the "tailings"—separated from the wheat in the process of putting through the fanning mill. We cannot vouch for the correctness of the statement, yet we have seen enough elsewhere, to justify us in advising the farmer to look well to their grain in the barn. If the Weevil is much amongst it, the only safe course is to thresh out and grind the corn at once.—Welland Herald.

TO PREVENT JAMS FROM GRAINING.—A correspondent informs us that to prevent Jams, Preserves, etc., from graining, a teaspoonful of cream of tartar must be added to every gallon of the jam or preserve.

MILK REGULARLY.—Cows should be milked at regular intervals of twelve hours, as near as possible, especially during the hot summer months. Cows then feed mostly in the morning and evening, choosing to rest in the cool shade through the middle of the day; hence they should be milked and turned out before sun down.]

FEW know how to keep the flavor of sweet marjoram, the best of all herbs for broth and stuffing. It should be gathered in full or bloom and dried in a tin kettle, at a moderate distance from the fire; when dry, it should be rubbed, sifted, and corked up in a bottle.

Mock Cream may be made by mixing half a table spoon full of flour with a pint of new milk, letting it simmer five minutes to take off the rawness of the flour; beat up the yolk of an egg, stir it into the milk while boiling and run it through a fine sieve.

Blackberry jam is the cheapest and most innocent treat that can be provided for children; and useful in regulating the bowels. To make it, add to every pound of the berries half a pound of coarse moist brown sugar, and boil it nearly an hour, keeping it stirred all the time.

WHAT IS WANTED.—The two great lacks in agriculture, as it is ordinarily practised, are requisite information and carefulness. But the most pressing and immediate deficiency is the latter, the remedy of which cannot be too strongly enforced upon the attention of farmers and cultivators everywhere.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,
AND JOURNAL OF SUBURBAN ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the United States.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced. The growing interest with which the rising generation view the science of Horticulture, renders such a Journal as "The Illustrated Horticulturist" imperatively necessary to the progress of Rural Affairs.

Rural Architecture forms one of the principal features; each number containing from two to four engravings of model cottages, from designs by eminent and skilful architects. Space is also reserved for the tasteful art of Landscape Gardening, engraved plans of gardens in every style, and adapted to the peculiarities of different orders of architecture, beautifully executed.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and to all who can boast the sovereignty of a square rod of tillable earth, "The Illustrated Horticulturist and Journal of Suburban Art" will prove an invaluable companion. The extraordinary low price at which it is afforded, together with its really superior execution, both in regard to typography and editorial ability, must make it the most popular work of the kind in America.

"The Illustrated Horticulturist" is printed on the finest quality of super calendered paper, manufactured expressly. It is issued regularly the first of each month, commencing with July, 1856. The following gentlemen, eminent for their ability in the science of Horticulture, are engaged to conduct the Editorial department: H. P. KNIGHT, JAMES SNOWDEN and D. W. RAY.

TERMS: Two Dollars per annum, payable invariably in advance; a liberal discount to the Trade, Postmasters, and getters-up of Clubs.

Advertisements inserted at the rate of Ten Dollars per page.

N.B.— Newspapers inserting the above prospectus, and drawing attention editorially to the same, will be forwarded the ILLUSTRATED HORTICULTURIST for a year, on copy containing the advertisement should be sent in all cases to ensure attention.

NEW VOLUME OF THE
AGRICULTURIST

SUBSCRIPTION REDUCED FROM 25 TO 50 PER CENT.

The Canadian Agriculturist

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by its present proprietor in 1848, and is too well known to the leading farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us. The undersigned have made arrangements with the proprietor to publish the next, and probably succeeding volumes, and have resolved to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE
Illustrated with Engravings

Such as Farm Implements, Portraits of Animals, designs of Farm Buildings, New Inventions, &c., &c., interesting to the Farmer, and also cuts of some of the most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM MACDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the practice of Attorney-at-law near this city. The active promoter of the various improvements made in our Agricultural Legislation since 1847, and having also been connected with this Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and services are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to its columns as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to extend the correspondence on subjects of a practical kind.

THE AGRICULTURIST IS NOT LIABLE TO POSTAGE.

My Philosophy.

Bright things may never die,
E'en though they fade;
Beauty and minstrelsy
Deathless were made;
What though the summer day
Passes at eve away?
Doth not the moon's soft ray
Silence the night?
Bright things can never die,
Saith my philosophy;
Phœbus, though he pass away,
Leaves us the light.

Kind words can never die;
Cherished and blest,
God knows how deep they lie
Stored in the breast.
Like childhood's simple rhymes
Said o'er a thousand times,
Ay, in all years and climes,
Dearest and best:
Kind words can never die,
Saith my philosophy;
Deep in the soul they lie,
God knows how dear

Childhood can never die,—
Wrecks of the past
Float on the memory
E'en to the last;
Many a happy thing,
Many a daisied spring,
Flow on Time's ceaseless wing,
Far, far away;
Childhood can never die,
Saith my philosophy,
Wrecks of our infancy
Live on for aye.

Sweet fancies never die;
They leave behind
Still some fair legacy
Stored in the mind,
Some happy thought or dream,
Pure as early beam,
Missing the gentle stream
In the long glade:
Yet, though these things be,
Saith my philosophy,
Bright things can never die
E'en though they fade.

The Unowned Picture.

The great painter, Rubens during his stay at Madrid, in the year 1628, made many excursions into the neighbouring parts, and the following tale is related of him during one of these excursions:—

There, in the environs of the city, a convent inhabited by one of the most austere and rigid orders of monks; into this Rubens entered and observed, much to his surprise in the choir of the chapel, which was otherwise humbly and meanly adorned, a picture which evinced superior talent.

The subject of this picture was the Death of a Monk. Every shade, every touch, spoke of the high soul and sublime genius of the painter; and Rubens, delighted, called his pupils, some of whom usually accompanied him in his expeditions, and showed them the picture. All joined with him in the loudest expressions of admiration.

"But who can be the author of this chef d'œuvre?" exclaimed Van Dyke, Rubens's favourite pupil.

"A name has evidently been written beneath the painting, but some one has carefully effaced it," replied Van Thulden.

Rubens entered an interview with the prior of the convent, and, at the old monk's approach, eagerly inquired the name of the artist whose work so excited his admiration.

"The painter is no longer in the world," replied the monk.

"Dead!" exclaimed Rubens, "he is dead. And did he die unknown; was there no one after he was gone to give to the world a name which should have been immortal —a name before which even mine might bow. And, notwithstanding," added the great artist, with a noble pride, "notwithstanding, my father, I am Paul Rubens!"

At this name the pale face of the prior lighted up with an unwonted brightness.—His eyes sparkled, and the fixed and eager look which he turned on Rubens, spoke of something more than curiosity; but this excitement only lasted for an instant. The monk's eyes were again cast on the ground, and his hands, which he had raised to heaven in the moment of enthusiasm, he once more crossed upon his breast, and repeated—

"The painter is no longer in the world."

"But his name, my father, his name, that I may tell it to his country, and that he may receive, though late, the glory which is justly due to him."

And Rubens, Van Dyke, Jacques Jordaens, and Van Thulden, his pupils, one might almost say his rivals, surrounded the prior, and earnestly entreated him to name the unknown artist. The monk trembled. A cold perspiration trickled from his forehead down his wrinkled cheek, and his lips contracted almost convulsively, as though eager to reveal a mystery, of the secret of which he alone was master.

"His name! his name!" repeated Rubens. The monk made a solemn gesture with his hand.

"Listen!" said he, "you have misunderstood me. I told you that the author of this picture was no longer in this world; but I did not mean to say that he was actually dead."

"He is living!" exclaimed simultaneously Rubens and his pupils. "Oh, tell us then his name, that we may become acquainted with so sublime a genius."

"He has long since renounced the world," replied the prior, calmly, "he has entered the cloister, he is a monk."

"A monk, my father, a monk!" cried Rubens. "Oh! tell me in what convent; for he must leave it. When God marks a man with the seal of genius, that man has no right to bury himself in solitude. God has entrusted to him a sublime mission; it is his duty to accomplish it. Tell me, then, the name of the cloister where he is hidden. I will bring him forth, and show him the glory that awaits him. If he refuse me, I will obtain an order from our Holy Father, the Pope for him to return to the world, and resume his pencil. The Pope loves me, my father; the Pope would grant my request.

"I can neither tell you his name, nor that of the convent to which he has retired," replied the monk, in a resolute tone.

"The Pope will command you to do so," cried Rubens, exasperated.

"Listen to me," said the prior, "for heaven's sake, listen! Do you believe that this man, before giving up the world, before bidding adieu to fortune and glory, had not hard struggles against such a resolution? Do you not feel that he must experience bitter deception, and cruel disappointments, before he was brought to acknowledge that all here is but vanity?" said he striking his breast. "Leave him, then, to die peacefully in that asylum which he has at length found from the world and its deceptions. On the other hand, your efforts, I am convinced, would be of no avail; it is a temptation. I feel assured he would resist," added he, crossing himself, "for God will not withdraw his help. God, who in mercy deigned to call him, will not now chase him from his presence.

"But, my faith sir, it is immortality which he renounces!"

"My son, immortality is nothing in presence of eternity?" and the prior, pulling his hood over his face and slightly bowing, quitted the chapel, thus leaving Rubens no time to press his solicitations farther.

The celebrated Fleming retired from the convent with his brilliant cortege of pupils, and all returned to Madrid silently musing on what had transpired.

The prior sought his cell, and throwing himself upon his knees on the straw mat which was his only couch, prayed long and fervently; then, gathering together his pencils, his colours, and an easel which was lying on the floor of his dormitory, he threw them all into the river which flowed beneath the window. He gazed for some time with a melancholy smile upon the water which bore them away from his sight. When they had entirely disappeared he returned once more to kneel on his straw mat, before his wooden crucifix ty pray.

How to get a Wife with a Fortune.

Some months ago, I had occasion to recount to you the manner in which a young lady of this strange city managed, in order to get a husband and a fair pecuniary start in the world. I have now a companion picture to offer you. A young man of five and twenty, though impoverished by the revolution, aspired to a post under government to occupy which it was necessary to furnish a certain sum to deposite as security. Our hero could not obtain the requsite amount from his friends, and, at last hit upon an easy way to the difficulty. He caused an advertisement to appear in one of the journals, as follows:

"A young man, occupying an honorable position, wishes to marry a lady well brought up and possessed of two hundred and fifty francs."

Two hundred and fifty francs are but fifty dollars, and as there are many women in the world who would be glad to purchase a young handsome, and honorably connected husband, on such moderate terms, it was quite natural that the advertisor, in the course of three days during which his notice appeared in public, should have received many letters and applications. The young man addressed a note to each of the applicants, appointing a place and hour when he would meet them all together; and politely inviting them to look at him. On the evening indicated they came, it is said, the company numbered full two hundred women.

When all had assembled, the young man "organized the meeting," and made a speech in which he thanked these ladies for the honor they proposed conferring upon him "But," said the self-possessed young gentleman "you must understand ladies, perfectly well, that I cannot marry you all, moreover, you are all so charming, (many of them were horrible old witches, eyeless, toothless, snuffy and all that,) "it would be utterly impossible for me to choose amongst such lovely creatures. This, then is my proposition: Consider me as an object put up at lottery. You number two hundred, make two hundred tickets at two hundred and fifty francs each, and the gross sum realized shall be the fortune of the lady who draws the lucky number, and whom I pledge myself to marry immediately."

They hesitated a moment, but the youth was good-looking, and the ladies were anxious to marry. One of them determined to accept the proposition, and the rest followed after, like flock of sheep. As if to reward the venturous young fellow for his courage, his fortunate stars directed that he should fall to the lot of a youthful and pretty girl, whose greatest fault is an unhappy passion for practising on the piano. True to his word, the young man married her, and at last accounts, the couple thus strangely brought together, were passing a pleasant honeymoon. Have I given any of my sharp young countrymen a hint.—Paris Cor. N. Y. Express.

A Colored Methodist Camp Meeting.

The New York Post states that the colored Methodists are holding a Camp Meeting near Hampstead, Long Island. There are great many present from all parts of the country, and the scene presented by the campfires and tents at night is described as being very picturesque. "Brother Fuller," of New York, delivered the following address on Tuesday evening last:—

"O, sinners," he said, striding from one side of the platform to the other, "You have heard dis arternoon, of de white horses, which signifies life to dem dat follow; you have heard of de red horses, which signifies death; you have heard of de grizzle horses, which is parallel to de pale horses of the revelator. Oh! sinner! why don't you repent? You man, you hear de trumpet calling you? Dis is your last chance. Hell is raging wide open for your damned ghost. Escape! escape! escape!—Spirit ob de Lord, go out among de people."—(Shouts of "Amen.")

At this juncture a colored woman uttered a shrill scream, when one of the clergy exclaimed, "Glory to God—dais somebody hurt."

Several hymns were sung to familiar tunes (including "Old Dan Tucker,") and the screams, uproar and wild confusion resembled the tumult of a battle. One of the orators delivered the following, depicting the despair of the damned:—

"You will see the gates shut up behind you: you will say, there is my body in which I used to drink, game, gamble and commit all kinds of sin—in which I used to make fun at camp-meetins and call them niggers, and say their skulls was thick, and they did'nt know any better. But you will say, now all is lost, and the lake of fire and brimstone must roll on you. O! sinner, what has God done to you to make you hate him? Oh! why don't you come to Jesus."

Asking a Blessing.

It is related that on a certain occasion an English ship of war touched ot one of the ports of Sandwich Islands, and the captain gave a dinner to the royal family of the islands and several chiefs. The table was spread upon the quarter deck, and loaded with viands and delicacies of all kinds. After the company were seated around it, and the covers were removed, and everything appeared ready for operations to commence, the islanders seemed to be in haste to begin, but looking as though something more was expected. The captain thought that the trouble was not what they liked, or that it had been prepared in a manner to which they were not accustomed; he accordingly commenced apologizing for the fact. He had however, a boon waiter, who stood near his chair, and who was quick to discover where the obstacle was; and who whispering to the captain, said, "These persons are waiting for a blessing to be asked."—"Ask it then," said the captain. The waiter did so—reverently and gracefully imploring the divine blessing.

No sooner was this done, than Queen Pomare, her family, and the chiefs, soon showed, by the manner they attacted the previsions, that it was not because the dinner did not suit them that they had previously refrained from eating, but because no one had said grace. The Sandwich Islanders have been heathen; some call them heathens now, but are they so much so as those in this Christian land who have no family altars, and never invoke the blessing of Heaven upon their food!

The Telegraph between England and America.

It now really seems probable that the scheme for uniting America and Europe by means of the electric telegraph may shortly be realised. We read the New York Times of the 8th of July, that a small steamer, the Arctic, has left that port under the command of Lieutenant Berryman, for the purpose of laying one end of the cable at the purpose of the submarine cable from Newfoundland to Valencia Bay, on the Western Coast of Ireland. It is not, perhaps, generally known that between those two points the bed of the ocean rises in a long level plateau running east and west, and for considerable width. This plateau is composed of sand and shells, and presents a remarkable level surface. It appears to be undisturbed either by currents or icebergs, for shells are found across its whole width that have evidently lain there many years. It seems as if marked out by nature for the purpose for which it is now going to be made available. If the survey furnishes results as satisfactory as are anticipated, the work of laying the cable will be commenced immediately on its conclusion, for this purpose two steamers will be employed, both will proceed to the middle point between the two coasts, each having half the cable on board, and from that point will sail either way for the opposite shores, paying out the cable as they run. Ten or fifteen days, it is supposed, will be sufficient under favorable circumstances, for laying the cable in this way. Such an attempt at first sight, seems to be preposterous and impossible; but during the last twenty or thirty years, so many things which once appeared equally so have become established and familiar facts, that we are forbidden to pronounce any enterprise impossible, or any story of the scientific triumph incredible. We sincerely wish success to this telegraphic project, and shall regard that success, if attained rather with the wonder with which we receive the announcement of a fact totally unexpected. In this case we shall welcome the news at least gladly.

Whatever can bind the two continents together more closely than at present in bonds of mutual sympathy and interest—and nothing can do more than rapid, easy, and frequent intercourse—must be the surest guarantee for future peace, harmony and good will. If England and America understand their own interests, and are resolved to pursue those interests in the spirit of honorable rivalry which is alone worthy of either, it is to this object that the energies of both countries will be directed. By hostile rivalry we can gain nothing, and must necessarily lose much. The natural field of exertion and activity that lies before both countries is the same; it is large enough for both; and we may, therefore, by mutual aid, gather peaceful triumphs far more magnificent and enduring than any of those miserable successes that are stained by human blood, and in which what is lost by one is by no means gained by the other. We would have triumphs in which both should be victors—in which both should wear the laurels and share the spoil. We would have triumphs in which we could enjoy our own success without the painful consciousness that it brings sorrow to any other, or that its smile is founded upon another's tear. We would make our own cause the cause of humanity, freedom and civilization, instead of building it up amid the ruin and misery, the tears and curses, of our fellow men. We would remember in all our national intercourse that great rule of individual Christianity:—"Do as you would be done by." We would go on hand-in-hand while each pursues its own magnificent career and, by making ourselves a credit to the religion we profess, and the freedom we enjoy, we would gradually persuade other nations no longer to fear our power or envy our greatness, but to follow our example and to emulate our triumphs.—Manchester Guardian.

Miscellany.

LUCKY—In the day of the blue laws of New England, a shoemaker was condemned to be hanged for something he had done; but on the day appointed for his execution, they discovered that he was the only shoemaker in the place, so they hung a weaver in his stead—for they had more weavers than they knew what to do with.

The French Emperor lately presented the English Commander with a number of Medals, with a veiw of having them conferred upon such of the English troops as had distinguished themselves by meritorious service in the Crimea. Five of these were lately given to five men of the 39th Regiment, now lying at Montreal, the names of the men are as follows:—Private Michael Boyle; Color Sergeant James Garnett; Private Lawrence Lind; Seargent Geo. Pegram; and Private Michael Ryan. —Observer.

CHARGE IT TO FATHER.—A dry goods dealer, who is somewhat prominent for his various jerks and shakes when he promenades the street was on a foraging expedition a few days since; and seeing a buxom Sucker girl, he approached her, seized her hand, and exclaimed with much warmth:—

"How do you do, my dear young friend? how is your father and mother? when did you leave home? Ah! excuse me I have forgotten your name, but I stayed all night at your father's home a year ago. (Her father had been dead for ten years.) Perhaps you don't recollect me. My name's ———; my store is on Broadway; call on me—I shall be happy to sell you some bargains,—and leaving his card in her hand, our man of tape departed.

Not long afterwards appeared the not very green young lady, who selected goods to the amount of about twenty dollars, and picking them up, was about leaving, when the polite shopkeeper and friend of the family exclaimed:

"Excuse me, Miss, you have forgotten the bill."

"Oh, no," replied Miss Sucker; please, charge it to father."

Utterly confounded, our long friend suffered verdancy in muslin to leave with the bill unpaid.—St. Louis Rev.

YANKEE ELOQUENCE.—A very popular preacher in South Carolina, and a secessionist withal, bequeathed his hearers on the importance of perseverance and fortitude. He said:

"You, that is Church-members, must not lock back upon Babylon as Paul's wife done: You must be a heap better than the world's people!—Religion is like a Battle, and Satan are we—— In short my dear beloved hearers, you must do as General Washington done at the battle of Waterloo. In the skirmage his horse got killed by a British cannon ball. Did Washington give up his sword to the enemy? Not he. He sung out at the top of his voice, "A horse! A horse! my kingdom for a horse!" A horse was brought him by Frank Marion, and he drove the bloody British from the field and thus secured the liberty of South Carolina!"

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A young man, by the name of John Castles, of Scarboro, had the flesh torn off his thigh, by the jack wheel of a thrashing machine, on the 23rd ult. The poor fellow, we are informed, was obliged to have it amputated, but it proved of no avail. He died on Friday last. Deceased was 20 years of age, un ed.—Markham Economist. marri

The Paris Sciecle complains that of three lines of transatlantic steamers plying between Havre and New York, namely:—the New York and Havre, American line; the Cunard, British line, and the Gauthier Freres,' French line—the latter, owing to the absurd customs regulations of France, actually pays heavier dues than the other two. Further, the Siecele says that Havre is becoming the shipping port of Europe, and already exceeds the trade of Liverpool with New York.

A young man, named Mc. Donald, was fined $4 and costs in the London C. W. Police Court on Saturday last, for kissing Elizabeth Allston, a young servant-maid, without her consent asked and obtained. Globe.

At the beginning of the present century the London area was little more than 30,000 acres; what is it likely to be the end? In 1800 the total number of inhabitants in the metropolis is recorded to have been less than a million—or, more accurately, 958,863. Last June, according to the faithful return of the Registrar General, it had extended to 2,362,326. Carry out at the same rate of progress until the year 1900, and London will then contain not far short of six millions of inhabitants.

The Political Frame, at Monticello, White Co., Indiana, is a model "independent" paper. It publishes the strongest editorial articles in favor of Buchanan's election, side by side with articles equally strong in favor of Fremont's election. One of the editors is an enthusiastic Buchanier, and the other a no less zealous Fremonter. As there are no Fillmore men in that region this arrangement must be eminently satisfactory to all parties.

A WONDERFUL RELIC—It is stated that in cutting through Oliver street, for the purpose of extending the Bowery, a tombstone was exhumed and a perfect skull found beneath it. The inscription was in Hebrew characters, and after being submitted to the inspection of many learned citizens of the Israelitish persuasion, it was deciphered to bear the name "Grenade," while the date runs back some 399 years, which was before the discovery of America by Columbus.—Courier & Enq.

A genuine down easter was lately essaying to appropriate a square of tough beef at dinner, in a Wisconsin hotel. His convulsive efforts with a knife and fork attracted the smiles of the rest, in the same predicament as himself. At last Jonathan's patience vanished under ill success, when laying down his knife, he burst out with: "Strangers, you needn't laff—if you hain't got any regard for the landlord's feelin's, you ought to have some respect for the old bull." This sally brought down the house.

TIT FOR TAT—An overseer named Silas Rogers, on the plantation of Thomas J. Brown, near Woodville, Miss, while whipping some of the slaves, on the 3rd inst, at 10 o'clock at night, was set upon by the slaves, knocked down and choked to death. Nine of the slaves were arrested and will be hung or lynched, as usual in such cases, although the overseer was no doubt a brutal tyrant. The Woodville Republican expresses alarm at the fact that knives and pistols were found in possession of some of the slaves on this and other plantations.

America threatens soon to supply us with poetry in the bulk, as she does with cheese, flour casks, baby jumpers, clocks and whit stones. The usual test of the good article is the nationality of the writer; if he talks of prairie, savannah and rattlesnakes, he is probably "some pumpkins," and worth carriage; if he babbles only of green fields and blue skies, and tries to pass for an Englishman, his book is generally little better than paper damaged by the injudicious use of printing ink."—Athenæum

A CUSTOM WORTH IMITATING—It is the custom among certain tribes in Siberia that when a woman is married, she must prepare the wedding dinner with her own hands. To this feast all the relatives and friends, both of her own family and that of the groom, are invited. If the viands are well cooked, her credit as a good housewife is established. But if the dishes are badly prepared, she is disgraced in that capacity forever. The result is that a Siberian wife is generally a good housekeeper, whatever else she may be, and thus is competent, beyond her sex generally, for the practical duties of life. Girls, bear in mind.

BENEFIT OF SPRINGS.—A lady brought a child to a physician, to consult him about its precious health. Among other things she inquired if he did not think the springs would be useful.

"Certinly, madam," replied the doctor, as he eyed the child and then took a large pinch of snuff. "I haven't the least hesitation in recommending the springs—and the sooner you apply the remedy, the better."

"You really think it would be good for the dear little thing, don't you?"

"Upon my word it's the best remedy I know of."

What Spring would you recommend doctor?"

"Any will will do madame, where you can get plenty of soap and water."

"I speak within bounds," as the prisoner said to the jailor.

Free Trade between Canada and the West Indies.

From the Port of Spain Trinidad Gazette.

We perceive by the last papers that a question was asked of the Secretary of State for the Colonies in the Imperial Parliament concerning the recent step towards a reciprocal free trade between Canada and the West Indies; and though no information of any kind was elicited, we may judge from the more fact of the subject being introduced there, that our anticipations that we should yet hear more of the project, are likely to be realized. In the event of a rupture with the United States, whence Canada receives at present a large portion of its sugar, the probabilities are changed almost into certainties that recourse would be had to the West Indies as a substitute. But if we are mercifully spared the horrors of that mischief, the demand for sugar in Canada must, from two causes, so largely increase, that the certainty still remains that these colonies will be called upon for the largest supply. The first cause is the immense enlargement of the population, wealth, and civilization of the provinces of British North America; and the second is that accompanying and, in some measure, depending on that spread of settling and agriculture—the supply from the never anything to compete with the cane, must diminish. The maple does not, like the sugar cane, come to the sugar producing state in a single year, nor reproduce itself annually; the process of sugar making is every year diminishing the cost while improving the article. The wood—the progress of agricultural enterprise is gradually converting the lands once maple covered into profitable cereal producing farms—a cultivation adapted to the climate, and suited to the habits of the inhabitants. The maple was never a rival to the cane; it was just the best will substitute that was handy when the genuine article could not be procured; made use of exactly as the last traveller would, during his wanderings in a forest, make wild fruits, berries, and roots the succedaneum of home vegetables. The two questions arising from this state of things are these: —Shall we—with the prospect before us, that even that portion may be at a moment dashed away by the rude hand of war—remain content to share in the supply of Canada by means of American merchants and their extensive refiners? Or shall we, by willingness to make some changes, probably sacrifices, and to take a good deal of trouble, secure to ourselves the direct supply?

There are many reasons that may be urged against the first course, not the least pressing of which is the one already alluded to, of the effects of the quarrel with the United States having to be settled by an appeal to arms. Another is the perpetuation of an evil system that has ever been the bane of these colonies, and which has done more to stifle improvement in agriculture than almost anything else—the system of keeping up two distinct interests, the producing interest and the refinery one. We have very rarely, we might but for a few exceptional cases of late years say, never stood face to face with the consumers of our produce, or what is nearly the same thing their direct agents. Between us and them has stood the colossal monopoly of the English refiners—an influence far more powerful in the councils of the state, than the distinct and singly acting representations of the colonies themselves have ever been. If we continue to supply British America through the refiners of the States alone, we help to create and uphold a precisely similar state of things in this hemisphere, and the consequences will be the same.

It is acknowledged almost universally that attempts there to improve the aspect and appearance of the sugar are a mere waste of time; that the sort of sugar that pays best—and there must be the fact—in that which is produced by the smallest amount of trouble and expense; that is the sort that best suits the refiners. And again, it is pretty generally admitted that as our labour stands at present, scientific and complicate means of turning out the sugar in a fairer condition are pretty certain to go wrong, and so after a little trial be given up, and a turn made to the old jog-trot fashion. That this is a true picture every one must testify who is in the habit of seeing the works on estates—of seeing the vacuum pans, centrifugal apparatus, and debris of all kinds that repose at ease scarcely valued at their worth in the yard, and the rear on of it is, that the returns of sales do not show a sufficient difference between the rates realised, for the rough and ready made sugar, and that on which time, trouble and expense have been bestowed, to give any encouragement to the improver. Perseverance may alter this as it has to a great measure done with respect to Barbadoes sugar, which having obtained a reputation can now command a market at an advanced price, amongst those who purchase for direct sale to the grocers and other retailers without passing through the refiner's at all.

But perseverance at a losing game requires reserve capital, with which we are not much troubled, and ability to bide one's time. Another mode by which it may be altered is found in the opening up of a new market for the sugar where refiners as yet are not, and where a fine and nice looking sugar will be at once bought for direct retail. Such a market is Australia proving to the Mauritius greatly to their advantage and prosperity. Sugar almost as fine as not the least doubt would British America prove to the West Indies, if the price be deemed worth struggling for and securing. But we cannot, obtaining as we do ourselves, our refined sugar from home expect Canada to have direct recourse to us unless we provide—even as has Mauritius his done for Australia—a sugar agreeable to look at, and fit to use at once. We cannot expect but that a refining monopoly—though perhaps not so powerful a one as the original—will spring up there, to stand between ourselves and the consumers of our produce, draining the profits from both, unless we take some energetic measures to get that part of the work into either our own hands, or into hands subservient and auxiliary to our interests.

Central America and Sandwich Islands.

The New York Herald of the 30th gives the following items of news:—

We have news from California, Oregon Territory, Central America, New Grenada, the South Pacific and the Sandwich Islands, received by the steamship Illinois, from Aspinwall, which arrived at this port yesterday morning. The Illinois brought $1,466,107 in treasure, an amount about equal to that recived by the previous steamer. The intelligence from San Francisco is highly exciting. The account given of the execution of two other murderers by the Vigilance Committee, the speech of one and the hardihood of the second, will, no doubt, attract the attention of our readers. The rumors of an anticipated attack upon the Vigilance Committee, by the United States authorities, aided by the government vessels in port we give, without, however, being a party to the fears evinced by the San Francisco editor. It is not probable, if such a movement were in contemplation, it would be done covertly, and in the secret manner which the statement whold have us believe. The committee took occasion, on the return of one of the banished individuals, to issue an edict in effect info ming all the exiles that if any of them make their appearance again in San Francisco, immediate death will be the penalty of their temerity. The alarm created by the rumored attempts to enter the city may may not be well founded. It was reported that the Vigilance Committee would soon disband, as the only work on hand seemed to be the case of Judge Terry. It was thought that he would be sent from the state, as Mr. Hopkins, the man he stabbed, had recovered from his wound. The Fourth-of-July festival had already commenced to rage with a virulence that appalled the old democratic leaders. Fillmoreism did not seem to be congenial to the soil, and it would not probably take root. Fremont and Buchanan ratification meetings had been steadily improving in the Francisco, and large quantities of goods had been sent to the interrior during the two weeks previous to the sailing of the steamer than in the same period for some months previous.—The crops were represented as being good in all sections of the State, and it was stated that sufficient would be raised for home consumption, with a little to reserve. Favorable intelligence continued to be received from the mines, and the product was considered satisfactory for the dry season.

In Southern Oregon the Indian war has been brought to a close, but in the north the savages still remained hostile.

Advices from the Sandwich Islands, dated at Honolulu, July 2, state that King Kamehama IV. was married to Miss Emma Rooke on the 19th of June, according to the ritual of the Church of England. The King is twenty-two and the Queen twenty years of age. A severe earthquake had been felt at Kaswaiaae, and the new volcano at Mauna Leo was more active. The lava stream had turned from Hilo towards the south. The Pacific Commercial Advertiser is the name of a new paper started on the island. A regular line of clipper ship packets has been established between Honolulu and Boston.

From Callao we have letters and files to July 29. Ex-President Echenique had purchased two steamers, the Virgin Islands and Polynesia, and an American ship of 1,000 tons, with which vessels, after furnishing them with strong batteries, he intends to land a large force on the coast of Peru. Opinions were divided as to his chances of success. It was certain, however, that a large proportion of the population looked forward to his arrival with pleasure, and were prepared to give him a cordial reception. A horrible murder had been committed on board an American ship, the Kitty, while lying into Callao, with the four sailors who had committed the crime. They were lodged in prison, to be sent home by first opportunity, but contrived to effect their escape. No efforts were being made by the authorities to re-capture them —an indifference which had given rise to frequent comments on the part of American residents.

From Barbadoes—We have news from Barbadoes to the 11th instant. There was a scarcity of most articles of American produce at all of the islands. Three vessels had recently arrived from the French islands in quest of flour, but went away without any. The old crop of sugar, which exceeded an average yeild, having been disposed of, business was very dull. The growing crops were very promising. Barbadoes was quite healthy.

The Bridgetown Liberal says:—The vessels of the squadron which her Majesty's Government have seen reason to order into these seas are dropping in to our Bay, which is beginning to resemble with cannon. The Arrogant, 48, steamed in on Monday, by reason of the pause of Tuesday, the Cossack 20, dropped anchor yesterday afternoon, and this morning brought the Victor, 6, gunboat, and the Tartar, 20. The Orion, 90, is expected almost daily, and the squadron, we understand, will be reinforced with some additional vessels, so that there will not be many if the whole Baltic fleet be sent after them.

His Excellency the Governor and family visited the Imperiuse on Saturday evening, on board of which all the other commanders assembled to pay their respects. His Excellency left the Imperiuse under a salute of 17 guns, and embarked on board the Derwent, R. M. C. Steamer, for St. Lucia, accompanied by his private Secretary, A. S. Hinckes, Esq. His excellency's family returned to Government House—West Indian.

The Government here have ordered Sir Houston Stewart to sail with a British squadron to the Black Sea. We took occasion in our last communication to show with what tad faith the Emperor Alexander seemed disposed to treat the allies, and his dishonesty seems to have impressed itself on the Ministry, proverbially one not disposed to seek cause of offence. In ordering Admiral Stewart to enter the Black Sea, Lord Palmerston has acted with a boldness worthy of praise, and we have no doubt that steps will have the effect of keeping Russia to the fulfilment of her share of the treaty of peace.

In the execution of that treaty the conduct of the allies has presented a favorable contrast to that of Russia. No sooner was peace made, than, as the best proof of their honesty, France and England set about evacuating the enemy's territory to the last acre and the last man, without enquiring what the enemy was doing. And, in the meantime what has Russia been doing? literally breaking the treaty we had just previously signed. At Paris, when Baron Brunnow introduced the suggestion that Russia should be at liberty to raze the forts of Ismail and Reni, the proposition was instantly rejected. And her behaviour with regard to Kars is equally flagrant. The Paris treaty provides that Russia shall evacuate Kars as promptly as possible, while the allies take six months for their retirement. How has that stipulation been carried out? Why, instead of Kars being given up in a month, as it might have been, the allies are positively away first. We are glad, however, that the aggression on Isle of Serpents has not passed unnoticed. The only rule to adopt with Russia is the very simple one of taking offence as soon as it is given. It is evident that she has learnt nothing whatever from the war and we trust therefore that England, at all events, will not relapse into that sleepy good-nature which winks at perfidy, but manfully declare her intention to resist aggression whenever and wherever Russia attempts it.—*Cor. The Maple Leaf,

SANDWICH, SEPTEMBER 11, 1856.

It has afforded us no little amusement, in reading the long and spicy lecture which the Woodstock Spirit of the Times has given to the electors of these counties, upon the subject of the forthcoming election; and in endeavoring to persuade this constituency which one, of the anxious band, should receive their support, holds forth in no very measured terms upon the praise or dispraise bestowed upon their respective heads, making one a perfect trump, while the other would be made out an animal of rather curious composition, being, we suppose, part hyena, part aligator, part crow; the other part partakes of the spirit of some other animal, the name of which we are not quite certain. But, unfortunately, the editor of the Spirit is not thoroughly posted in election matters, for he supposes there are only two Candidates in the field, passing over Mr. Dougall in scornful silence. Now this is a great loss to our electors, as they will fail to receive his opinion and advice in regard to that gentleman's qualifications, though, no doubt, Mr. Dougall has cause to feel grateful that his name was passed over in silence by that journal, as he could expect nothing favorable at his hands, as Mr. Rankin is the champion, and as he expresses it, "the man for Galway." It is in this fashion that this lecture runs, and no doubt both Essex and Kent will see at once over themselves a reflection of that awful destiny under which they must be laboring, and from which the kindly Spirit would lead them with a motherly hand from the doom into which they were blindly running.

"Instead of calmly and deliberately going to the polls for the purpose of seceting a man of sound judgment, energy and patriotism, how often do we find the breath of insane agitation whirling from their equilibrium hosts of men who, when it is too late, find the utter recklessness of following a mere "will o' the wisp"—an ephemeral meteor, that glares and burns, when passions are cooled, and just reason assumes her legitimate sway, sinks again to its proper proportions, and exhibits in bold relief the scragged and selfish features of which it is composed. To prove this, it is only necessary to refer to the parliamentary history of Canada, and to whom are many members who have been returned not for talent, not for honesty—for loyalty, or for an unstained character—but because agitation and bigotry had taken a too violent hold of the minds of the electors, and some skilful brawler, some soft-tongued Billy Gammon"—had taken advantage of antipathies created from nothing, and which would never exist were it not for the selfishness and poor ambition of some political knave."

Now this is, to use a somewhat vulgar phrase, laying it on thick, and by a paper published without the Counties altogether, is a degree of impudence not often met with. And again he says:

"Of the candidates now before the electors of the Western Division, but two appear to have any chance of getting even a respectable nomination These are Col. Prince and Arthur Rankin, Esq., the present Member for the County of Essex; and as we have some acquaintance with the constituency which they seek to represent, and many friends in the locality, we propose to say a few words anent the fitness of these gentlemen to fill a seat in the Legislative Council."

"Then follows any amount of abuse upon Col. Prince of the most disgusting nature, at which the editor of that journal appears to be an apt scholar in his scribbling. Why the Spirit should take so much interest in our election, we are quite at a loss to imagine; and why he should take so much pains in the abuse of one of the candidates, and so lavish of praise upon the other, is a subject also which is beyond our powers of imagination; but we fear that the Spirit has a motive, if not an interest in writing thus; and though he write till doomsday, we fear that it will be only labor lost. The Western Division will elect Col. Prince and will give him a large majority, the assertion of the spirit to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Planet, a paper devoted to the interests of Mr. Rankin, comes forward and admits that Mr Rankin took an active part in procuring the dismissal of the two magistrates, Messrs. Wilkinson and Woodbridge, and attempts to justify his conduct for so doing. This, coming from a journal which has been most active in the cause of Mr. Rankin, we must take as good authority, for of course nothing would appear in that journal which was not official. Though the Planet is not as plain as we should have wished him to be upon this point, yet he says enough to convince us that Mr. Rankin did use his influence in securing their dismissal, and in a manner that was not quite creditable in a Member of Parliament. Now, had he been acting merely as the attorney of Mr. Garret, why no one would have thought any thing about the matter—only that it was small business. But when a Representative of the County takes the steps which he must have taken, the big speech upon statesmanship, which was delivered by Mr. Rankin, at the Kent Meeting, does not compare consistently with his actions. When he said that such trifles as representation by population and such like measures, were unfit to occupy the thoughts of statesmen, we cannot conceive for the life of us, what could have come over the spirit of his dreams, when he could step down from the highest pinnacle of some imaginary sphere and take this poor benighted negro by the hand, who had been arrested, and is now suffering the penalty of his crimes in the Ohio State Prison, instead of, as the Planet would have it, "spirited out of the country, and without question, into slavery." Now, we are inclined to think that the Planet knew better than this, but being short of argument, found it convenient to use "slavery," instead of "State Prison." We have the certificates of the Court at Cleveland, where he (the negro) was tried and convicted, and a copy of the sentence, which provides the individual with lodging and board at the expense of the State, for the crime of horse-stealing.

Since the above was written, the Planet of Monday has come to hand; and the way the Editor pitches into the three Essex papers is a caution. Herald takes it first, for his treatment of Snow, the man who attempted to kick up a row in Windsor, by making inflammatory speeches to the colored people of that place.

Then the Maple Leaf takes its turn, under the lash of the Rankin whipper-in; and fortunately, at the first cut, the lash broke from the handle, and left us unhurt. The Editor of the Planet is so profuse in his pot-house expressions, that we incline to the belief that most of his articles are concocted in some tap room, for the expression and style are peculiar. Now, we transfer a few of his articles, smell strongly of that institution.

The Amherstburg Telegraph is treated next, to a passing fusile; and though his treatment is somewhat mild when compared with the other two, in expectation, no doubt, to win him over to the same happy and virtuous path in which the Planet is travelling. We wish him joy, that's all.

Each day as the electioneering campaign progresses, the prospect of Col. Prince being elected, becomes brighter and brighter; there is now hardly a doubt but that he will have a sweeping majority of the electors in both Counties. His recent visit to Kent has shown that he will carry the day triumphantly in that section, and wherever he held meetings, was received most enthusiastically; and in Essex, there cannot be a doubt of his receiving a large majority. He is now visiting the Townships, and from the flattering reports of the meetings that he has already held, there is hardly a dissenting voice to be heard.

The prospect of Mr. Rankin, is in a no small degree injured, by the knowledge that as a member of the Lower House, he is in opposition to be elected to the Upper, and electors will of course not pledge themselves to Mr. Rankin under these circumstances. He has not resigned his seat, and electors are at a loss to know whether he intends doing so or not; if he does, why not do so at once? why shirk the resignation longer? would it not be more straightforward to say at once to the Electors, "gentlemen, I resign my seat in the Lower House, I come forward to seek your suffrages to elect me to a seat in the Council." If Mr. Rankin is now only feeling his way, and if hereafter he finds that his prospects of success are doubtful, and leaves the field, it will not be treating the electors with fairness. What other object Mr. Rankin can have in not resigning, we are at a loss to conceive.

Next comes Mr. Dougall, and what prospect of success, he can possibly hope to receive, we cannot for a moment imagine.—He has been brought forward by a few Ultra-Brownites and Clear Grits from the neighborhood of Chatham, and with their whole force cannot muster one hundred votes in the two counties, all told—we are surprised that Mr. Dougall would allow himself to be put in nomination by a party possessing so little influence as they do. We had supposed that Mr. Dougall would have been the last person in the world to have become the Champion of clear gritism; but such appears to be the case. We truly hope that he will see his error, and wash his hands of the party, and remove the blot from his fair fame.

The Royal Mail Steam Ship Arabia which met with an accident on her outward trip, the particulars of which were given in our last week's paper, was seen by the Persia off Cape Clear on the 24th—the Arabia left Halifax on the 16th, so that there could have been little or no discussion on the passage, and has most probably arrived safely in Liverpool.

The Ship Resolute, which had been abandoned in the Arctic regions, by the British Expedition, has been purchased by the United States Government and will be presented to Great Britain. Lieutenant Hartstein of the U. S. N. is appointed to fit out and carry her over to England. This circumstance is most gratifying, and is honorable in the extreme on the part of the United States.

It is nearly three years since the proposal was made to divide the present diocese of Toronto, by appointing additional bishops at Kingston and London. The difficulties which stood in the way of the accomplishment of this project have now been all removed, and the clergy and laity of the Western Division will be called upon to elect a bishop as soon as a sufficient income has been secured. To effect this the Rev. F. Evans, Rector of Simcoe, the Rev M. Broomer, Rector of Galt, and the Rev. E. H. Dewar, Rector of Sandwich, have been appointed to visit every parish in the proposed diocese of London and solicit the subscriptions of members of the Church. No less a sum than £12,500 is required, and they are now engaged in performing this duty with extraordinary success. We understand that they will arrive here at the end of the present week, and will take part in the services at St. John's Church on Sunday morning next, as well as at the Irish Settlement in the afternoon, and Windsor in the evening. —[Com.]

PATENTS OF INVENTIONS.

His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to grant Letters Patent of Invention for a period of fourteen years, from the dates thereof, to the following persons, viz.—

Robert Romaine, of the Town of Peterborough, in the County of Peterborough, for the introduction into Canada of "A New and Improved Stove for cooking and other purposes"—(Dated 25th July, 1856.)

Amos Cleox, of the Township of Norwich, in the County of Oxford, Carpenter, for "An improved method of constructing Frames for barns, dwelling houses and other edifices"—(Dated 25th July, 1856.)

James Davis Hare, of the Town of Dundas, in the County of Wentworth, for "A new and improved Washing Machine called Washing Machines" (Dated 8th August, 1856.)

Perilous Adventure at the Suspension Bridge.

As usual on Sunday, a large number of persons were congregated at the Bridge—men, women and children—some engaged in walking across the bridge, others in viewing the scenery, and others on the top of the west bank of the river a number of boys were amusing themselves by pulling upon guys, giving them an oscillatory motion.—The guys were some ninety feet in length, and attached to the bridge directly over the chasm, and several feet each other. They were fastened together in an iron staple, inserted in the rock at the very brink of the precipice. One of the boys, a lad about 12 or 14 years of age, whose name we have not been able to ascertain, in order to show his laring, seated himself astraddle the guys over the gulf below. The staple was wrenched from the rock and the guys swung out over the river with they boy s ated in the crotch, holding on with a hand grasped upon each guy!

The distance from the bridge to the water is two hundred and forty feet, and the position of the young man about midway between! The accident was witnessed by a large number of persons, and so thunderstruck were they that many of them, both upon the bridge and the banks, threw themselves upon their face, and it was some time before any one could regain sufficient presence of mind to set about rescuing the lad from his perilous position. The youngster, however, exhibited a nerve worthy of an older head, and seemed to greatly enjoy his swing. After the vibration of the wires had ceased, he commenced giving directions to those above him on the bridge as to the best method of affording him relief. A search of the neighborhood showed that no rope suitable to draw him up could be had. A boy suggested the plan of making a rope sufficiently long to let him down, by piecing. This was done. The rope was let down to him, and after he had fastened it to his waist, these above lowered him to the water's edge! He gained the bank and scampered off for his own lower landing as fast as his legs could carry him, and our informant says has not been since in the vicinity of the Suspension Bridge.

Explosion and Narrow Escape of Gen. Sir W. Eyre.

From the Quebec Mercury.

One of the most miraculous escapes we have ever heard of occurred of Lt.-General Eyre and staff, and a number of pleasure seekers in the Saguenay river the day before yesterday. As usual the gun on the forward promenade deck, was fired in front of Cape Eternity, to give the passengers an idea of the echo, but unfortunately, and from some unaccountable cause, the gun burst in going off and was blown to atoms, barely a fragment of the carriage remaining to view, when the smoke cleared away. The majority of the passengers included several ladies congregated on the front deck admiring the stupendous rocks over-head when the gun was loaded, and they merely retired a pace or two in different directions to see it fired. The man who fired was knocked down but not hurt, and though portions of the gun flew in four different directions, not one of the company was injured. The figure head of the steamer was carried away by a side fragment, and the light bulwarks on the starboard side in front of the gun were torn off. The bulwark on the opposite side to which the gun was fired was also broken—it is conjectured by the carriage of the gun, which must have been driven backward through it by the concussion, and gone overboard. A small piece flew over the passengers' heads and broke the sash in small panes of the saloon windows, while several other parts of the wreck were seen to fall into the water about 150 yards distant on the larboard side of the steamer.

Monday Sept. 8.

The supply of produce on the market today was very small, and our previous quotations are more than sustained.

Wheat came in sparingly, only about a dozen loads having changed hands. The price paid was higher, ranging from 6s 9d to 7s 4½d per bushel—the latter figure only being in one or two instances—7s 3d was the ruling price for prime samples. There was a good deal of competition among buyers.

Flour is still scarce and prices remain high. Superfine is worth $6 to $6 50, Fancy $6 75, and extra $7 per bl.

Oats are plenty and are selling very slowly at 2s 6d per bushel wholesale in store and 2s 9d by retail.

There is no change in the prices of other articles.

Died.

At Sandwich, on the morning of the 10th inst., Mary Ann Arabella, youngest daughter of James S. Forest, Esq., of this place.

At the residence of her Mother, in Gunaneque, on Wednesday the 27th August, Maggie, the beloved wife of Walter Eberts Esq., of this Town, aged 27 years and 4 months. Her remains were brought to this place on Sunday morning, and on Tuesday the 2nd inst., were taken to her last resting place at Sandwich and buried, by her own request, in the cemetery at that place, near her father.

She died as she lived, a devout and sincere Christian, and long will her memory be cherished by those who had the pleasure of her acquaintance.—Planet.

Special Notices.

Important to all.

Health is undoubtedly the greatest temporal blessing. Without it, the wealth of the Indies would be insufficient to afford an hour's happiness, and without the possession of it makes the most humble cottage the abode of contentment and comfort. Yet while all are ready to admit this great truth, how many too often disregard its possession until no longer theirs to enjoy. All who are suffering from indisposition, should at once try Sir Astley Cooper's Mild Aperient Anti-Bilious Pills, warranted free from Mercurial, Antimonial or other Mineral Substances, which have for nearly half a century been admitted the best family medicine, renovating and invigorating the system, a fine stomachic, and a mild yet efficient aperient, purifying the blood, and striking at the root of disease.

They have been amply tested in the most distressing and nervous affections, and thousands who have been afflicted in every possible way are daily bearing their grateful testimony to the great benefits they have received from their use, and are now rejoicing in a renewed state of health, after having long despaired of ever possessing it again.

Beware of Counterfeits.—It frequently occurs, that Druggists impose on their customers, a spurious compound under the fac-similie of the signature of the Proprietors, McPhail & Co., on the directions.

Sold at 25 and 50 cents per box, and in Family boxes at $1 each. There is a great saving by purchasing the larger sizes.

For sale by Simpson and Dunspaugh, Druggists, Toronto; John M. Thornton, Dundas; Andrew Gilchrist; A. H. Cook, Brantford, General Agents, by whom Country Druggists and Merchants will be supplied at London and New York prices.

Sandwich, 1st Sept., 1856.

TO THE

INDEPENDENT ELECTORS

OF THE

Counties of Essex and Kent.

GENTLEMEN,

THE time has now arrived when it becomes me to address you briefly upon the great change made in the Constitution of this County by our Sovereign's gracious permission of an Elected and Legislative Councillors, whereby she has been pleased to wave Her Royal Prerogative to create them as heretofore. For that boon we should be grateful, and I doubt not that, if properly treated and carried out, it will add to the increased prosperity of Canada as exemplified in those Elective Institutions which have so much contributed to our mutual advancement and prosperity. It, however, behoves us to consider well and to reflect calmly upon what the qualifications of a Legislative Councillor ought to be, and that the duties of that Council are. It is or ought to be an honourable Body, in every sense of the word. It should consist of men not famed for party spirit, party or sectional feelings, or prone to aid in factious opposition to the Government of the day; but men who are well known to the community as men of character and long experience in the world, men who can be relied on as much for their honour and independence of demeanour in the Senate as for their ability, and of men too of that stamp whose experience in Legislation, can bring their learning to bear upon those Enactments which come up to them from the popular branch of the Legislature for their deep and solemn consideration. To such men you may safely entrust your interests, and, in my opinion, at least, it would be dangerous to confide in any others. Moreover, the duties of the Executive Council are important. They are a check upon the vague, hasty, imperfect, and exuberant legislation which sometimes emanates from the Lower House; and their deliberations should be conducted with that dignity and cool reflection which in a popular assembly it is next to impossible to maintain. I do not address you as a stranger or as a new man soliciting your suffrages for the distinguished honour to which, by your favour, I aspire. But I address you as an old friend and neighbour, who has lived amongst you continuously for nearly twenty-four years, through good report and evil report, and who was your chosen representative in Parliament for more than eighteen years! And you have, by your requisitions, told me that I and I alone am your choice to represent you in the new Council, that is to be. You know my abilities, humble though they are: you know my experience in Parliament, and you know my character; and upon that knowledge you have been pleased to base your proposition that I become your Representative in that Council. I do not profess to be a Politician—a bigotted Partizan with any set of men—but I do profess to have and ever will maintain the principles of an honest and independent public character, wherever I am placed; and I will yield to no man in liberality of sentiment or action; and I point to my conduct for the last ten or fifteen years as a Member of the Legislature as evidence of the truth of these assertions. In fine, I shall ever consider it my duty to contend for the freedom and rights of all the inhabitants of this noble country, whatsoever may be their nation, creed, or colour. These are my Principles. To my antecedents you are no strangers; and it is most gratifying to receive your assurance that he who has been your friend and neighbour for so long a time, and your representative in Parliament for a longer period than any other man in Canada (save one) ever represented the same constituency, still enjoys your favour and your confidence, and that, "with all his imperfections on his head," you will confer upon him the greatest honour you can bestow—a seat in the first Elective Legislative Council of this Province.

That I shall, through your favour, be triumphantly placed in that high and honourable position I do not for a moment doubt. My visits through the Counties have entirely satisfied my friends as well as myself on that important point; and I pledge myself to serve you honestly, faithfully, independently, and diligently, and according to the best of my abilities and powers. And you shall find in me a strenuous advocate for an enlarged representation based on population at the proper time—for the promotion of Education upon the most extensive and liberal plan—and for the support and progress of all measures (I care little for men), which I may conceive will tend to the happiness and good government of Canada and the prosperity of the noble and enterprising races who inhabit it.

I remain, Gentlemen, as ever,
Your faithful Friend,
JOHN PRINCE.

The Park Farm,
27th August, 1856.

TO THE ELECTORS
OF
The Western Division.

GENTLEMEN:

THE Legislative Council of Canada iginally intended to be an imitation of the British House of Peers, but from various reasons, unnecessary here to mention, the mere nomination of its members by the Crown has failed to secure for it the respect and weight which a branch of the Legislature ought to possess.

It has therefore been deemed expedient to render it elective, so as to secure for it a portion of the popular favor, hitherto accorded to the Legislative Assembly.

This change, when fully carried out, will invest the Council with an importance in some degree similar to that which attaches to the Senate of the neighboring Union, a seat in which is a position of greater importance than the Governorship of a State.

The Elective Council of Canada will however have this superiority over that of the Senate of the United States, that its members, instead of being appointed by local Legislative bodies, often by corrupt combinations and intrigues, will be elected directly to them; they will also represent nearly equal constituencies, instead of the gross inequality in this respect, which is found in the American Senate. Senators from N. York represent a population ten times as great as the same number of Senators from Delaware or California.

When it is considered that a Councillor will represent twice the number of Constituents of a Member of the Assembly, and for twice the length of time, it must be obvious that the selection of a proper person to fill so high an office is of the utmost importance to your interests, and to those of the country at large.

The weak point of all representative institutions is the disposition of the Executive to gain majorities by bribing the representatives of the people, and the facility with which the latter have too often sold themselves for considerations of private advantage.

It is by appeals to private interests, by places and jobs, that party hacks are manufactured, and I can conceive no greater political calamity for a Country than to have a majority of its representatives composed of such venal and selfish politicians. It is under this evil that Canada has long groaned, and is now groaning, and against which every possible precaution should be taken by Constituencies, when called upon to exercise their invaluable privilege of electing representatives to Parliament.

To secure an object so desirable every thing depends on the personal character of the men chosen, and the two leading elements to be sought for in a Candidate are integrity and ability; without the first an able man may exert his abilities against you, and for his own selfish ends, and without the latter, an honest man may become the mere tool of a Ministry, hoodwinked by their plausible sophistries.

Having lived amongst you for twenty-seven years, you can judge from my antecedents, better than I can, whether or not I possess these essential requisites for your representatives; at all events, any mere profession without the guarantee of previous character, should go for nothing.

My political convictions are entirely in favor of liberal measures, and should I be elected, I will give my most strenuous aid, in carrying out the measures of so much importance to the prosperity of the country, such as

Representation by Population, so as to give Upper Canada its proper position in the Legislature.

Common School Education free from Sectarian influence, and the repeal of such acts as grant support to Sectarian Schools now existing.

Opposition to all grants of public monies for Sectarian purposes, and also to all acts giving religious corporations power to hold real estate for the purpose of revenue, irrespective of creed or denomination, and the Retaining the seat of Government in Upper Canada.

If my views on these subjects meet with your approbation, and I should be honored with your confidence and support, I will endeavor, if elected, to serve you faithfully, to the best of my ability, with honesty of purpose, and a single eye to the good of this great Province, and to the special interests of the Division with which I am connected.

I remain, Gentlemen,
Your most obedient
and Faithful Servant,
JAS. DOUGALL.

Crown Lands Department

Toronto, 24th July 1856.

THE undermentioned lots which form a part of the Northern and Southern portions of the Island of St. Joseph, Lake Huron, will be offered at Public Auction, at the office of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, in the City of Toronto, on Monday, the Fifteenth September next, at the hour of noon Upset price two shillings and six pence per acre; one fifth to be paid down at the time of Sale, the remainder by four yearly Instalments with interests on each as it becomes due, or the Patents may issue so soon as the purchase money shall be paid up in full.

The map of the Island may be inspected during business hours, up to the day of Sale.

A considerable portion of the Island of St. Joseph is of a good quality, well timbered, and the soil adapted for Agricultural purposes, and the waters around it abound with excellent fisheries.

The Mining regions will afford a favorable market for the surplus Agricultural produce raised upon the Island, which lies in the course of, and possesses stopping places for the American and Canadian Steamers, proceeding to the Sault St. Marie.

The Grist Mill is situated in the Township of Sandwich, and a portion of the Town Lots and an excellent House and Lot are situate in the Town of Amherstburg; the remaining Town and Villa Lots in the Town of Sandwich, the County Town of Essex and on the beautiful river Detroit. The Wild Lands are situate in different parts of the County of Essex and are very valuable.

The Town Lots are large with fine broad streets, and close to the business part of the Town.

The Great Southern Railway Terminus will be within a very short distance of these Lots.

The Villa Lots have a most beautiful situation, being high and well adapted for gentlemen's residences, having a fine broad avenue laid out, on which they front; and are not surpassed in respect to beauty and position by any in the Province.

There are a greater number of prizes in proportion to the number of tickets to be sold than in any similar scheme yet offered to the public. The drawing will take place under the superintendence of a committee of gentlemen, to be appointed on the day of drawing by the holders of Tickets.

☞ Parties remitting to the subscriber one hundred dollars will receive a package of twenty-eight tickets in return.

" Detroit Tuesdays and Fridays.

These steamers are all new, of the largest class, being about two thousand tons each, commanded and officered throughout by men of large experience and capability, and fitted up and furnished for the convenience of passengers in a style of comfort and luxury, entirely unequalled, and are in all respects considered the most desirable steamers that float upon the waters of the United States.

For the transportation of freight, the line will surpass anything ever before offered to the public, having arrangements with parties between New York and Boston, and all points west of Buffalo to St. Louis, which will enable them to forward merchandise with greater despatch than has ever yet been attained

Shippers of merchandise from the East, should mark packages to the care of C. L. SEYMOUR, Buffalo: merchandize from the West should be to the care of JOHN HOSMER, agent, Detroit.

CATHARTIC PILLS

OPERATE by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action. They remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, and, by restoring their irregular action to health, correct, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first causes of disease. An extensive trial of their virtues, by Professors, Physicians, and Patients, has shown cures of dangerous diseases almost beyond belief, were they not substantiated by persons of such exalted position and character as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Their certificates are published in my American Almanac, which the Agents below named are pleased to furnish free to all inquiring.

Annexed we give Directions for their use in the complaints which they have been found to cure.

FOR COSTIVENESS.—Take one or two Pills, or such quantity as to gently move the bowels. Costiveness is frequently the aggravating cause of PILES, and the cure of one complaint is the cure of both. No person can feel well while under a costive habit of body. Hence it should be, as it can be, promptly relieved.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, which is sometimes the cause of Costiveness, and always uncomfortable, take mild doses—from one to four—to stimulate the stomach and liver into healthy action. They will do it, and the heartburn, bodyburn, and soulburn of dyspepsia will rapidly disappear. When it has gone, don't forget what cured you.

For a FOUL STOMACH, or Morbid Inaction of the Bowels, which produces general depression of the spirits and bad health, take from four to eight Pills at first, and smaller doses afterwards, until activity and strength is restored to the system.

FOR NERVOUSNESS, SICK HEADACHE, NAUSEA, Pain in the Stomach, Back, or Side, take from four to eight pills on going to bed. If they do not operate sufficiently, take more the next day until they do. These complaints will be swept out from the system. Don't wear these and their kindred disorders because your stomach is foul.

FOR SCROFULA, ERYSIPELAS, and all Diseases of the Skin, take the Pills freely and frequently, to keep the bowels open. The eruptions will generally soon begin to diminish and disappear. Many dreadful ulcers and sores have been healed up by the purging and purifying effect of these Pills, and some disgusting diseases which seemed to saturate the whole system have completely yielded to their influence, leaving the sufferer in perfect health. Patients! your duty to society forbids that you should parade yourself around the world covered with pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores, and all or any of the unclean diseases of the skin, because your system wants cleansing.

TO PURIFY THE BLOOD, they are the best medicine ever discovered. They should be taken freely and frequently, and the impurities which sow the seeds of incurable diseases will be swept out of the system like chaff before the wind. By this property they do as much good in preventing sickness as by the remarkable cures which they are making every where.

LIVER COMPLAINT, JAUNDICE, and all Bilious Affections arise from some derangement—either torpidity, congestion, or obstructions of the Liver. Torpidity and congestion vitiate the bile and render it unfit for digestion. This is disastrous to the health, and the constitution is frequently undermined by no other cause. Indigestion is the symptom. Obstruction of the duct which empties the bile into the stomach causes the bile to overflow into the blood. This produces Jaundice, with a long and dangerous train of evils. Costiveness, or alternately costiveness and diarrhœa, prevails. Feverish symptoms, languor, low spirits, weariness, restlessness, and melancholy, with sometimes inability to sleep, and sometimes great drowsiness; sometimes there is severe pain in the side; the skin and the white of the eyes become a greenish yellow; the stomach acid; the bowels sore to the touch; the whole system irritable, with a tendency to fever, which may turn to bilious fever, bilious colic, bilious diarrhœa, dysentery, &c. A medium dose of three or four Pills taken at night, followed by two or three in the morning, and repeated a few days, will remove the cause of all these troubles. It is wicked to suffer such pains when you can cure them for 25 cents.

RHEUMATISM, GOUT, and all Inflammatory Fevers are rapidly cured by the purifying effects of these Pills upon the blood and the stimulus which they afford to the vital principle of Life. For these and all kindred complaints they should be taken in mild doses, to move the bowels gently, but freely.

As a DINNER PILL, this is both agreeable and useful. No Pill can be made more pleasant to take, and certainly none has been made more effectual to the purpose for which a dinner pill is employed.

Importance of Collecting Rain Water.

Much might be done towards lessening the evils and discomforts occasioned by droughts by collecting in tanks,* built underground, the rain water which falls on the roofs of houses and farm buildings. There are few families but what suffer inconveniences, more or less, during the driest portions of the season in Canada, from an insufficient supply of soft water: which is an essential in many of our domestic operations.

Rain water is undoubtedly the best not only for many domestic, but also for most garden and agricultural purposes; and an adequate supply of so essential an agent ought to be a consideration with every owner of a house and the smallest plot of ground It has been cheerfully ascertained by actual experiments, that every hundred cubic inches of air, of which more than half is carbonic acid gas, and the remainder nitrogen and oxygen, in the proportion of 62 of the former to 38 of the latter. Rain water also contains a peculiar substance analagous to the extractive matter and gluto of plants, though differing from them chemically.—Compared with all other water naturally with the gases beneficial to plants, that none other can equal it for their service. Water obtained from ponds and springs invariably contains matters offensive or deleterious to vegetation. The wood water is that called "hard water," containing, as it often does, an excess of salts and magnesia. If pond water be stagnant and loaded with vegetable extract, it is as bad as hard water, for it contains carburetted hydrogen and other matters exceedingly hurtful to vegetables. These last may be somewhat improved by the addition of an ounce of carbonate of ammonia to each gallon. Water, heat and air are the three active principles in inducing the germination of the seed and the after development of the plant. Remove any one of them and their existence ceases. The purer each of those elements are the better. Water containing deleterious ingredients, artificial heat produced by fire beyond certain limits and unaccompanied with a due proportion of humidity, and vitiated air, are all alike inimical to vegetable existence.—Rain water is usually much warmer than that derived from springs and wells, and on that account is much better adapted to the purposes of the farmer gardener in reference to the promotion of the growth of plants; many of which are often injured rather than benefited by the injudicious application of cold spring water.

Strawberry.

The plants set this spring will bear very little fruit, and the whole management should be in reference to the next year's crop. The clipping of the runners will concentrate the energies of the plant upon making roots, and forming flower-buds for the next year. If allowed to run, a multitude of young plants will be formed, and all the strength of the parent plant will be drawn off to these. We noticed in a bed of the McAvoy's Superior, which we left for forming new plants were entirely exhausted by the effort, and did not survive the winter. Many pursue this course with their bearing beds, thinking it a trouble to put up the young plants, and form new rows in the spring, than to keep them carefully clipped. But this is a slovenly method, and does not give so good results.

Removing the runners has two advantages. It gives more room for constant cultivation during the summer, and makes strong plants, with full large heads. A plant thus treated sends out its roots in all directions, and will take complete possession of a cube of earth two feet upon each side of it, if it finds it unoccupied with other plants. In the second spring, there will be a compact head of leaves and flower-stalks, and the fruit will be large, and of best quality the variety is capable of producing. The amateur will find much more satisfaction in cultivating them by this method, than by the more common and more exhausting one of leaving the runners to take possession of the ground, and to struggle with the weeds.

During the second season, when the plants are expected to bear, they should be watered abundantly, with weak, liquid manure. This is particularly important after the berries have set, and before they reach the maturity. After they begin to ripen they should be watered less frequently.—Am. Agri.

To Clean the Face of Soft Mahogany, or other Porous Wood.—After scraping and sand-papering in the usual manner, take a sponge and well wet the surface to raise the grain; then take a piece of fine pumice stone, free from stoney particles, and cut the way of the fibres; by this is meant in the direction of the grain, keeping it moist with water; let the work dry; then if you wet it again, you will find the grain much smoother, and it will not raise so much: repeat the process, and you will find the surface perfectly smooth, and the texture of the wood much hardened; by this means, common soft Honduras mahogany will have a face equal to fine Hispaniola.—If this does not succeed to your satisfaction, you may improve the surface, by using the pumice stone with cold drawn linseed oil, in the same manner as you proceed with water; this will be found to put a most beautiful, as well as durable face to your work, which may then be polished or varnished.

Colza.—The introduction of Colza, as an oil producing plant is being agitated among some agriculturists at the East. It is said that the increasing consumption of oils of all kinds, and the great rise in their price, render it desirable that rape and colza should be tried as plants from which large profits may be reaped, both for their oil and use in feeding and fattening stock.

Light American plows have superseded the heavy Scotch plows in Malta. They were introduced recently by the Governor, Sir Wm. Reid, formerly of Bermuda.

Loaf Cake.—One pint of bread sponge, one cup of sugar, one of butter, three eggs, one tablespoon of saleratus; spice to the taste. Mix thoroughly, but not very stiff, and bake when light. It is much improved by adding raisins.

A man in Kentucky was so enormously big, that when he died it took two clergymen and a boy to preach his funeral sermon.

The Illustrated Horticulturist,
AND JOURNAL OF SUBURBAN ART.

An elegantly illustrated Monthly Journal, containing seventy-two large royal octavo pages, devoted to the Rural Arts and the advancement of the Science of Horticulture in the United States.

The want of such a magazine has long been experienced. The growing interest with which the rising generation view the science of Horticulture, renders such a Journal as "The Illustrated Horticulturist" imperatively necessary to the progress of Rural affairs.

Rural Architecture forms one of the principal features; each number contains from two to four engravings of model cottages, from designs by eminent and skilful architects. Space is also assigned to the tasteful art of Landsaape Gardening, engraved plans of gardens in every style, and adapted to the peculiar wants of the various orders of architecture, beautifies the work.

To Nurserymen, Amateur Cultivators, and to all who can boast the sovereignty of a square foot of Gardening Ground, The Illustrated Horticulturist and Journal of Suburban Art will prove an invaluable companion. The extraordinary low price at which it is afforded to the people will in the end really supersede competition, both in regard to typography and editorial ability, must make it the most popular work of the kind in America.

"The Illustrated Horticulturist" is printed on the finest quality of pearl surfaced paper, manufactured expressly. It is issued regularly the first of each month, commencing with July, 1855. The following gentlemen, eminent for their ability in the science of Horticulture, are engaged to conduct the Editorial department: H. P. Knight, James Snowden and D. W. Ray.

Terms: Two Dollars per annum, payable invariably in advance; a liberal discount to the Trade, Postmasters, and getters-up of Clubs.

Advertisements inserted at the rate of Ten Dollars per page.

N.B.— Newspapers inserting the above prospectus and making attention editorially to the same, will be forwarded the Illustrated Horticulturist for one year, a copy containing the advertisement should be sent in all cases to ensure attention.

NEW VOLUME OF THE
AGRICULTURIST

SUBSCRIPTION REDUCED FROM 25 TO 50 PER CENT.

The Canadian Agriculturist

Has now reached the eighth volume, having been established by its present proprietor in 1848, and too well known to the leading farmers of the British Provinces, to need any eulogium from us. The undersigned have made arrangements with the proprietor to publish the work, and probably succeed ing volumes, and have resolved to make important improvements in the work, while at the same time its price will be considerably reduced.

THE AGRICULTURIST

Is published Monthly, on good Paper, each number containing 32 pages, making at the end of the year a handsome volume of 384 pages.

EVERY NUMBER WILL BE
Illustrated with Engravings

Such as Farm Implements, Portraits of Animals, designs of Farm Buildings, New Inventions, &c., &c., relating to the Farmer, and also portraits of some of the most Distinguished Agriculturists.

The Work will be conducted as usual by WILLIAM MACDOUGALL, Esq., who has resumed the practice of Agriculture near this city. The active promoter of the various improvements made by the Agricultural Legislation since 1847, and having also been connected with this Journal from its commencement, he requires no recommendation from us.

PROFESSOR BUCKLAND, of the Toronto University, whose labors and writings in behalf of Canadian Agriculture are known and appreciated throughout the Province, will contribute to its columns as usual.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

Of known ability have also been engaged. Efforts will be made to extend the corres pondence on subjects of a practical kind.

THE AGRICULTURIST IS NOT LIABLE TO POSTAGE.
